For example, in addition to the public laws which I introduced, there are measures of a private nature for which I am responsible. Since I took office, I have introduced over 40 private bills. The majority of them were for the relief of aliens faced with deportation under provisions of the McCarran-Walter Act. Since bills of this type normally take at least 2 years or so to process, I am gratified to be able to report that 12 of these bills have become law, thus granting permanent residence to persons in my district. Moreover, some of the persons who were the beneficiaries of these bills have been granted relief through administrative procedures so that action on their bills was no longer necessary.

The aid given to these aliens is very gratifying. In one case, a woman, 76 years old and in ill health, was allowed to remain in our country, rather than be deported and separated from all of her close relatives. In two cases, foreign-born wives of American servicemen will be able to come to America and join their husbands. Finally, in two other cases, alien children will be permitted to remain in America with their parents.

Other private bills which I introduced involved claims of my constituents against the United States Government. One bill provided for the return of $2,500 which one of my constituents had lent to the Government so that the gold medal honoring Dr. Jonas E. Salk might be minted and presented to the doctor in time to spur this year's March of Dimes campaign. As you will remember, my resolution which passed in the first session and which authorized the medal was approved by the President after Congress adjourned and the appropriation for the medal could not be passed. This constituent was kind enough to lend the money for the medal to the Government and I am happy that his generosity was recognized by the Congress and by the President who signed my bill to repay him. Another of these bills provided for the return of $1,000 to a constituent, whose brother had been ordered deported but who had later been given the right to remain in America permanently. The $1,000 was paid for a bond to give the brother his freedom from confinement pending his deportation. The bond was forfeited when the brother failed to leave the country, even though a bill was then before the Congress for his relief. Since the brother was finally permitted to remain here the forfeiture of the bond was unfair, and I am happy that my bill was approved.

Mr. Speaker, there are still other areas to which I have devoted my attention on behalf of my constituents. I have had a great number of requests to aid families in obtaining visas to reunite husbands with wives and parents with children in this country. In these cases, my aid was sought to overcome the great time delays that are encountered in these situations, delays which cause great strains and in some cases great legal problems. In one such case, I was able to obtain visas for three minor children of a Jewish family; the children were living in Egypt. Time was extremely important, since the eldest child was just under 21 years of age. Had her birthday occurred before the issuance of her visa, she would have been placed under a heavily oversubscribed quota and would have had to wait years for a quota number before she could have joined her family.

I have also received innumerable requests for aid from constituents who desired my aid in solving personal problems. These requests required my intervention with every Federal agency: the Social Security Administration, the Veterans' Administration, the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission, the State Department, the Immigration and Naturalization Service, the Departments of the Army, the Navy and the Air Force, to name but a few.

There were requests from constituents for thousands of Government publications and documents. I filled these requests as quickly as the publications and documents could be obtained.

Finally, there was the mail from constituents. The letters ran into the hundreds each and every week and covered every conceivable item of legislation and every phase of governmental activity. I was happy to be kept advised of the views of my constituents and I answered their letters with all possible speed.

I have proceeded at some length, Mr. Speaker, in order to set forth in detail the activities which have occupied my time as the Representative of the 20th Congressional District of New York. I have previously spread before you my voting record for the 2d session, so that that too would be available for inspection. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that this record of my legislative activities, when combined with my record on major votes, will commend itself to you and to my constituents. I have endeavored to retain the trust and confidence of the kind people who gave me the opportunity to serve in this great legislative body. I hope that my record will strengthen that faith and trust as I seek to return to the judicial life which I left to serve as a Member of Congress.

Housing: The Challenge Is Clear—Shall We Meet It?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LOUIS C. RABAUT

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, we have seen passed in the closing days of Congress the Housing Act of 1956. This measure is a step in the right direction but falls far short of meeting the needs of the American people for low-cost housing. The population of our country is growing by leaps and bounds and the estimated census figures for 10 years hence should make any thinking person realize that this Nation is facing a critical shortage of low-cost dwellings.

I am acutely aware of the housing problem as I look at my own city of Detroit. The Motor City is a perfect example of the changing complexion of the American scene. It is but one of the many metropolitan areas throughout this Nation that must provide living facilities for the employees of local industries. I cannot help but think, as I view the substandard homes that are all too prevalent, that many of my congressional colleagues do not realize the crying need of so many American families for just a little better situation in which to raise children. The growing problem of juvenile delinquency is so intertwined with home environment that the two are inseparable.

Private industry has made a sincere effort to provide the necessary housing, but has not been able to keep pace with growing demand. The financial aspects of home construction virtually exclude the low-income groups from ever owning their own homes. These are the people the Federal Government must assist with the long-term financing that private enterprise is not able to provide. I am not criticizing the home-building industry; I am merely stating that the monetary return from low-income housing is not enough to encourage investment capital.

The public housing bill of 1956, signed by the President on August 7, authorizes the construction of 35,000 public housing units a year for 2 years. I am quite happy that a total of 70,000 units will be built in the next 2 years, but this number falls far short of the required construction if we are to demonstrate to the world that all segments of our society share in the wealth of this great Nation. Legislation was introduced in this Congress to authorize construction of 130,000 units over a 3-year period; unfortunately, this measure was never released by the House Rules Committee and consequently never came before the House for consideration. This is the type of forward-looking legislation that we need to clear up the slums and blighted metropolitan areas. Thirty-three percent of our population is housed in quarters that are not fit for human habitation. At what point will we realize that the money spent on creating an atmosphere in which young Americans can grow up with the minimum requirements for decent living will return a hundredfold in reduction of prison and hospital operating expenses.

Several other facets of the housing problem are worthy of the most careful consideration. I was pleased to note that at least a modest amount of funds were made available this year for home-improvement loans. This will allow many homes now considered substandard because of structural conditions or lack of basic sanitary facilities to be repaired or rebuilt.

Another measure I sincerely regret was not included in the housing bill is special housing for the aged.

What do I mean by special housing for the aged? As we all know, people are living longer than ever before as a result of dietary and medicinal advances. These people are for the most part retired and living on a pension or social security. Being proud and self-respecting, they desire to live an independent, active useful life. Unfortunately, this is not always possible. Financial limitations quite often prevent the average retired persons from enjoying life in their senior years. This is most unjust treatment of those who have worked long and hard raising a family and contributing to the national welfare. Our older citizens are entitled to much more from a grateful country. The Federal Government should lead the way in planning communities in which retired people might gather, if they so desire, to live their remaining years with others who share their interests. I hope the 85th Congress will give sympathetic attention to the problems confronting the retired and soon-to-be-retired in this country.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I feel that it is the duty of Congress to step in where private industry and local communities have been unable to cope with the housing problem and extend a helping hand. We have the potential to take our free way of life and refine it to a point that staggers the imagination. No one needs to go hungry; no one needs be improperly clothed; no one should want for adequate housing. The challenge is clear—shall we meet it?

Republicans Responsible for Success of President Eisenhower's Program in the Senate

OF

HON. ANDREW F. SCHOEPPEL

OF KANSAS

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement by me as chairman of the Senate Republican Campaign Committee.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

As chairman of the Senate Campaign Committee I want to show which party supported President Eisenhower in the Senate during the past 4 years. This can only be done by examining all rollcall votes in both the 83d and 84th Congresses. I have prepared a complete analysis which I am inserting in the RECORD so that the American people may have the facts.

The 83d Congress was under the control of the Republican Party; the 84th Congress was under the control of the Democratic Party. The votes in these two Congresses covering a period of 4 years are a measure of the support that the two parties have given President Eisenhower.

There were 271 rollcalls in the 83d Congress and 230 rollcalls in the 84th Congress, or a total of 501 rollcalls. Every rollcall has been reviewed and accounted for so that the record will be complete and all-inclusive.

After eliminating procedural votes, as well as issues which were clearly not a part of the President's program, I find that there were 220 rollcalls in the 83d Congress and 203 rollcalls in the 84th Congress which represented a clear test of support for President Eisenhower. In the 83d Congress on this entire group of issues, the Republican Members cast 7,525 votes in support of President Eisenhower's program or 64.7 percent of the total. The Democrats cast 4,114 votes, or 35.3 percent of the total.

In the 84th Congress when the Democrats were in control of the Congress, the Republicans cast 6,682 votes or 59.4 percent of the votes cast for President Eisenhower, and the Democrats cast 4,575 votes or 40.6 percent of the votes for his program. Over the 4-year period on these 423 issues, Republicans cast 14,207 votes for President Eisenhower's program or 62.1 percent of the total. The Democrats cast 8,689 votes or 37.9 percent of the total.

An examination of the votes cast in opposition to President Eisenhower's program shows a sharp party division. During the 83d Congress, Republicans cast only 1,630 votes in opposition to the President's program or 25.7 percent of the total. Democrats cast 4,701 votes or 74.3 percent of the total. During the 84th Congress once again we find Republicans casting only 1,715 votes in opposition to President Eisenhower's program or 29.7 percent of the total opposition votes with the Democrats casting 4,053 or 70.3 percent of the opposition votes. Over the 4-year period, the Republicans cast only 3,345 votes in opposition to President Eisenhower's program or 27.6 percent of the total opposition votes. The Democrats cast 8,754 or 72.4 percent of the opposition votes.

The 423 rollcalls included issues which were passed unanimously such as the ratification of treaties and issues which had bipartisan support where a majority of both parties voted in support of the President.

An examination of all issues which were not passed with bipartisan support is even more revealing. During the 83d Congress there were 126 votes in this category. Republicans cast 4,203 votes in support of President Eisenhower or 75.6 percent of all supporting votes. The Democrats cast 1,356 votes or only 24.4 percent of the total. When we examine the opposition votes, the Democrats cast 3,749 votes in opposition to the program or 77.2 percent of the total. The Republicans cast only 1,109 such votes or 22.8 percent of the total.

There is a remarkable consistency in the statistics between the 83d and 84th Congresses. During the 84th Congress 102 issues fell into this group. On these issues Republicans cast 3,106 votes in support of President Eisenhower or 76 percent of the total support votes. The Democrats cast 979 votes or only 24 percent of the total support votes. An examination of the opposition votes shows that the Democrats cast 3,405 votes or 73.7 percent of the total. The Republicans cast only 1,214 votes or 26.3 percent of the total. Over the 4-year period there were 228 rollcalls which were not adopted with full bipartisan support. Of all the votes cast in support of the President's program on these rollcalls, 75.8 percent were cast by Republicans and only 24.2 percent by Democrats. Of all opposition votes, 75.5 percent were cast by Democrats and only 24.5 percent by Republicans.

At this point I shall include a table which shows the position of the two parties in the two Congresses in their support of President Eisenhower:

All Eisenhower rollcalls

Congress	Number of votes	Eisenhower position				Opposed to Eisenhower position
		Republicans		Democrats		Democrats		Republicans
		Votes cast	Percent	Votes cast	Percent	Votes cast	Percent	Votes cast	Percent
83d	220	7,525	64.7	4,114	35.3	4,701	74.3	1,630	25.7
84th	203	6,682	59.4	4,575	40.6	4,053	70.3	1,715	29.7
Total	423	14,207	62.1	8,689	37.9	8,754	72.4	3,345	27.6

Immediately following is a tabulation showing the support accorded President Eisenhower on all rollcalls where a majority of the two parties was not in accord with the President's program. The 228 votes include 188 votes where a majority of the Republicans supported the President and a majority of the Democrats voted in opposition to him. It also includes the 40 votes where a majority of the Republicans voted in opposition to President Eisenhower.

Eisenhower rollcalls on issues without bipartisan Senate support

Congress	Number of votes	Eisenhower position				Opposed to Eisenhower position
		Republicans		Democrats		Democrats		Republicans
		Votes cast	Percent	Votes cast	Percent	Votes cast	Percent	Votes cast	Percent
83d	126	4,203	75.6	1,356	24.4	3,749	77.2	1,109	22.8
84th	102	3,106	76.0	979	24.0	3,405	73.7	1,214	26.3
Total	228	7,309	75.8	2,335	24.2	7,154	75.5	2,323	24.5

I have further subdivided the rollcalls in each Congress into 6 groups. Group 1 includes issues not included in the President's program which were adopted on a bipartisan basis. This group includes votes on Senate procedure.

Group 2 includes votes on issues which were not included in the President's program where the two parties were divided. The vote on the Niagara power development is an example of an issue in this category.

Group 3 includes issues which were included in the President's program and were adopted with no recorded opposition. The ratification of numerous treaties is included in group 3.

Group 4 includes issues where a majority of both parties voted in support of President Eisenhower's program. It is interesting in this connection that during the 84th Congress 69 rollcalls are included in this group and they account for 30 percent of all 84th Congress Senate rollcalls. While the majority of both parties supported the President's position on each rollcall, I find that 50.5 percent of the votes cast in favor of the President's program were cast by Republicans and 49.5 percent by Democrats. On this group of issues, the Democrats contributed 56.4 percent of all the votes cast in opposition to the President and the Republicans only 43.6 percent.

Group 5 includes those issues on which a majority of the Republicans voting were recorded in opposition to President Eisenhower's program. There were 20 such rollcalls in both the 83d and 84th Congresses. The vote to restrict mutual security aid for Yugoslavia is an example of the type of issue included in this category. It is important to note that there were only 40 rollcalls included in this group during the 2 Congresses. They represented less than 8 percent of all Senate rollcalls.

Group 6 includes all issues where a majority of the Republican Senators voted to support President Eisenhower's program and were opposed by a majority of the Democratic Senators. On this group of issues, the Republicans supplied 81.7 percent of all the votes cast in support of President Eisenhower and the Democrats only 18.3 percent during the 84th Congress. Conversely, the Democrats supplied 82.2 percent of the votes recorded in opposition to President Eisenhower and the Republicans only 17.8 percent.

In reviewing this record it must be remembered that many items were never reported to the Senate during the last 2 years as the Democratic Party was in control of all the committees and decided which issues would receive consideration as well as the form in which they were reported.

I believe that this complete analysis of the votes cast over the past 4 years conclusively shows why President Eisenhower needs a Republican 85th Congress. I am inserting the entire tabulation in the RECORD at this point.

SUMMARY OF ANALYSIS OF SENATE ROLLCALLS, 83D CONGRESS

This study reviews all of the Senate rollcalls during the 83d Congress. Two hundred seventy-one rollcalls were taken. They have been placed into six groups as summarized below:

Groups 1 and 2 include items which were not included in the President's program. The 2 groups together include 51 rollcalls, or 19 percent of the total.

The 84th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROBERT B. CHIPERFIELD

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, as the 84th Congress draws to a close I would like to make an informal report to the more than 325,000 people I represent from the 19th Illinois Congressional District.

To my mind the most important thing to all of us is the fact that America is at peace. Since President Eisenhower concluded the tragic war in Korea, no Americans have been in combat duty any place in the world. Our leadership has been firm. The President has not jumped from one crisis to another, but has consistently demonstrated to the world our sincere desire for peace by positive and constructive acts. While there are many trouble spots, we are now in the fourth year of a world at peace, and tense though it might be, these years have given us a prayerfully welcome respite from the slaughter and destruction of major wars.

Along with peace has come the greatest prosperity in our Nation's history and the transition from war to peace has not brought about the depression predicted by advocates of "gloom and doom." On the contrary, the Nation, industry, and labor enjoy the highest and best level of prosperity in our history.

The American people have more houses, more automobiles, and more of the better things of life than ever before. This has been accomplished without the stimulation of a war economy.

FARM PROGRAM

The welfare of the American farmer was one of the most seriously considered problems of this Congress. After much deliberation notable changes were made in the law and governmental policies relating to agriculture. Farmers caught in the squeeze between falling farm prices and rising costs in production have not shared in the general booming prosperity of other industry and labor. A number of factors contributed to this situation. Tremendous stores of supported commodities continued over production of surplus crops which was a factor in reducing the farmers' gross income. At the same time his net income was reduced because of high operating costs.

Congress adopted legislation to strike directly at these problems. The principal part of the new program is the soil bank law. I sponsored such a bill. Other legislation and administrative actions deal with disposal and marketing problems. The administration is selling more and more agricultural commodities to foreign countries and I introduced legislation that has resulted in millions of dollars of farm products being disposed of through world markets. Still more farm products are being consumed through our expanded school lunch program and relief programs.

In an effort to bring farm prices back in line with operating costs the President increased the support levels on most of the basic crops and Congress raised the parity price on feed grains and dairy products. In recent months hog prices have shown a strong recovery from last year's slump and this means much to Henry County, Ill., which is the undisputed hog capital of the world. The cattle market too has been firm even though it has never recovered from the rollback ordered in 1952 by former President Truman. I believe the agriculture program enacted by the 84th Congress is constructive and forward looking.

To further relieve the economic plight of the farmer, Congress enacted legislation to exempt them from paying Federal excise taxes on gasoline and other special fuels used in the operation of their farm. This should mean an over-all annual tax relief to the farmers of about $60 million.

SOCIAL PROGRESS

At the same time we continue to make giant steps in social progress. Our social-security system has been improved and strengthened. The new law lowers the retirement age for women to 62 years, and provides benefits for totally and permanently disabled workers at age 50, continues benefits for physically disabled and mentally retarded children over 18 years, increases grants for public assistance to the needy aged, blind and disabled, and extends social-security coverage to many professional groups. This is certainly a significant step forward in meeting the needs of our older citizens.

The 84th Congress made a significant record in enacting programs to provide long-range health and research work to conquer disease and alleviate suffering. Funds were appropriated for intensive work in medical research in the fields of mental health, heart, cancer, arthritis, neurology, and blindness as well as dental research.

FEDERAL HIGHWAY PROGRAM

One of the major accomplishments of this session of Congress was passage of a record $32.9 billion highway-construction program—which, of course, is the biggest such undertaking in our Nation's history. This legislation authorizes construction of 41,000 miles of super interstate highways which by 1969 will link most State capitals and other major cities from coast to coast. This road program will not only facilitate traffic and commerce but in case of a national emergency will also speed military communication. Federal funds, under the terms of this bill, will be allocated to the States. This giant bill should take care of the great overall need for the improvement of roads of our country and particularly improve rural, farm-to-market routes, city streets as well as interstate highways. There has been little argument over the need for sound highway legislation because of our year-to-year expanding population, and construction of adequate highways has not kept pace.

This giant road bill is another of the major accomplishments of the 84th Congress.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Recently I was appointed vice chairman of the investigating committee authorized by a resolution adopted by my Foreign Affairs Committee, to reexamine, reevaluate, and reappraise the entire foreign-aid program. It is my firm belief that the entire program should be overhauled and I believe this investigation is timely. In many instances requests are too large and cannot be justified. When the mutual-security bill came up in the House I voted to cut the funds requested by over $1.1 billion.

I want to assure all those I represent that I will do everything I can to bring about a thorough review of this program so we will know in what direction we are going and if the continuation of the program is for the best interests of the United States.

I might add that 82 percent of all the money appropriated is spent right here in the United States and the remaining American dollars must eventually be spent in this country.

I have the distinct honor of representing what is often referred to as the farm-equipment capital of the world. A close examination of purchases made under foreign-aid programs discloses that the farm-equipment industry and allied manufacturers in this area benefited to a large extent under these programs. In the period May 1949 through December 1955, the International Cooperation Administration and its predecessor agencies have financed orders from the following companies in the amounts shown:

J. I. Case	$11,330,000
John Deere	15,248,000
International Harvester	75,454,000
Minneapolis-Moline	1,448,000
Caterpillar	62,714,000
R. G. LeTourneau	7,547,000
Butler Manufacturing Co	2,200,000
Clearing Machine Corp	6,648,000
Rockford Machine Tool	638,000

REPRESENTING MY CONSTITUENTS

During my 18 years in the House of Representatives I have conscientiously endeavored to serve the needs of all the people I represent. So far as legislation is concerned, I have diligently tried to support measures which would truly benefit the greater number of our people and which would serve the public interest. I feel, as an elected Representative, it is my duty to carefully consider all viewpoints. This I have tried to do to the very best of my ability before making my final decision on how my votes would be cast. I have consistently voted for what I thought was for the best interests of my constituents.

SERVICE TO CONSTITUENTS

It has been my privilege to personally serve the people of my district who have contacted me about particular problems involving some phase of Government. I have tried to give this service promptly, courteously, efficiently, and fairly to all who have sought my help. Such services range from routine request for Government publications to complicated problems involving veterans' benefits, tax problems, social security and railroad retirement cases, immigration problems, Government contracts, and many other types of services to citizens in their relationships with their Government.

HOME FRONT

Much activity should develop in the 19th Congressional District in the ensuing months. Ground has been broken for the new Federal building in Rock Island where the post office will be quartered as well as the United States court. This project will have an overall cost estimated at $2 million and is the first project to be constructed under the lease-purchase program of the Government. It involves no direct appropriation of Federal funds. The building will be financed entirely by private capital and the Government will acquire title upon completion of the purchase installments.

A bill which I introduced was recently signed by the President authorizing Rock Island to proceed with the building of new approaches to the Centennial Bridge. This will ultimately mean much toward alleviating bad traffic conditions that now exist there.

It is hopeful legislation can be completed next year for turning over the Hennepin Canal to the State for recreational purposes.

Clearing and snagging work is also to be done on Mill Creek and South Slough. Forty thousand dollars has been allocated to cover engineering planning work for flood control at Campbell's Island; and $28,000 for dredging a channel in Lake Potter for a boat harbor for recreational boating.

There is no question but what there will be much activity as a result of all this construction work.

Three Army Reserve training centers have been allocated for the 19th District and will be located in Rock Island, Galesburg, and Canton.

We also have had the distinct honor of a Federal judge appointed from Fulton County—Hon. Fred Mercer. He will be the first to hold court in the new quarters when they are completed in Rock Island.

A DIVIDED GOVERNMENT

We are all fully aware of the high degree of confidence placed in President Eisenhower. The American people sense his high purpose and his desire to be helpful to our people in all walks of life. They like what he has done in the 4 years he has served as our Chief Executive. They are in favor of what he seeks to do. But too often the people overlook the fact that it is difficult for the President to have enacted into law the legislation he proposes unless he has a Congress with the majority of his own party.

Anyone who believes in President Eisenhower and intends to support him should give him a Congress that will help him. It is not fair nor reasonable to elect him and then withhold a friendly Congress. To do so is only to handicap him from doing the very things for which he was elected.

Furthermore in these uncertain times when questions of great international importance are continually arising there should be assured unity of action between the President and Congress. With such unity our position is strengthened in world affairs. Therefore, it is to our own national interest and welfare, both from a domestic as well as foreign standpoint to have a Congress in full accord with our President. Our national welfare can best be promoted at this time by reelecting President Eisenhower and giving him a Republican Congress.

Some Comments on the Differences Between the Two Parties

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HERMAN P. EBERHARTER
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, as the 84th Congress prepares to adjourn and the battle lines take shape for a fateful election on November 6—an election in which every American will have a high personal stake—I should like to call to the attention of the House some facts which I think are worthy of consideration in a political campaign year.

Sometimes visitors from foreign nations, noting the high degree of unity among Americans on foreign policy issues particularly, and noting how the Democratic Congress has been cooperating with a Republican President on international matters, ask us in surprise what is the difference between the political parties. They find it difficult to see the differences, because obviously they do not study our roll call votes on the individual issues but look only at the final results.

Yet, of course, there are very great differences between the two parties, and those differences come to the fore each time the Congress turns its attention to legislation intended to help the vast majority of our people—to help them achieve more of the good things of life and an opportunity for a better life for their children. Let us look at some of these differences as they have come to light in the legislative battles.

When you speak of legislation affecting the people, many voters immediately think of taxes, and the heavy bite which the withholding tax takes out of the pay envelope. Are taxes too high? Everyone tends to say "Yes" to that question. The Republican approach—the GOP solution on the tax issue—has traditionally been to lower taxes for the very wealthy—to provide gigantic windfalls and handouts to big industries—but to fight bitterly against such things as the Democratic plan for raising personal exemptions from their present $600 per person. Raising exemptions is a "must" next step in tax reform—along with closing some of these gaping loopholes which big business and the very wealthy have been able to use to avoid paying their full share to the Federal Treasury. The Republican tax law written by the Eisenhower administration and a Republican Congress in 1954, will go down in history as one of the most flagrant instances of "class legislation" ever enacted—legislation to aid the wealthy.

A TAX BONANZA FOR BIG INDUSTRIES

The new depreciation "gimmick," for instance—written into the 1954 law over my vigorous objections and over the bitter opposition of all of the other Democrats who serve with me on the House Committee on Ways and Means—has meant, and will continue to mean, literally billions in additional tax deductions for business and industry for years to come. I do not think we can ever fully catch up with that hole in the dike—a hole through which literally billions in profits have been able to escape free from taxation.

I am sure every American family would be overwhelmed if it were handed some similar giveaway on its tax debt, in proportion. Of course, if that were done, it could very well mean insufficient revenues for the Federal Government with which to do the things which have to be done to keep our country free, to keep it solvent.

That gives you an idea, however, of the extent of the special tax treatment—the privileged tax sanctuary—which big industries have received as a result of the Republican tax law of 1954—the Eisenhower law. The average taxpayer would have to search very hard, indeed, not only for any comparable favors in that tax law, but for any favors at all. Some one said at the time the bill was up in the Congress in 1954 that if an average family had a run of really tough enough luck—extremely high medical bills, for instance—it woud benefit from the new law. But that was about the only way the average family could benefit from this GOP bill.

EXTREMES UNDER THE EISENHOWER ADMINISTRATION

Under the Eisenhower administration, and under the Republicans, the big industries got their depreciation bonanza in the tax laws and did very well for themselves as a result; the banks reaped the benefits of a deliberate administration "hard money" policy which raised all interest rates, and thus made billions more for the banks and bankers; the mortgage companies got their windfalls through higher interest rates put into effect by this administration on FHA and GI mortgages—forcing every veteran and home buyer to pay more for the home he purchased for his family.

and more each month to keep it; the giant monopolies in our industrial system got special favored treatment on Government contracts.

These have been some of the outstanding "achievements" during the 3½ years of the Eisenhower administration. On the other hand, small business has been forced more and more to the wall, with bankruptcies hitting record levels under this administration. Think of that! And while food prices went up to the consumer, farm prices went way down, and the farmers took the same licking they did under all the previous Republican administrations going all the way back to 1912.

SHADOWBOXING WITH RECESSION

Mr. Speaker, we have been lucky—mighty lucky—that the policies of the administration these past 3½ years in the economic sphere have not caused us anything even more serious than a very serious recession in 1953–54 which had the Pittsburgh area on the "distress" list for many, many months. While this recession was gathering momentum, and men were being thrown out of work by the millions, the Eisenhower administration was telling us each day that we just imagined there was a recession—they said everything was booming. It was hard to believe—particularly since all we had to do was look around us and see how many families depended on surplus food in order to keep going. But the administration shadowboxed with the recession, and—just as Herbert Hoover did in 1929–32—just sat and waited for things to improve. We were lucky—mighty lucky—that it did not get worse.

TO THE BRINK OF WAR

We have also been lucky—mighty lucky—that the "brink of war" policies of Eisenhower and Dulles have not destroyed the unity of the free world in our great alliance against communism. This alliance, formed under Harry S. Truman, stopped Communist expansionism in its tracks, finally forcing the Russians to try new tactics such as they are now engaged in. But in the meantime, the Republican foreign policy strategists seem to have deliberately confused and horrified our allies so often that we have inspired more and more neutralism among them—and fear that irresponsibility in our State Department high command might not only get us to the brink, but push us into the abyss.

In this connection, also, we have been lucky—mighty lucky—that the President's vague familiarity with the actions taken in his name by countless officials in his administration has not led to complete and utter administrative chaos. After all, in one great area of governmental activity after another, it was impossible for Congress to determine just who did speak for the Eisenhower administration or who did exercise the responsibility and direction which the Constitution places in the President's own hands.

"CHAIN OF COMMAND" THEORY INADEQUATE

This is not meant in criticism of the President for having been ill, Mr. Speaker, for illness can and does befall all of us at one time or another. I am referring instead to the whole pattern of the Eisenhower administration's concept of Government since the Republicans took office in 1953—the concept of the "chain of command" in which underlings take major steps on their own initiative, without even consulting the President. If things go all right, the Republicans ascribe the credit to the President. If they go all wrong, as often happens, then it is supposed to be the fault of some hapless bureaucrat down the line.

The President encouraged this concept upon taking office—it was the military concept which he knew so well. But it does not work in civil administration of a vast and complex nation such as ours. Policy must come from the top. The big decisions must be made at the top. These things—things on which our Nation's safety and future rest—cannot be left to lower echelon officials assuming vast powers on their own initiative and with limited knowledge of the overall situation. Harry Truman had on his desk a slogan "The buck stops here." He never passed it to others down the line. We do not elect the bureaucrats; we elect a President to direct them. He must be the boss.

I have never been one to attack Mr. Eisenhower on personal grounds and I never intend to. He is a decent man—a fine man. But he is less than successful as a President—that is obvious.

PRIDE IN DEMOCRATIC RECORD

Mr. Speaker, as we come to the end of this session of Congress, and of the 84th Congress, and look to the elections in November, we on the Democratic side of the aisle can take real pride, I believe, in our party's performance as a responsible party—a party of constructive criticism and affirmative solutions, a party which believes in legislating for the workingman and the average family, for the small businessman as well as the giant corporations, for the professional man, the teacher, the minister, the rank-and-file of citizens who day-in and day-out work hard at helping to make this a better world.

We have avoided obstructionism in this period when the political leadership of the Nation has been divided between a Republican President and a Democratic Congress. We have supported the President more effectively than his own party followers in the Congress have done on many major issues, and on all foreign policy issues involving the Nation's safety and security.

HOUSING, CIVIL RIGHTS FAILURES

But we have been obstructed, in that time after time the Republicans—including the Republican President—have blocked us from doing vital things in behalf of all of the people.

On housing legislation, we have had to take it or leave it on public housing—the Republicans even being willing to let Congress adjourn with no housing legislation unless we gave in on public housing on this measly 35,000 unit maximum set by Eisenhower. Obviously, he has never seen the successful housing projects in Pittsburgh, and seen how they have helped make possible the rejuvenation of our city. The Eisenhower housing record is a disgrace.

The Eisenhower administration killed public housing when it first took office. Furthermore, it appointed as the administrator of the housing agency, a Republican former Congressman who had been one of the leading bitter-end opponents of all public housing. Between the administration and the Republicans in strategic committee assignments in the House, housing legislation has been kicked around and beaten down time after time. It will take a Democrat administration once again to provide the kind of housing policies we need in this country.

The glaring failure of the administration on housing has been matched, I might add, on the question of enacting needed civil rights legislation. After waiting 3½ years to propose anything at all on this front, the administration sent up a draft of a weak bill, and then sat by and watched Republicans join with southern Democrats to torpedo the whole thing. This whole maneuver was so transparent anyone could see through it. There was none of the drive, none of the sincere effort, which characterized President Truman's efforts in this field.

GREAT DEMOCRATIC VICTORY ON SOCIAL SECURITY

On the other hand, there was nothing in the nature of a failure in the final results of the new social security bill which we have just passed. This represents perhaps the outstanding achievement among many achievements by the Democratic 84th Congress. The highway bill which will make possible a vast new network of interstate boulevards may do much to remake the face of America, the physical appearance of our countryside, but the social security bill will have a much greater effect upon our people and upon their future happiness.

We have done a truly great thing in the social security bill in extending coverage to virtually all groups except medical doctors—who have objected to being covered—and in establishing for the first time the principle of paying retirement benefits to persons before the age of 65. Disabled workers will be able to collect their social security benefits in full after reaching the age of 50, instead of sitting around and waiting for 15 years. This takes effect next year. Widows will be able to begin receiving full survivorship benefits at age 62, in cases where they no longer have minor children. Up to now they have had to wait until 65 to collect these benefits once the children attained the age of 18.

Workingwomen will be able to retire at any time between 62 and 65, although I am not at all satisfied with the compromise forced upon us by the Senate on this, requiring a penalty to be assessed for each month these retirement benefits are collected before reaching 65. The survivorship benefits for widows at 62 and the benefits for workingwomen retiring before 65 go into effect November of this year.

The Eisenhower administration fought these changes; the Democrats in Congress put them through anyway. A Democratic administration would have led the way for these improvements, rather than trying to block them.

DEMOCRATS HAVE WORKED FOR ALL GROUPS

After nearly 4 years of a Republican administration, I think we can look back and honestly say that the Truman administration record looks better and better in all respects day by day; it looks positively dazzling in comparison from the standpoint of serving all of the people rather than the few. And the Roosevelt administrations show up like shining beacons of imagination and forthright action when compared to this Republican record of inaction and timidity. Just imagine Roosevelt attacking the depression the way Eisenhower "attacked" the 1953–54 recession; that is, by sitting and waiting for it to go away.

For me, there is deep satisfaction in being a member of the political party which for more than 20 years has promoted continuous progress in social security over bitter Republican obstructionism and opposition.

There is deep satisfaction in remembering how our party had the courage and imagination to launch the great housing and redevelopment programs of the past 20 years which, as I said, have helped to remake the face of Pittsburgh and the looks of the Golden Triangle.

There is deep satisfaction and genuine pride in recalling how our Demoratic Party developed the great flood-control projects which have made Pittsburgh safe—freed us from the specter of sudden disaster and tragic deaths from the rampaging rivers which meet at the point.

MOVING FORWARD TO A BETTER TOMORROW

I am proud to have had a part in the Congresses which have passed these and hundreds of other great Democratic programs to benefit all the people. I look forward to the 85th Congress next year, and to inaugurating a Democratic President to work with a Democratic Congress in furthering the cause of freedom and democracy—in expanding the frontiers of our economy to assure more of the good things of life for all of our people. The concept of full employment is our constant goal. Full employment does not come about merely by wishing for it—full employment must be worked for affirmatively through effective programs of government, in cooperation with industry and labor. As one of the original sponsors of the Full Employment Act of 1946, I believe this law holds within its provisions the key to our future economic development—if we have in the White House a President willing to use the tools this great law provides.

The Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker, has blazed a brilliant trail toward a great future for our country. With God's help, America will move ever forward to a better tomorrow, with true brotherhood among men, and justice, dignity, contentment for all.

A Report to the People of the Sixth Congressional District of Ohio

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES G. POLK

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. POLK. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include a report to the folks of the Sixth Congressional District of Ohio on my voting record for the 1st and 2d sessions of the 84th Congress. This report includes only those questions and issues upon which there was a rollcall vote in the House of Representatives. This information is not generally available to the people of my district and I believe it should be made available to every citizen. It has been my policy by means of public opinion questionnaires to give the people I represent an opportunity to express their views on questions and issues of national interest, and I have endeavored to carry out what appeared to be their wishes in voting on bills, resolutions, and motions that were considered in the House of Representatives.

During the 1st session of the 84th Congress, the following are some of the more important bills and resolutions which I supported and for which I voted "yea."

January 25, 1955: House Joint Resolution 159, a joint resolution authorizing the President to employ the Armed Forces of the United States for protecting the security of Formosa, the Pescadores, and related positions and territories of that area. On passage. Passed 410 to 3.

January 27, 1955: H. R. 587, a bill to provide that persons serving in the Armed Forces on January 31, 1955, may continue to accrue educational benefits under the Veterans' Readjustment Assistance Act of 1952. On passage. Passed 366 to 0.

February 8, 1955: H. R. 3005, to further amend the Universal Military Training and Service Act by extending the authority to induct certain individuals, and to extend the benefits under the Dependents Assistance Act to July 1, 1959. On passage. Passed 394 to 4.

February 18, 1955: H. R. 1, to extend the authority of the President to enter into trade agreements under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended. On passage. Passed 295 to 110.

February 25, 1955: H. R. 4259, to provide a 1-year extension of the existing corporate normal-tax rate and of certain existing excise-tax rates, and to provide a $20 credit against the individual income tax for each personal exemption. On passage. Passed 242 to 175.

March 10, 1955: H. R. 4720, to provide incentives for members of the uniformed services by increasing certain pay and allowances. On passage. Passed 399 to 1.

March 18, 1955: H. R. 4903, a bill making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1955. On Preston amendment providing $4 million for technical-assistance programs under the United Nations. Passed 175 to 107.

March 21, 1955: H. R. 4951, a bill directing a redetermination of the national marketing quota for burley tobacco for the 1955–56 marketing year. On motion to suspend rules and pass. Failed. Two-thirds required. Yeas 260, nays 152.

March 22, 1955: House Resolution 170, a resolution to declare that the House of Representatives does not favor sale of the facilities as recommended in the report of the Rubber Producing Facilities Disposal Commission submitted to the Congress on January 24, 1955. Failed. Yeas 132, nays 283.

March 23, 1955: House Resolution 171, a resolution to disapprove proposed sale to Shell Oil Co. of certain synthetic rubber facilities as recommended by the Rubber Producing Facilities Disposal Commission report. On agreeing to resolution. Failed. Yeas 137, nays 276.

March 30, 1955: H. R. 4259, to provide a 1-year extension of the existing corporate normal-tax rate and of certain existing excise-tax rates, and to provide a $20 credit against the individual income tax for each personal exemption. Conference report on adoption, 387 to 8.

April 20, 1955: H. R. 4644, to increase the rates of basic salary of postmasters, officers, supervisors, and employees in the postal field service, to eliminate certain salary inequities. On Moss amendment to provide 8.2 percent increase, yeas 224 to 189 nays. On passage. Passed 324 to 85.

April 21, 1955: H. R. 4393, to provide for the construction and conversion of certain modern naval vessels. On passage. Passed 373 to 3.

May 5, 1955: H. R. 12, to amend the Agricultural Act of 1949, as amended, by restoring 90 percent mandatory price supports for basic commodities. On passage. Passed 206 to 201.

May 9, 1955: S. 1, to increase the rates of basic compensation of officers and employees in the field service of the Post Office Department. Conference report on adoption, 328 to 66.

May 12, 1955: H. R. 6042, a bill making appropriations for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1956. On passage. Passed 384 to 0.

May 23, 1955: S. 727, an act to adjust the salaries of the judges of the Municipal Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, the Municipal Court for the District of Columbia, the Juvenile Court of the District of Columbia, and the District of Columbia Tax Court. On passage. Passed 283 to 33.

May 25, 1955: H. R. 2851, to make agricultural commodities owned by the Commodity Credit Corporation available to persons in need in areas of acute distress. On passage. Passed 344 to 1.

June 7, 1955: S. 2061, an act to increase the rates of basic compensation of officers and employees in the field service of the Post Office Department. On motion to suspend rules and pass. Two-thirds required. Yeas 410, nays 1.

June 8, 1955: H. R. 5923, to authorize certain sums to be appropriated immediately for the completion of the construction of the Inter-American Highway. On passage. Passed 353 to 13.

July 13, 1955: H. R. 6766, a bill making appropriations for the Atomic Energy Commission, the Tennessee Valley Authority, certain agencies of the Department of the Interior, and civil functions administered by the Department of the Army, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1956. Conference report, on adoption. Adopted 316 to 92.

July 13, 1955: House Resolution 295, a rule providing for the consideration of

H. R. 7089, a bill to provide benefits for the survivors of servicemen and veterans. On agreeing to rule, yeas 376, nays 24.

July 18, 1955: H. R. 7225, to amend title II of the Social Security Act to provide disability insurance benefits for certain disabled individuals who have attained age 50, to reduce to age 62 the age on the basis of which benefits are payable to certain women, to provide for continuation of child's insurance benefits for children who are disabled before attaining age 18, to extend coverage, and for other purposes. On motion to suspend rules and pass. Two-thirds required. Yeas 372, nays 31.

July 20, 1955: H. R. 7214, to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act to make the minimum wage $1 an hour effective March 1, 1956. On passage. Passed 362 to 54.

July 26, 1955: House Resolution 314, a rule providing for the consideration of H. R. 7474, a bill to amend the Federal Aid Road Act and to authorize appropriations for continuing the construction of highways. On agreeing to resolution. Passed, yeas 274, nays 129.

July 27, 1955. H. R. 7474, a bill to amend the Federal Aid Road Act and to authorize appropriations for continuing the construction of highways. On passage. Failed, yeas 123, nays 292.

July 28, 1955. H. R. 6645, to amend the Natural Gas Act, as amended. On motion to recommit. Failed, yeas 203, nays 210.

July 29, 1955: S. 2126, an act to extend and clarify laws relating to the provision and improvement of housing, the elimination and prevention of slums, the conservation and development of urban communities, the financing of vitally needed public works. On passage. Passed 396 to 3.

August 1, 1955. House Resolution 299, a resolution providing further expenses for the Select Committee on Small Business. On passage. Passed 231 to 134.

I was paired for the following bills:

June 15, 1955: House Resolution 210, a resolution authorizing the Committee on Banking and Currency to conduct studies and investigations, and to make inquiries relating to the Federal Open Market Committee. On agreeing to resolution. Failed, yeas 178, nays 215.

June 30, 1955: S. 2090, an act to amend the Mutual Security Act of 1954. On passage. Passed 273 to 128.

July 7, 1955: S. 2090, an act to amend the Mutual Security Act of 1954. Conference report, on adoption. Adopted 262 to 120.

August 2, 1955: S. 2126, an act to extend and clarify laws relating to the provision and improvement of housing, the elimination and prevention of slums, the conservation and development of urban communities, the financing of vitally needed public works. Conference report, on adoption. Adopted 187 to 168.

The following are some of the more important bills and resolutions which I opposed and on which I voted "nay."

February 16, 1955: H. R. 3828, to adjust the salaries of judges of United States courts, United States attorneys, Members of Congress. On passage. Passed 283 to 118.

March 1, 1955: H. R. 3828, to adjust the salaries of judges of United States courts, United States attorneys, Members of Congress. Conference report, on adoption. Adopted 223 to 113.

April 20, 1955: H. R. 4644, to increase the rates of basic salary of postmasters, officers, supervisors, and employees in the postal field service, to eliminate certain salary inequities. On motion to recommit. Failed, 125 to 287.

July 28, 1955: House Resolution 315, a rule providing for the consideration of H. R. 6645, a bill to amend the Natural Gas Act. On agreeing to rule. Passed 273 to 135.

July 28, 1955: H. R. 6645, to amend the Natural Gas Act. On passage. Passed 209 to 203.

President Eisenhower in Opposing Communism Promotes Peace

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, no longer does communism disturb us as it did a few years back. No longer is there any subversive element in the policymaking departments of Government. They have been sought out and dismissed from Government positions. None such have been appointed to office under the administration of President Eisenhower, nor will there be.

While the situation is much improved as I have indicated, yet the fact remains that communism is still a contending force in the world and ever alert to pressing forward its ideology whenever and in whatever way is possible. Its tone may have changed under the new leadership in Russia but the objectives remain the same. Therefore, it is necessary that we must at all times be on guard. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty.

The policies of the Eisenhower administration have been a big factor throughout the world in off-selling and stopping the onward progress of communism in taking over nations and millions of people into its orbit and under its influence.

Immediately preceding this present administration we saw communism growing continually stronger throughout the world. Nothing that was said or done seemed to stop it.

The task of building a world force of sufficient strength to successfully meet the danger that confronted the free nations of the world was no easy task. It has required endless, and it seemed never-ending, activity upon our part in every corner of the world. Secretary Dulles has worked with zeal and ability in providing a leadership by this Nation in building a strong resistance against communism, and in working out the Eisenhower policies so successfully he deserves great credit. Never before has any Secretary of State been faced with greater responsibilities, nor has anyone performed them in every respect with more fidelity, courage, and ability.

This Nation has been particularly fortunate in having a man such as President Eisenhower at the head of our Government in this time of world uncertainty. His experience, gained as a result of his intitmate contacts with the leaders of other nations during his service as Commander of the Armies of the Allies in World War II, has been of incalculable value and help in drawing world plans. To accomplish this it was necessary to have unity of purpose and unity of understanding. With President Eisenhower as a central figure in all these negotiations, together with his acknowledged military knowledge, it was much easier to attain unity of action among the nations of the world than otherwise would have been the case. Nor, can we overlook the fact that nonpartisan support in most cases has been given to the President by Congress in the fulfillment of his plans to build a strong resistance force against the aggressive policies of communism. This in itself has been of tremendous value because it has shown to the nations of the world that unity exists in this country regardless of political affiliations. This fact has strengthened our stand abroad.

As we ponder the importance of having unity of action among the free nations of the world, as well as in our own land, the question naturally presents itself as to who, what individual in this entire Nation, could claim or be likely to receive such unified support as President Eisenhower. Without in any way disparaging the ability of others who will be presented as candidates for the Presidency, I think it will be generally agreed there is no one who can exceed, or even approach, the importance of President Eisenhower in the maintenance of world peace and the promotion of good will among the nations of the world. He is in every sense of the word a world leader of far greater importance in maintaining peace and promoting good will than can be found in this or any other nation of the world. Thus, it would seem highly important to retain his services as President to combat the extension of communism in the world and strengthen the free nations of the world, and thereby promote the cause of world peace.

The New Social Security Law

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ROBERT W. KEAN
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, Congress this summer made some significant improvements in the social-security system. The bill was signed into law by President Eisenhower on August 1, 1956.

Coverage has been extended to 200,000 more self-employed. These include lawyers, dentists, chiropractors, veterinarians, naturopaths, optometrists, and doctors of osteopathy. Substantially all the self-employed, except doctors of medicine, now will be included in the system. These newly admitted groups will be eligible for benefits as the result of their own contributions after they are in the system for 18 months.

Two hundred thousand widows of deceased workers who were contributors to the social security fund will receive benefits at age 62. This is particularly important, for a woman of that age who has spent her life taking care of her family would find it extremely difficult to get a job if her husband passed away.

Dependent mothers who are the sole survivors of social security contributors will also receive benefits at age 62.

Other working women also may retire at age 62, but benefits will be permanently lower than they would be if they postponed retirement until age 65. For example, a woman whose average earnings were $2,400 a year would receive $62.80 monthly if she retired at 62; while she would receive $78.50 monthly if she waited until 65 to retire.

Wives of men who have retired after reaching the permissible retirement age of 65 can also apply for benefits at age 62. As in the case of working women, wives who elect the earlier benefit age must accept lower permanent benefit payments. For instance, the average industrial male worker in New Jersey earns a little more than $300 a month. A couple, which means a working husband and a nonworking wife, who had that average wage when the wife was 62 would receive $135.59 a month; but, if the wife waited for her benefits until she reached 65, the monthly payment would be $147.80.

Individual circumstances will dictate the decision to be made in the case of each couple, but it is pertinent to point out that it would be better for a woman, where possible, to wait until she is 65 before claiming benefits because the life expectancy of women at 62 is 17 years.

The reason for the setting of these lower retirement benefits for working women and wives who retire at 62 is that if they were to receive full retirement at that age, the solvency of the trust fund which has been set up for the benefit of those who have retired and who will retire in the future would be jeopardized. If such a cost was to be incurred, it would necessitate a further increase in social security deductions from the wages of all workers.

The first payment to widows, and to working women and wives of retired men who will benefit under these provisions will be for the month of November 1956, payment being made in the first part of December.

Another important provision in the new law is that which provides benefits at age 50 to totally disabled persons who have been in the social-security system for a substantial period of time immediately previous to receiving their disability. The definition of disability is: a physical or mental infirmity that prevents the worker from engaging in a substantial gainful activity and which can be expected to continue for a long and indefinite period.

It is estimated that 25 years from now nearly 1 million persons will be benefiting by this provision.

Some opposed this disability-payment provision on the grounds it is impossible to accurately estimate the cost of such a program and because of the possibility it might dissipate the money in the social-security trust fund paid by workers towards their retirement.

It is estimated the disability payments will cost anywhere between $900 million and $2 billion a year. To prevent a possible dissipation of the social-security retirement fund, the new law provides that a special trust fund for disability payments be established through a tax of one-quarter of 1 percent each on employer and employee. This tax will start January 1, 1957. The first payments to the disabled will be made in July 1957.

The new law also provides that survivors benefits for a disabled child unable to earn a living which now stop at 18 shall continue indefinitely.

Another important provision which was recommended by President Eisenhower is that the Federal Government will match to a limited amount payments by the States for necessary medical expenses to those receiving public assistance.

The law also states as one of its objectives the rehabilitation of those unable to earn a living. This means that every effort will be made to restore the disabled and those receiving public assistance to the role of self-supporting wage earners.

Of course, it is essential that additional benefits should not impair the soundness of the trust fund. You will note that cost of the new disability coverage is provided for by a new tax and the cost of earlier retirement of workingwomen and wives through actuarially sound reduction of benefits if they take them at the earlier age.

There is no special provision for paying the additional cost, which is substantial, for the earlier date of paying benefits to widows. This is taken care of in two ways. First, owing to the passage of the bill giving social security to soldiers and the inclusion of more self-employed, the cost of the system is slightly lowered; on all group-insurance systems, the more who participate the lower the cost. And, in the second place, owing to the fact that money rates are higher now than in the past, the trust fund is able to invest its funds at a rate of a little above 2½ percent where in the past it was only 2¼ percent. This difference redounds to the benefit of the beneficiaries of the social-security system.

These improvements in our social-security system, which now is 21 years old, may provide increased benefits to almost every family in our great Nation—either presently or in the future.

Douglas McKay, a Fabulous Soldier in Two Wars and an Excellent Secretary of the Interior

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. LEROY JOHNSON
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks and include some comments concerning Douglas McKay, I am including some information concerning the fabulous war record of this great man.

In World War I he was a first lieutenant in the famous 91st Division whose slogan was "Powder River let her buck." He served in the Meuse-Argonne offensive as a combat officer. In that same division were several interesting men in public life today. One of them is Harold Burton, now a member of the Supreme Court as an Associate Justice, and the other one is Earl Warren, recently appointed Chief Justice of that Court. On the opening day of the great drive—September 26, 1918—the 91st Division had a very tough assignment. The resistance was terrific. The Germans knew that they had to muster all of their strength or be defeated. I may perhaps modestly say that I knew a good deal about that drive because on September 26 I was assigned the mission to fly over the area in which the 91st Division operated, and ascertain what progress its attack was making and I was assigned the mission to attack enemy troops and machinegun nests who might be slowing up the advance of our troops. I had seen thousands of the 91st Division troops as they moved north on the highway bordering on our airfield. I successfully carried out my mission by attacking and liquidating four German machinegun nests that were holding up the advance of our troops. Unfortunately Doug McKay was wounded by shrapnel from an 88-millimeter shell and the wound was so terrible that he did not fully recover until 12 years after the day that he was struck. The curious thing is that when the Japs made their sneak attack on Hawaii in 1941, Doug McKay was with the Willamette University football team in Hawaii. Instead of helping the team win its game, Doug McKay assisted in the organization of the defense of Hawaii.

When the Second World War was declared, he enlisted in the 44th Division under Gen. John Dahlquist, who later became the chief of the ground forces of the United States Army. General Dahlquist was very proud of the fact that this exwounded soldier was willing to offer his services in a division which was preparing for overseas duty.

Naturally, a soldier such as Doug McKay, when he was discharged, joined the American Legion as well as the Disabled War Veterans and the Veterans of Foreign Wars. Because of his wounds he was awarded the Purple Heart medal which was a medal originated by Washington, our first Commander in Chief. He is also authorized to wear the World War I Victory Medal with battle clasps for Meuse-Argonne and Defensive Sector, American Campaign Medal and World War II Victory Medal.

Like many of the men in public life, Doug McKay was a self-made man. He was educated in the Oregon public schools, and later attended Oregon State College, and graduated in agriculture. He was a leader as is evidenced by his being elected president of the student body and later as president of the Alumni Association of OSC.

He worked his way upward until finally he became a successful businessman and he organized the Chevrolet Co. of Salem, which was one of the outstanding dealerships on the Pacific coast. His leadership in his chosen field of business is evidenced by the fact that he was the State president of the Automobile Dealers Association.

When Doug McKay was selected as Secretary of the Interior, he carried on that office and administered its affairs in his usual capable manner. It is fantastic and sickening to read the perturbation, for political purposes, to which he was subjected, while in that office, by some Members of Congress. His administration was labeled a giveaway program when it had no earmarks of any such situation. He got along well with the people in the Department, who were career men, like the National Park Director and others. He jealously guarded the resources under the control of the Department of the Interior and faithfully carried out the trust which was imposed on him when he took the oath as Secretary of Interior.

Congresswoman Martha W. Griffiths Reports to the People of the 17th District of Michigan

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MARTHA W. GRIFFITHS

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mrs. GRIFFITHS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I am taking this opportunity to provide the residents of the 17th District of Michigan a brief résumé of major legislation and of my activities as their Representative in the 84th Congress.

This Congress, I am proud to report, has compiled a distinguished record of achievement in both foreign and domestic fields. Constructive legislation action has been taken to meet the needs and problems of our people.

BETTER HEALTH PROTECTION

My chief interests have included health and welfare legislation and I am happy to say that we in Congress have taken significant steps forward in these important fields. A 15-percent increase in funds to rebuild the Food and Drug Administration was voted this year. I entered testimony before the Appropriations Committee for this agency and urged the establishment of a testing laboratory in Detroit for better enforcement of food and drug laws.

On other fronts we approved establishment of a National Institute for Dental Research and created a National Medical Library. I worked for the enactment of a 3-year $90 million program to assist private institutions in the construction of medical and scientific research facilities. We in Congress boosted by $10 million the Federal program of research in such fields as cancer, heart disease, and mental illness; and provided the important Federal program for free distribution of Salk antipolio vaccine. More than $2 million has come into Michigan under the vaccine program.

SOCIAL SECURITY

The most important forward step since the program was started under a Democratic President and Democratic Congress 20 years ago was taken by this Congress in providing social-security benefits to women at age 62 and to individuals permanently disabled at age 50.

This legislation, guided to final passage under Democratic leadership and over the vigorous opposition of the Eisenhower administration, takes practical recognition of two important deficiencies in our program of care for citizens in their declining years. Women will now draw benefits 3 years earlier than in the past and disabled persons will no longer have to wait until they reach 65 to receive monthly checks under the program.

This is a great social advance, made urgent by our times, and I was proud to have supported this legislation.

VETERANS BENEFITS—RETIREMENT PROGRAMS

The House made a determined effort to expand and liberalize benefits for veterans and their dependents. The House approved measures providing a 10 percent increase in pensions for disabled veterans and a liberalized program of support for widows and orphans. This was needed legislation which I supported but the Senate failed to take affirmative action.

A 10-percent boost in retirement income for retired railroad workers was enacted into law as was a program to increase retirement benefits for civil-service workers. Both of these programs, however, gained only lukewarm support from the administration.

HOUSING

We in Congress moved forward in the field of housing legislation which was drafted by one of my committees, Banking and Currency. The new legislation extends the program of FHA mortgage insurance and liberalizes the terms of insured home improvement loans. A homeowner may now borrow up to $3,500—instead of $2,500—for up to 5 years—instead of 3 years—at moderate interest rates. This new Housing Act also contains provisions to encourage the construction of both private and public housing specially designed and financed for the elderly.

I took a special interest in these two provisions—liberalized terms for home improvement loans and housing aids for the elderly. Some of the provisions of one of my own bills on housing for the elderly were included in the final legislation.

HIGHWAYS

One of the outstanding domestic achievements of the 84th Congress was enactment of a $33 billion highway construction program. This is a pay-as-we-build program which will save us, as taxpayers, at least $11 billion which would have been spent in interest charges had a bond financing program, as advanced by the administration, been approved.

The program, which began July 1, 1956, means an additional $70 million for road construction in Michigan this fiscal year with $232.7 million earmarked for our State through 1959. I voted for this legislation in 1955 when it failed of passage largely because the administration insisted on the costly bond financing arrangement.

EDUCATION

It is disappointing to report the House failed to pass the $1.6 billion school construction bill this session. This urgent legislation met defeat largely because the Powell antisegregation amendment was first made part of the measure.

I voted against the Powell amendment because the issue of segregation was extraneous to the legislation. Inclusion of the Powell amendment served to deprive the schools of our district of millions of dollars which could have been put to good use in building needed classrooms.

The Congress did, however, extend the program of school assistance to those districts affected by Federal activity. Since this program was started in 1950, Michigan schools have received more than $30 million for construction with Livonia, Northville, and Redford Township schools among those sharing in this aid.

I worked closely with superintendents of several Michigan school districts and with members of the Education and Labor Committee to obtain workable amendments to this law and then for its final passage.

SMALL BUSINESS

In addition to supporting extension of the Small Business Administration, I joined with other Members in successfully obtaining passage by the House of the equality of opportunity bill for small business. I was among the early signers of the discharge petition which was necessary to obtain House action on the bill.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

The highlight of legislation in this field was extension of the Mutual Security Act for another year. I supported the action of the House Foreign Affairs Committee which cut the President's money request by $1 billion. It was this reduced figure of $3.8 billion which was approved by Congress. In the debate I supported the amendment which terminates military aid to Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia who has returned to the good graces of the Soviet Union.

GENERAL

At my urging funds for completion of a flood-control survey of the Rouge River were included in this year's appropriation for the Army Corps of Engineers.

My efforts, along with other Congressmen, to expand the distribution of surplus food to the needy of our country by a stamp plan met with strong opposition from the administration and was not approved. This program has the support of the Detroit Common Council, the Detroit Department of Welfare, and the Detroit Food Industry Committee.

Final action to bring the St. Lawrence Seaway to Detroit was taken by the 84th Congress in providing funds needed to deepen the connecting lakes channels. The sum of $5 million was approved for this year's work.

It was through my efforts that the Chief of the Corps of Engineers speeded up the bid procedure so that the good summer months for construction would not be lost this year.

PERSONAL REPORT

In addition to my legislative duties I should make reference to my other work and responsibility as your spokesman in Washington. I have attempted from the outset of my congressional service to keep the residents of the 17th District as fully informed as possible on my work.

To accomplish this, I have written a newsletter each month; I have maintained both a weekly and monthly radio report series through the cooperation of radio stations WWJ and WKMH; and I have written a short column each week for weekly newspapers and club and organization publications.

Your letters have been appreciated and I have attempted to answer each one as promptly as possible. The opinion of residents of our district are important to me.

I have been pleased to assist many residents of our district in their dealings with various Federal agencies. Some results have included bringing a Detroit family and their adopted Korean orphan child together; reuniting a family with their elderly mother from Germany; and cutting Air Force redtape so that a young airman could be with his family at Easter time.

MY LEGISLATION

Among the bills I have sponsored are measures to put the House and its committees on television; to give postal and civil service workers an adequate pay raise; to make it easier for older people to have homes of their own; to require humane methods in the slaughter of livestock; to provide the food stamp plan, to create a Federal agency for the physically handicapped; to assist libraries in rural and fringe urban areas; and to make inspection of poultry in interstate commerce compulsory.

In conclusion let me say that I have done my best to be responsive to the needs and opinions of the residents of our district and to discharge my responsibility as your Representative in Congress in a way which I hope meets with your approval.

The Russians Attempt To Capitalize on the Failure of Congress To Approve President Eisenhower's Request for OTC

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOS. E. MARTIN

OF IOWA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement prepared by me.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President, one item of unfinished business left by the 84th Congress was approval of President Eisenhower's request for United States participation in the Organization for Trade Cooperation.

When President Eisenhower first proposed our becoming a member of the Organization for Trade Cooperation, I said that I could only approve of this action if an amendment to insure that the Organization for Trade Cooperation could not be converted into the International Trade Organization were added to the bill, H. R. 5550, which had been introduced in the other body. The Congress refused to accept the International Trade Organization, provided for in the Habana Charter, in 1950.

On June 20, 1955, I inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a memorandum prepared by the Department of State which compared the International Trade Organization with the Organization for Trade Cooperation. I then told the Senate that—"I have no doubt whatsoever that the present administration means exactly what it said in the statement explaining the difference between the Organization for Trade Cooperation and the defunct International Trade Organization. However, the OTC agreement provides in part 4, article 16, that:

" 'Amendments to this agreement shall become effective, in respect of those members which accept them, upon acceptance by two-thirds of the members of the organization and thereafter in respect of each other member upon acceptance by it.'

"I have no fear that this administration would ever accept an amendment to the OTC agreement that would compromise its stated position. Unfortunately some future administration may not be so dedicated to these principles. Therefore, I shall support United States participation in OTC provided the resolution, which I know we shall adopt, contains a reservation that any new obligation to be imposed upon the United States as an amendment to this agreement can only be accepted by the United States with the concurrence of the Congress. Mr. President, with this one reservation I feel that we should wholeheartedly support the President in his effort to secure the maximum expansion of world trade which the Congress approved in its adoption of H. R. 1.

"President Eisenhower and the able team he has assembled in the Department of State merit the confidence of all those who believe in the ultimate triumph of free-enterprise economics."

The Russians, during the summer of 1955 at Geneva, once again proposed at the United Nations Economic and Social Council that the International Trade Organization be reestablished. I brought this matter to the attention of the Senate on July 29, 1955. I said:

"Mr. President, on several previous occasions I have addressed the Senate on the efforts being made by certain countries within the United Nations to implement portions of the Habana Charter for an International Trade Organization. You will recall the Congress was asked to approve the Habana Charter by President Truman in 1949. The House Committee on Foreign Affairs conducted hearings in the spring of 1950, but made no report. Late in 1950, President Truman announced that he would not ask the 82d Congress to again consider the Habana Charter. Mr. President, it is significant that the Soviet Union was not a signatory to the Habana Charter. Yet on Thursday, July 14, the Russian delegate to the United Nations Economic and Social Council, Mr. Pavel Nikolayevitch Kumykin, announced that the U. S. S. R. was ready to join the nonexistent International Trade Organization. He introduced Resolution No. E/L. 677 which reads as follows:

" 'The Economic and Social Council—

" 'Observing, that the charter of the International Trade Organization drawn up in Habana has not so far been brought into operation;

" 'Considering the increasing need for setting up within the framework of the United Nations an international organization which would facilitate the development of international trade relations and thereby raise the level of living of the peoples and mitigate the tension in international relations;

" 'Invites the governments of states members of the United Nations to ratify the charter of the International Trade Organization as soon as possible and requests the Secretary General to take appropriate steps for calling the first regular session of that organization.'

"Mr. President, this action by the Soviet Government once again emphasizes the importance of the stand which this administration has adopted in rejecting membership on the Commission on International Commodity Trade designed to implement chapter VI of the Habana Charter, and in rejecting the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on Restrictive Business Practices which was designed to implement chapter V of the Habana Charter. The Congress and the administration have both made it clear that this country is dedicated to furthering economic advancement through the development of free, competitive, private enterprise. Congressional approval of the Organization for Trade Cooperation will make it impossible for the Russians to appear to be cooperating with the West by advancing the formation of an organization which would never be acceptable to the United States. They can then show their good faith by joining the Organization for Trade Cooperation and assume, of course, the obligations which such membership entails.

"The introduction of this resolution by the Russians makes my reservation absolutely necessary if we are to protect the economy of the United States. We are making progress, Mr. President, and I again commend the Secretary of State for the fine work by our delegation to the 20th session of the Council."

When H. R. 5550 was finally reported by the House Committee on Ways and Means, it contained the following language:

"Unless Congress by law authorizes such action, neither the President nor any person or agency shall on behalf of the United States accept any amendment to the agreement on the Organization for Trade Cooperation."

This provision completely met my original concern.

I am, indeed, sorry that, in spite of the perfecting amendments adopted by the House Committee on Ways and Means, the Democratic leadership refused to bring this bill before the Congress.

My fears of a year ago have been completely confirmed. Our failure to act has caused a serious problem for the United States delegation to the United Nations Economic and Social Council. A dispatch to the New York Times, dated July 26, by its European correspondent, Michael L. Hoffman, shows how the Russians again attempted to sell the discredited International Trade Organization to the Economic and Social Council at its 1956 summer session. Michael Hoffman concludes his dispatch with this statement:

"Some western delegates, notably the French, are trying to persuade the smaller countries to avoid taking any position on the Soviet plan until after the United States elections. They say the western trade cooperation plan still has a chance of congressional approval. Privately even delegates who are passing this word around concede that they do not have much faith in their own arguments."

I sincerely hope that the 85th Congress will give President Eisenhower what he has asked for.

I am inserting Mr. Hoffman's entire article in the RECORD as a part of my remarks so that all of my colleagues may understand the importance of this issue to our overall foreign policy:

[From the New York Times, of July 27, 1956]

U. N. TRADE AGENCY PUSHED BY SOVIET—MOVE SAID TO BE DIRECTED AT EASING UNITED STATES RESTRICTIONS ON STRATEGIC GOODS

(By Michael L. Hoffman)

GENEVA, July 26.—While the United States stands more or less helplessly by, the Soviet Union is plugging steadily ahead with its campaign to get the United Nations to set up an international trade organization.

All the Soviet leaders are asking for this year is an Economic and Social Council resolution to set up a committee to "work out the proposals."

Debate on the resolution in the Economic Committee of the Council was postponed today, since most delegations said they lacked instructions.

According to the text of the resolution, the ultimate aim of Moscow is to get a new specialized agency established to promote trade cooperation.

From the wording of their various statements on the matter it is clear that by trade cooperation the Soviet leaders have mainly in mind steps to remove discriminatory restrictions and obstacles impeding international trade.

PRESSURE ON UNITED STATES IS AIM

In short, they want a new forum for putting pressure on the United States to take off restrictions on exports of so-called strategic products of Communist countries.

There is an organization for international trade cooperation on the books, called the Organization for Trade Cooperation. It is not at all what the Soviet leaders have in mind. It was planned and constructed with the object of establishing and interpreting commonly agreed rules of commercial policy for what Moscow would call the capitalist world. It was modeled on ideas that originated primarily in the United States.

However, this organization exists only on paper. It is thoroughly approved by President Eisenhower but the administration has never been able to get it past the committee stage in Congress. In Western Europe it is generally assumed now that the organization is defunct.

ADVANTAGE GAINED BY SOVIET

The failure of Congress to approve United States participation in the organization means that the western states have very little to offer in opposition to the very different, but superficially similar, Soviet proposal.

Soviet delegates have helped confuse the issue by borrowing the name of the Organization for Trade Cooperation for their own proposed creation.

The general recognition is that there is a glaring gap in provisions for consultation in the family of international organizations in the trade field. Such consultation not only is possible but also is essential because of the very nature of the problem. As a result more and more countries are receptive to the Soviet alternative.

Some Latin-American and Middle East countries are beginning to think they would get something out of the Soviet proposal if Moscow improved and enlarged its trade relations with non-Communist countries.

Some western delegates, notably the French, are trying to persuade the smaller countries to avoid taking any position on the Soviet plan until after the United States elections. They say the western trade cooperation plan still has a chance of congressional approval. Privately even delegates who are passing this word around concede that they do not have much faith in their own arguments.

"Jersey Joe" Walcott Solving Problem of Juvenile Delinquency

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, today we hear much of juvenile delinquency. It is highly disturbing to read day after day in our newspapers of incidents committed by teenagers that show a growing disrespect for law and order. This lack of respect and failure to observe even the ordinary rules of good conduct is surprising. Whatever may be the cause the fact remains the condition exists. Nor is there any doubt that it needs correction. It should have the careful consideration not only of parents but also of public authorities.

It is most gratifying to realize that in many cities public authorities have taken notice of the condition and are seeking to do something about it. One of the most outstanding efforts of this kind is the program that has been carried out in the city of Washington by means of its Boys Clubs, under the supervision and direction of the Metropolitan Police Department. The result has been very satisfactory.

Another instance of a worthwhile program that is being carried on under unique circumstances is that which has been inaugurated by a city commissioner in the city of Camden, N. J. Commissioner E. George Aaron, director of public safety in that city, has engaged the services of "Jersey Joe" Walcott, former heavyweight boxing champion of the world.

The selection of "Jersey Joe" to take over the direction of programs in the city of Camden to combat juvenile delinquency has proved immensely satisfactory. When I speak of good being done, I know whereof I speak as this is my home city and, therefore, I have personal knowledge of the situation.

There are several reasons that have helped make "Jersey Joe" a success in this work among the youth of our city. First, because he has been heavyweight champion he is looked up to by every boy in the city of Camden, regardless of race, color, or creed. Second, he is looked up to as a good-living man. He is well known as such in Camden, which is his hometown. He has always been known as a man of honesty and integrity and against whom there has never been a word of scandal or reproach. Third, he knows how to talk to boys. He can give them good advice without being too "churchy." He has a friendly disposition. He is kind. He is not rough. The boys enjoy listening to him. He has a good influence over them.

In addition to the personal qualities that make for success, "Jersey Joe" knows how to address groups of boys in their meetings, whether held under the auspices of school or church authorities or otherwise. He knows what to say and how to say it to get to them and exercise a good influence over them.

I have gone into some detail in explaining the work being done by Commissioner Aaron through Joe Walcott because it already has accomplished so much good. It is a unique and new approach to the problem of juvenile delinquency and it is working out successfully. Both Commissioner Aaron and Joe Walcott are entitled to be commended for establishing this program in the city of Camden. It has been so successful that it merits a trial elsewhere by those who want to meet the problem of teen-age delinquency in a real man fashion.

Congressman Leroy Johnson Friend of Reserves

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. W. STERLING COLE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. COLE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague and neighbor in the New House Office Building, Congressman LEROY JOHNSON, of California, is a true friend of the Reserves of all of the armed services. In addition to this, he has been responsible for some of the most far-reaching legislation, affecting the military services, enacted by Congress in recent years.

LEROY JOHNSON came to Congress in 1943, and at that time was assigned to the Military Affairs Committee. In 1947 the old Military Affairs Committee and the Naval Affairs Committee were combined into the present Armed Services Committee. The first chairman of this committee was the distinguished gentleman from New York, the late Walter Gresham Andrews, a noted soldier of the First World War. At that time he told me that he was anxious to have LEROY JOHNSON assigned to the Armed Services Committee, as he was desirous of having this highly decorated and combat-tested aviator on the committee because of his background and wide experience in military affairs and legislation affecting all of the armed services.

Very shortly after the Armed Services Committee was formed and my colleague, LEROY JOHNSON, of California, became a member, I recall that Chairman Andrews assigned him to some of the most important subcommittees and related tasks in the committee. Since Walter Andrews has passed on, we cannot give the exact reason why LEROY JOHNSON was chosen for this important work, but suffice it to say that his conduct in working on these problems, and solving them, became well known, not only in the committee but by virtually every Member of the House.

Bear with me for a moment while I briefly outline some of these assignments. During the 80th Congress when the Republicans controlled the House, LEROY JOHNSON was assigned to five separate subcommittees of the Armed Services Committee and was made chairman of one.

First he was assigned to the important Subcommittee on Organization and Mobilization. This subcommittee was charged with the overall organization and plans for national security; military and industrial mobilization plans, including plans for the mobilization of our national resources for war as well as mobilization of the armed services and their civilian components, including the National Guard and Reserves; plans for coordination of foreign and military policies and coordination of civilian and war economies; occupation armies, military government, and all other military operations of the armed services overseas. In addition to this the subcommittee was charged with keeping closely informed of all plans and operations of the Joint Chiefs of Staff to insure that all legislation affecting the military policy of the United States was consonant with foreign policy and overall security plans. Furthermore, while a member of this subcommittee, Congressman LEROY JOHNSON was designated to hold extended secret hearings in order to develop legislation for the establishment of a top Government security agency. This legislation resulted in the birth of the Central Intelligence Agency, and a large share of the credit for the establishment of this well-known and vital agency of our Government must go to LEROY JOHNSON, of California.

From what I have said you would think that the subcommittee assignment I have just described would have been sufficient to take all of the time of the average Congressman. But LEROY JOHNSON is far above the average and he plunged into the work of other subcommittees to which he had been assigned. For instance, I refer to the subcommittee on Heavy Munitions which was charged with the procurement and production of all heavy industrial munitions of war for the Army, Navy, and Air Force, requiring extraordinary tooling-up of industry and large quantities of strategic materials, including ship construction and heavy Army and Navy ordnance, and transportation equipment.

Another important subcommittee on which my colleague served was that dealing with legal matters and which had charge of all investigatory activities of the committee. On this subcommittee LEROY JOHNSON'S legal background served him well, for before this group came all of the legal business of the committee, including questions of subpena, committee jurisdiction and legal procedure, and considerations and proposals for the reform of existing systems of military and naval justice.

Probably the work closest to the heart of LEROY JOHNSON came as a result of his assignment to still another subcommittee, for although the Subcommittee on Scientific Research and Development was charged with matters concerning the maintenance of the supremacy of the United States in research and development, it so happened that much legislation affecting the Reserves was handled by this subcommittee. Thus it was that as chairman of this subcommittee Congressman LEROY JOHNSON conducted the hearings which resulted in the enactment of legislation authorizing for the first time the establishment of a retirement system for members of the Reserve components. Probably no other statute is so well known to our Reserves as the Reserves Retirement Act, and certainly every member of the Reserve components, whether retired under the provisions of this statute or authorized to do so in the future, can reflect with gratitude upon the work that Congressman JOHNSON did in connection with this law.

In the 83d Congress when the Republicans again controlled the House, the Honorable DEWEY SHORT, of Missouri, became the chairman of the Armed Services Committee, and, as was to be expected, appointed LEROY JOHNSON as chairman of the subcommittee to handle all Reserve and National Guard legislation. Shortly after this assignment LEROY JOHNSON introduced legislation and conducted hearings on one of the most far-reaching legislative items affecting the Reserve components ever enacted by Congress. He spent 8 continuous weeks in study and in public hearings on the bill which became the Reserve Officer Personnel Act, establishing for the first time a statutory system of promotion for all Reserve officers of the armed services. In testimony of the type of work that LEROY JOHNSON did on this legislation, it should be remembered that this legislation passed both the House and the Senate without a dissenting vote.

In the 83d Congress alone, Congressman JOHNSON introduced 18 separate legislative items in behalf of the Reserves, National Guard, and Civil Air Patrol. He sponsored legislation to equalize benefits between and among members of the Armed Forces, legislation to amend the Legislative Reorganization Act to authorize full and fair hearings of claims, a bill to increase the enlisted strength of organized units of the Reserve components, a bill to establish the Civil Air Patrol as a civilian auxiliary of the Air Force and to extend aid to the CAP in the fulfillment of its objectives, and so many others that I cannot take the time to describe them all fully.

When the Armed Services Committee was first organized in 1947, LEROY JOHNSON was the 13th ranking Republican on that committee. Today he is the fourth ranking Republican, and as such is constantly concerned with the overall policy of the committee and, in addition, serves as ranking minority member of one of the three important legislative subcommittees.

Since he came to Congress in 1943, the name of LEROY JOHNSON has become known throughout the armed services and the Nation as a Member of the House of Representatives dedicated to the furtherance of the national security and defense and to the welfare and well being of all members of the Armed Forces.

A Sound Conservation Policy—False Charges Exposed

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLARE E. HOFFMAN
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, probably more misinformation, half-truths, and distortions of fact have been circulated in recent months concerning oil and gas leasing on certain wildlife refuges, than about any other Interior Department activity.

Numerous statements have been issued which accuse the Department of acting to "reverse policies to preserve the integrity of the wildlife refuges" through the "opening" of wildlife refuges to oil and gas leasing.

These statements have appeared without in any way defining the real purpose of the wildlife refuge system. The availability of refuge lands for oil and gas leases for more than 20 years, as well as for other economic purposes, has been ignored.

MULTIPLE USES

Implicit in the attacks on the Department has been the charge that this was a brandnew activity initiated by the present administration.

This allegation completely disregards the multiple uses which historically have been made of wildlife lands.

The uses include sharecropping, grazing, timber removal and, in one case at least, a factory site. Oil drilling has been included, too, where it does not interfere with the use of the area for its primary purpose—wildlife conservation.

Former Secretary McKay's approval of new regulations last December to govern oil and gas leasing in these areas was immediately seized upon by administration foes as a pretext for charges of reprehensible conduct.

When the regulations—before they were signed—were submitted to the Secretary's Advisory Committee on Conservation, no one raised a serious objection. Not until afterward did the critics open their barrage of acrimonious press releases, public statements, and canned speeches by certain Members of Congress.

Some of those who were loudest in their objections on later occasions were members of the advisory committee and had remained silent when the proposed regulations were considered prior to Secretarial approval.

THREE CATEGORIES

Before the facts of this controversy can be properly weighed and evaluated, it is necessary to understand that there are approximately 17½ million acres in the Nation's wildlife management system. They are divided into three categories as follows:

First. Wildlife refuges, areas over which the Fish and Wildlife Service has primary jurisdiction and which are managed primarily for wildlife purposes.

Second. Game ranges, areas over which the Fish and Wildlife Service shares jurisdiction with another agency and on which wildlife conservation may be one of several equally important uses rather than the primary purpose.

Third. Cooperative lands, areas owned by the Federal Government but administered by the State for wildlife purposes.

There are, all told, 272 wildlife areas in all categories of these lands throughout the United States.

Leasing has been allowed in a total of 20 areas, or approximately 7 percent of all the areas in the system.

The number of acres in the 20 areas opened to leasing is roughly 250,000. This is about 1½ percent of the acreage in the entire system.

The practice of oil and gas leasing in these areas is not new.

Issuance of such leases dates back to, and is authorized by the Mineral Leasing Act of 1920. The intent of this act was later reaffirmed by amendment.

The Mineral Leasing Act for acquired lands, and the act of June 15, 1935, relating to administration of wildlife refuges, also authorize oil and gas leasing in wildlife areas.

The first regulations under which leases were issued in wildlife areas were signed in 1947 by Secretary Krug in the administration of President Truman. These were found lacking by the present administration and were superseded by the newer ones approved by McKay last December.

NUMBERS OF LEASES

The total number of leases which have been allowed up to now by the Federal Government is 612. Of these, 277 were allowed by previous administrations—270 between 1947 and January 20, 1953—while the present administration has allowed 335.

McKay's accusers have held him to be in a conspiracy with oil firms to enable them to fatten their purses at the expense of the Nation's wildlife population. After he signed the new regulations he was portrayed by some as indulging in a veritable orgy of leasing in areas which had been sacrosanct before this administration took office.

The figures show an opposite picture.

Under the administrations in the White House before January 20, 1953, a total of 13 areas were opened up to oil and gas exploration and development. As has been stated, there were 277 leases in these areas.

Under McKay seven new areas were opened to leasing. A total of 85 leases were allowed therein.

In other words, previous administrations opened nearly twice as many new areas as did McKay and allowed two-thirds more leases in the areas thus opened.

In six of the areas which had already been opened by the previous administration, the Department allowed 250 additional leases compared with the 277 issued prior to January 20, 1953.

NARROW MARGIN

Hence, the figures show McKay opened fewer areas to leasing than did his predecessors; he allowed fewer leases in the areas opened, and he allowed fewer leases in those areas already opened when he took office than had officials of past administrations.

Only when the leases granted in newly opened areas are combined with those allowed in areas already opened does the present administration come out with a total greater than that of past administrations. And the margin is only 58 more leases.

Considering each of the three categories separately, the figures are as follows:

Wildlife refuges: Previous administrations opened 7; allowed 20 leases. Present administration opened 4; allowed 11 leases. In 3 of those already opened by previous administrations, present administration allowed 6 leases.

Game ranges: The previous administration opened 1; allowed 241 leases. Present administration opened 1; allowed 21 leases. In the game range already opened by the previous administration, the present administration allowed 230 leases.

Cooperative lands: The previous administration opened 5; allowed 16 leases. The present administration opened 2; allowed 53 leases. In 2 of these areas already opened by the previous administration, the present administration allowed 14 additional leases.

OTHER FACTS

Figures on royalties paid over the years by oil drillers operating in wildlife areas further refute the implication that this activity is new with the present administration.

Total income to the Government from this source was $5,650,000 from 1947 through 1955. The amount collected under the previous administration was $3,650,000, or $1,650,000 more than has been collected by the present administration.

Leasing in refuge areas has also been attacked as an impropriety and injurious per se to the waterfowl and other wildlife. Opponents of the administration have consistently tried to paint a picture of derricks scattered across the landscape, spouting oil over the ducks while streams are polluted and the ground is torn up by workmen and their machines.

In flat refutation of this line of attack is the fact that the Audubon Society, one of the Nation's leading conservationist organizations, permits oil and gas leasing and development on its own private refuge holdings.

NEW REGULATIONS

Administration opponents have also claimed that the new regulations issued by former Secretary McKay were capricious and revolutionary. This is not borne out by the facts.

Soon after he took office, McKay noted that the 1947 regulations were not adequate to protect wildlife values. Under those mildly protective rules, an oil or gas lease had to be approved and issued automatically if certain minimum conditions were met by the operator-applicant.

The drawing of new regulations was ordered. When they were approved, they represented more than 2 years of preparation by the Department's career specialists in wildlife management and land use.

They were designed to strengthen the control of the Fish and Wildlife Service over this activity in wildlife areas, and to provide the Service with a veto over the issuance of leases. They took certain areas out of leasing altogether.

Far from being the first Secretary to open refuge lands to oil and gas leasing, McKay actually was the first one in the history of the Wildlife Service to close some areas to exploration in deference to irreplaceable wildlife values.

The importance of the new regulations also lies in the future as well as in the present.

There are now approximately 3½ million acres in the wildlife refuges, as distinguished from game ranges and cooperative lands.

FUTURE NEEDS

Specialists in this field foresee a need within the next 25 years for 12½ million acres to provide food and living space for the desired population of 50 million birds, in the face of growing urban development and reclamation of wet lands for agricultural development.

The program of the Federal Government calls for the acquisition of an additional 4 million acres to serve as waterfowl habitat. The States are expected to provide an additional 5 million acres.

The land which the Federal Government adds to its refuge system will in almost all cases be acquired through purchase from private ownership.

It is significant that the Fish and Wildlife Service is finding more and more difficult the securing of mineral rights to land purchased for wildlife use. Owners of large tracts are unwilling to part with the subsurface mineral rights when they sell.

In the past, only about 20 percent of all land acquired by purchase had the mineral rights withheld by the sellers. Now the situation is reversed.

Only about 15 percent of the land being purchased currently has the mineral rights attached. This means that on over 85 percent of the land being bought today the previous owners retain the right, perhaps, to enter that portion of a wildlife area sometime in the future to drill for oil.

VAST DRILLING POSSIBLE

Thus, if the Fish and Wildlife Service is to fulfill its goal of adding 4 million more acres to the waterfowl refuge system, it faces the possibility that oil drilling may one day take place on about 3,500,000 acres of this land, regardless of conservationists, Congress, or ducks.

Under the new regulations, the Department is better prepared to cope with leasing and drilling activity on this unprecedented scale than it ever has been before. It cannot forbid private owners of mineral rights from exercising their rights. It can require them to exercise the most stringent precautions to avert destruction of the wildlife values.

DRILLING HERE TO STAY

A number of the critics of the new regulations have admitted privately that, if oil and gas drilling must take place, it would not be possible to draft a better or more protective set of procedures.

These individuals say they are against drilling in principle.

It appears they have not faced up to the fact that oil development on wildlife land is here to stay and must inevitably expand.

STOP ORDER

Much of the sound and fury generated by this controversy resolves about the so-called stop order issued August 31, 1953, for the announced purpose of allowing the Department time to study and rewrite the 1947 regulations inherited from the previous administration.

The order, in the form of a memorandum, was addressed to all field offices of the Bureau of Land Management and was signed by William Zimmerman, Jr., the Acting Director of the Bureau. This document enjoined Bureau field offices from processing oil and gas leases on refuge lands until further notice.

The pending applications were suspended, rather than canceled, to avoid inflicting an undeserved penalty on the applicants by depriving them of their filing priority, because of the shortcomings of the Government's regulations.

But the memorandum did not specify that action on leases on game ranges or cooperative lands should be suspended. Therein lies the crux of this matter.

The leasing activity which did occur during the period between the issuance of the suspension memorandum and the approval of the new regulations reflects a basic and unresolved conflict of policy between the Bureau of Land Management and the Fish and Wildlife Service.

The BLM has held traditionally that game ranges are not refuge lands within the meaning of the 1947 regulations. It based its position upon a literal interpretation of the minerals clauses in the Executive orders which created the ranges. This interpretation extends back into the last administration. Accordingly, the Bureau held that leasing on the ranges was not covered by its own suspension order of August 31, 1953.

The Fish and Wildlife Service, on the other hand, viewed game ranges as refuge lands and contended that they should be so regarded under the regulations and under the suspension order.

LEASES ACCOUNTED FOR

This policy difference was not impressed upon the congressional committee leading to the assumption, fostered by administration foes, that hundreds of leases were brashly issued during a period in which the Department was proclaiming a self-imposed restriction.

Similarly, BLM did not feel that the 1947 regulations or the suspension order related specifically to cooperative lands; that is, lands withdrawn for conservation management by the States. The view of the Fish and Wildlife Service again was wholly divergent.

These conflicts account for virtually all of the leasing activity following issuance of the BLM memorandum.

Of 293 leases allowed during the period, records show only 6 were on wildlife refuges. The rest were on game ranges, 222, and on cooperative lands, 65.

Four of the refuge leases were issued in error by BLM field offices which were not aware that the leases involved refuge land. The other two were approved by former Assistant Secretary Orme Lewis on the ground that they were in full compliance with the 1947 regulations and had been nearing approval at the time the memorandum suspending further processing went out to BLM field offices.

By far the greatest number of leases issued during the period were in the Fort Peck, Mont., game range where a total of 201 was allowed. Twenty-one other leases were issued in the Kenai, Alaska, moose range.

Fort Peck, it should be noted, was originally opened to leasing by the previous administration which had allowed 241 leases in the area before this administration took office, out of a total of 612 leases in all wildlife areas, leaving a balance of 170 scattered elsewhere in the system. It is further interesting to note that no oil has been discovered at Fort Peck and no drilling is in progress there.

OTHER LEASES

Of the 65 leases allowed during the same period on cooperative lands, a total of 52 were on the Railroad Valley, Nev., refuge, owned by the Federal Government but managed in the State of Nevada. Issuance of the leases was desired by Nevada. They led to the discovery of oil and development of the first producing field in the State.

Only about 5 percent of this 140,000-acre area is used for wildlife purposes. Its value for conservation has been enhanced during the oil exploration work through the drilling of water wells by the company, the construction of dikes and the impoundment of water.

The 13 other leases allowed on State-managed cooperative lands were divided between the East Fork, Wyo., elk pasture, 7; the Sun River, Mont., elk range, 5; and the Fox Lake, Mont., waterfowl project, 1.

In no case has any of the leases issued during the period been shown to be detrimental to existing or potential wildlife values on game ranges or cooperative lands.

SUMMARY

Although oil and gas exploration and development in wildlife areas has been permissible since 1920, little interest was shown in reserves beneath these lands until after World War II which was marked by an enormous drain on the Nation's petroleum resources.

There has been a continuing program of such activity since 1947, the year the first regulations governing these leases were drawn.

There have been no flurries of leasing or accelerated activity at any particular time since then.

These facts notwithstanding, a loud claque of administration accusers has charged that former Secretary McKay threw open refuge lands to oil and gas leasing. They have attempted to give substance to their allegations by constant repetition.

Through their horrified tones and the volume of their clamor, they have sought to convey the impression that there was no such activity before this administration took office.

The record shows otherwise. Since 1920, a total of 612 leases has been granted. Previous administrations allowed 277. The present administration allowed 335.

The inference has also been that oil and gas leasing in wildlife areas is indecent, inhuman, or corrupt.

This view is evidently not shared by the Audubon Society, a renowned conservationist organization, which permits such activity on its refuges.

New regulations approved by Secretary McKay last December have been lauded by career technicians in the Department as providing the greatest measure of protection the refuge areas have enjoyed in their history.

As Secretary of the Interior, McKay obviously could not forsake one resource while catering to another. It would have been as remiss for him to ignore publicly owned oil reserves while safeguarding wildlife, as it would for him to disregard wildlife while protecting the public's rights in oil reserves under public lands.

Much has been said regarding the leasing that took place during the "stop order period."

It must be understood that the purpose of the suspension or "stop order" was to afford this administration an opportunity to study and strengthen regulations existing when it took office.

The memorandum to suspend the processing of applications was an alert to the Bureau of Land Management field offices that such a study was being undertaken.

It was intended primarily to prevent final action on any applications for leases where wildlife values would need the added protection of strengthened regulations. The memorandum did not specify to field personnel that game ranges and cooperative lands were to be excluded from consideration for leasing.

Virtually all the leases issued during this period were issued on lands located within one game range—Fort Peck—and one cooperative unit—Railroad Valley. In neither case has it been shown that any damage to wildlife values resulted or is likely to result.

Finally, it is significant to note that this entire dispute involves only 20 wildlife areas throughout the United States, or approximately 7 percent of all the areas in the system. The acreage affected comprises only about 1½ percent of all of that which has been set aside by the Nation for wildlife purposes.

Hydroelectric Potential of the Hells Canyon Reach of the Snake River

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ARTHUR V. WATKINS
OF UTAH
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include in the Appendix of the RECORD a statement prepared by me on the hydroelectric potential of the Hells Canyon reach of the Snake River.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The defeat by the Senate of the Federal Hells Canyon bill has not ended, unfortunately, the political misrepresentations which have so long beclouded this vital issue.

It is to be hoped, nevertheless, that even the ardent proponents of the Federal high dam will pause for a moment to give earnest consideration to the facts regarding the comparative benefits of the 3-dam plan and the high dam proposal.

As the Oregon Journal, an independent newspaper in the Pacific Northwest, has declared, Hells Canyon has been the subject of exaggeration, misstatement and planned confusion. Typical, the Journal points out, was the comment of Senator MORSE that the defeat was a "tragic blow to the welfare of the Nation." The Journal describes this statement simply as "unadulterated balderdash."

In order that we may attempt to place the Hells Canyon controversy in some perspective, I have attempted to examine objectively the facts on the development of the hydroelectric potential of the Hells Canyon reach of the Snake River.

THE FACTS ON THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE HYDROELECTRIC POTENTIAL OF HELLS CANYON REACH OF SNAKE RIVER ON THE IDAHO-OREGON BOUNDARY

To compare the 3-dam plan licensed by the Federal Power Commission to a privately financed electric power entity with a high-dam plan to be federally financed is possible, but this requires a careful analysis of the facts and the rules controlling each proposal.

The licensee, in this instance, is the Idaho Power Co., and the Federal construction agency would be the Bureau of Reclamation. The company may not be paid for downstream benefits to Federal powerplants that result from regulation of the waters of the stream. The Federal project may credit its operations with the net value of downstream benefits to both Federal and privately owned plants, and from the latter class it may collect that value in dollars.

A Federal development does not pay taxes, but a privately financed development must. In both cases American citizens would be served by the production of electric power and service. It is estimated for the year 1955 that the private electric industry in the country, as a whole, received in operating revenues $6,930,000,000; that of this amount $625 million was paid in State and local taxes, being 9 percent of the operating revenues; $1,014,000,000 was paid in Federal taxes, being 14.6 percent of the operating revenues. The sum of these taxes is 23.6 percent of the operating revenues.

The records of the Federal Power Commission show that the Idaho Power Co. paid $3,870,000 annually in Federal income taxes, and $3,300,000 in State and local taxes for the year 1954. These amounts happen to be 3 percent on the investment of the company for Federal taxes and 2.42 percent on the investment for State and local taxes.

There are, admittedly, downstream benefits for power, flood control, and navigation from the operation of the 3-dam plan in Hells Canyon reach of Snake River. These benefits are paid for by the users of the power which is generated at the three dams and sold to consumers, and thus will not be paid for by the beneficiaries downstream, under present rules and regulations.

In the voluminous hearings before the Federal Power Commission on the application of Idaho Power Co., and in the hearings before the Senate Interior Committee on S. 1333, factual information of unquestioned validity was presented which unfortunately has been obscured by political exaggerations.

The Federal Power Commission had the duty to determine the best plan for development of this portion of Snake River. To do so they reduced the various plans to the common denominator of Federal financing and construction. Thus, this record must be searched and analyzed carefully to find what data, together with the testimony before the Senate Interior Committee, were presented which could be correlated to show plainly and directly the comparable facts which bear on the economics of the two plans. I have had these data reduced to four tables in order that physical and fiscal comparisons may be reduced to understandable terms.

These data clearly indicate that the job of supplying electric power to our people would be more equitably accomplished if there were no Federal taxes on privately owned systems, and if federally owned projects were required to pay the same State and local taxes as others.

It is common knowledge, I think, that Federal income taxes on the electric-power industry are paid by the users of electricity. To tax these industries is to tax the people.

I now refer to the technical data available to analyze and compare these two plans about which so much ill-advised controversy has been raised.

In the Hells Canyon reach there is a total fall of 602 feet. When dams are built, this fall is converted to a head, and the use of this head is the means of converting falling waters into electric energy. Both plans develop this head of 602 feet. In the 3-dam plan, the variation in the head is only 101 feet, because that is the maximum drawdown on the storage unit at Brownlee Dam. For the high dam, the maximum drawdown is 289 feet and thus the head will vary from 602 to 313 feet. The high dam will produce a little more power because it captures flood-waters which are not usable except with a larger storage volume.

I have assumed, as did the Federal Power Commission, that power data supplied by three engineers were the best in the large volume of evidence taken. These three engineers were from the Bonneville Power Administration, the Bureau of Reclamation, and the Federal Power Commission. These experts did not represent the licensee. In making allowances for upstream increases in irrigation use and the determination of critical periods of water supply to be firmed by storage, these engineers varied only about 5 percent in their estimates of nominal prime power.

I have taken the average of the values submitted by these engineers as the best figures available. For the 3-dam plan, the prime power at site is 565 megawatts with downstream benefits of 110 megawatts. For the high dam at site the prime power is 646 megawatts, and downstream benefits of 278 megawatts. At the site, then, there is a difference of only 81 megawatts. These data appear in my table A.

I stated that the foregoing values were the averages of data submitted by three witnesses. I note that the data of the Federal Power Commission witness is practically identical with the average. I find in the testimony that he made a special study of actual energy output for the 20-year period of streamflow records, 1929–48, allowing for about 8 percent more irrigation depletion than the average of the three witnesses who computed estimates for normal prime power. The average energy output of the period is as follows:

At site: 3-dam plan, 546 megawatts; high dam, 634 megawatts.

Downstream benefits: 3-dam plan, 59 megawatts; high dam, 113 megawatts.

The difference at the site is 88 megawatts, whereas in prime power calculations the difference at site was 81 megawatts. I hold that this study of energy output is the test of the projects. It is what would have been produced by them over a 20-year critical period containing years of high variation in stream flows and also containing the critical months for which storage uses must be relied upon.

When I have mentioned downstream benefits, I have done so on the basis of these engineers, and they included the following downstream powerplants, as if they were in full operation: Bonneville, The Dalles, John Day, McNary, all on the Columbia River. I also have assumed the existence of Ice Harbor, Lower Monumental, Little Goose, and Lower Granite, which are on the Lower Snake River, none of which may be constructed for many years. The average megawatts of output are shown on my table B.

Table C included general data and comparisons between the two plans for the proposed developments. The data shown are comparable one with the other for each plan, excepting that item 2 for the 3-dam plan shows the cost per kilowatt hour at 3.8 mills, which is not based upon item 11, but which is the accepted cost of construction by the licensee. The 3.8 mill figure is based upon Federal construction costs, which is nearly $50 million greater than the bid for constructing the 3-dam plan.

There was an estimate in the Federal Power Commission hearings of $21 million for transmission lines to market the power of the licensee, the Idaho Power Co. It is understood that this would bring the power to Boise, or to a similarly situated market. To connect the high dam with the Northwest power network is estimated to cost $77 million. The two latter items appear in item 13a of the table.

For the high dam plan, in order to supply the downstream benefits, the transmission cost was estimated to be $146 million. I have used the costs for the high dam and the transmission lines as given before the Senate Interior Committee. The combined cost of these items comes to about $55 million less than that testified to before the Federal Power Commission. A footnote on table C indicates the place where these values may be found.

Since contracts have been let for the 2 plant units of the licensee, there now remains little question of the sufficiency of the estimate of $133 million to cover the cost of the 3-dam plan exclusive of transmission.

At the beginning, I said that it was possible from the evidence available to compare the two plans. The data are arranged in my table D. The at-site costs have been substantiated. The annual costs for operating the projects are:

For the 3-dam plan, $8,400,000 for operation, maintenance, replacements, and depreciation, and fish facilities, together with fixed costs including interest on the investment. When there is added the Federal income tax on the basis now being paid by Idaho Power Co., and similarly local and State taxes, the total annual cost is $15,400,000. This results in 3.21 mills per kilowatt-hour of average generation over the 20-year period previously mentioned. If Federal taxes were deducted, the cost is 2.38 mills per kilowatt-hour. If all taxes were eliminated, the cost would be 1.75 mills per kilowatt-hour.

For the high dam, there are no taxes, and I have assumed the annual cost to be that testified to by the Federal Power Commission engineer, who computed the average energy output over the 20-year period. The cost is 2.71 mills per kilowatt-hour. If there is added to the annual cost of the high dam, local and State taxes at 2.25 percent of the allocation of power, at site—$278 million—the total annual cost would be $21,300,000, and the cost per kilowatt-hour would be 3.83 mills. But, I have compared these kilowatt-hour costs at site for the reason that the licensee can receive no compensation for downstream benefits for power, or flood control, or navigation. The high dam, federally owned, can and does take credits for these downstream benefits. These credits are reflected in the annual cost as reduced to $15,045,000. If this were not done, the costs of power development for both plans would be approximately 3.2 mills per kilowatt-hour, in spite of the fact that the 3-dam plan carries $7 million annually in taxes, and the proposed Federal project carries none.

These startling data reveal the inequity of our treatment of our citizens. I have suggested a formula for equalizing the item of taxes. It is this: Relieve the privately financed generation industry from Federal income tax, and require that Federal projects pay local and State taxes. Consumers are entitled to such fair and equitable treatment.

The difference in power costs to the consumers in these plans is insignificant. To develop an additional 88 megawatts at site would require an additional expenditure of $328 million minus $133 million or $195 million. This is $2,220 per average kilowatt of incremental output. No one could justify such a cost to the Nation's taxpayers, who would have to advance the money for so little gain in power. If we use the 142,000 additional kilowatts in downstream benefits, the cost would be $1,375 per average kilowatt of incremental output. That is still four times too high for fiscal justification.

The additional 142,000 kilowatts is less than 1 percent of the power requirements of the Northwest by 1980, which according to the Federal Power Commission studies will be 17 million kilowatts. We certainly can find, without any difficulty, places to develop 1 million kilowatts with just the saving of $195 million.

In the Hells Canyon matter we have heard a lot of talk about much of little consequence. Yet, the defeat of the Hells Canyon bill saved the Nation's taxpayers nearly a half billion dollars that is needed for a multitude of better projects in the West. More important is the fact that the plan under construction is a better contribution to the Nation's economy. That the Federal Power Commission made a good decision under pressure of bitter opposition is a sign we should recognize for what it is, namely, the wisdom incorporated in the Federal Power Act which removed one phase of the development of natural resources from purely partisan politics.

A Record of Some Achievements of the 84th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. EDWARD A. GARMATZ

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. GARMATZ. Mr. Speaker, as the 84th Congress draws to a close, I would like to review some of its major legislative action, under leave to extend my remarks. This Democratic-controlled Congress was a hard working, responsible Congress, as the record will show, and its accomplishments will prove that it was much concerned about the public welfare.

Being convinced that a well-informed public will be better able to evaluate the issues which will be raised during the coming Presidential campaign, I am listing some of the achievements of the 84th Congress. While over 22,000 bills were introduced, it is natural that many were not acted upon. However, 2,878 bills were approved by the Congress, and these represent many hours, days, and weeks of hearings, deliberations, and debates in committees and in both Houses of Congress. Many of the bills were of importance to certain areas of the country only, and many were private bills. I would mention, however, those bills only which are of national importance and special interest to the people of my district.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Over the administration's opposition, and in order to keep our country well prepared for any emergency, Congress voted $1.1 billion more than the administration requested for the Air Force; expanded research facilities in aeronautics; enlarged atomic energy projects, and increased funds for aircraft control and warning systems.

INTERNAL SECURITY

Because of the many injustices that had occurred and the extravagant statements that were made about security risks in the Government, Congress voted to create a Commission on Government Security to review the present program and to make recommendations thereon. It also voted to strengthen penalties for seditious conspiracy and for advocacy of overthrow of the Government; to prohibit Government employment of disloyal persons or those who believe in the right to strike against the Government; to provide rewards for information on the illegal importation, manufacture or acquisition of nuclear material or atomic weapons; and to provide penalties for the willful damage or destruction of aircraft.

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

Laws were enacted to extend the reciprocal trade agreements and strengthen provisions for the protection of domestic industries; to provide for settlement of World War II claims against Hungary, Rumania, and other countries; to provide for the disposal of alien property seized during World War I; to continue the mutual security program of military, economic, and technical aid abroad; and funds were appropriated to complete the Inter-American Highway. A number of treaties were ratified by the Senate. These did not require House action.

NATIONAL ECONOMY

One of the major pieces of legislation approved was the increase of the minimum wage under the Federal Labor Standards Act from 75 cents to $1 per hour. Also approved were laws to continue the Small Business Administration to June 30, 1957, and increase its revolving funds for loans to a total of $175 million; to authorize a 4-year program of airport construction, providing $63 million a year grants-in-aid to States; to authorize a $33.4 billion highway construction program; to exempt from Federal admissions tax, tickets of 90 cents or less; to increase from $25 million to $125 million, the authorization of the Small Business Administration to make disaster loans and liberalize terms; to permit automobile dealers to sue under antitrust laws for unjust revocation of franchise; to establish a Federal policy to encourage the development of commercial fisheries industry, to create a $10 million loan fund, and to reorganize the Fish and Wildlife Service.

VETERANS AND SERVICEMEN

Many bills of interest to this group were approved, including ones to permit persons in the Armed Forces on January 31, 1955, to continue accrual of educational benefits; provide incentive pay increases of 6 to 25 percent and allowances, for members of Armed Forces; extend to July 1, 1959, provisions of the Dependents Assistance Act; provide social-security wage credits for military service before January 1, 1956; provide for educational assistance to children of certain veterans who died in World War II or Korea; put all military personnel under Social Security and increase benefit payments to survivors of servicemen and veterans; extend home loan guarantees for home purchase or construction to July 25, 1958; provide for medical care of dependents of members of the Armed Forces; increase pay of 6-month trainees under the Reserve Act from $50 to $78 per month; and provide lump-sum readjustment payment for Reservists involuntarily released from active service.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

The discovery of the polio vaccine by Dr. Salk, resulted in enactment of legislation authorizing $30 million to assist States in providing this vaccine for needy children and expectant mothers. The program was later extended to July 1, 1957. Legislation was approved to authorize a 3-year $1.25 million program of Federal aid for nationwide research and reevaluation of problems of mental health; to authorize a training program to increase the number of public health specialists, aid to States for training nurses and practical nurses, and grants for improved mental health administrations; increase fund authorization and extend the school milk program, broaden distribution to include camps and nurseries for under-privileged children and to all nonprofit child-care centers and agencies; authorize survey by Public Health Service of extent and effects of chronic illnesses; and to provide $4 million for new equipment and facilities for National Institute of Dental Research.

In the field of housing, Congress authorized a 2-year program of public housing construction at the rate of 35,000 units per year; increased FHA insurance authorization by $3 billion; authorized additional military housing; permitted FHA loans for repair of homes damaged in floods and other major disasters. It also authorized $378 million Federal aid for school construction, maintenance, and operating costs, in districts affected by Government activities, and extended the program to June 30, 1958.

MARITIME LEGISLATION

As a member of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, I am vitally interested in the maritime situation and all legislation which affects our shipyards, our port activities and matters related thereto.

When conditions in the shipyards became extremely critical, the administration finally gave approval to some measures to help remedy the situation and provide some work, to enable the yards to retain much of their skilled help and to keep the machinery in working order. One of the bills approved was a $1.4 billion program of naval construction and conversion for 1957, including a nuclear powered cruiser, and 50,000-ton aircraft carrier. Other legislation authorized the construction of an atomic-powered merchant ship for operation in foreign commerce; granted authority to the Maritime Administration to conduct research and experiment in port and cargo handling of the atomic vessel; to require a periodic survey of national shipbuilding capability; to prohibit operation in the coastwise trade of vessels rebuilt outside the United States, which I sponsored personally; to authorize the construction of prototype modern cargo vessel for mass production in the event of emergency; to facilitate private financing of passenger vessels in the interest of national defense by providing that in the case of special-defense vessels, the Secretary of Commerce be authorized to insure 100 percent of the principal and interest, on any mortgage eligible for insurance.

Another bill which I introduced which became law, eliminates the requirement that purchasers under the Merchant Ship Sales Act agree that the use factor in charter hire payable by the Government, shall not exceed 15 percent of the statutory sales price. Other legislation authorized the appropriation of necessary funds for the construction of 2 prototype ships, and the conversion of 1 Liberty ship, by the Maritime Commission; authorized the sale of 2 war-built tankers; and extended the operation of the Emergency Ship Repair Act.

Mr. Clarence G. Morse, Chairman of the Federal Maritime Board, stated that at the start of the new fiscal year, July 1, 1956, there were 57 oceangoing merchant ships, including 7 passenger vessels, being constructed, reconditioned, or converted in United States shipyards, or on order. In addition, over $14 million of work was placed with the repair yards, in bettering naval-auxiliary type ships in the reserve fleet. He mentioned also that congressional interest and activity in maritime matters has been at a high peak during the past session, and listed 24 principal items of new legislation bearing on the merchant marine.

In addition to the approval of the above-mentioned legislation, the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee spent many days on hearings and consideration of labor-management problems in the American merchant marine. Realizing that a strong, healthy, and vigorous merchant marine is dependent, to a great extent, on satisfactory labor conditions, the committee tried to get at the facts thoroughly and objectively, and made its recommendations to the Congress.

An investigation into the activities of foreign freight forwarders and brokers was also held by the committee. The inquiry extended to the activities of forwarders on the export shipments of Government departments and agencies, and the export shipments of private commercial firms. These areas of activity have been the subject of many years of complaints and costly litigation, yielding only dissatisfaction and confusion.

As a result of the sinking of the schooner Marvel in the Chesapeake Bay last year, with the loss of 14 lives, the committee held hearings on legislation to require inspection and certification of certain vessels carrying passengers, and this has been enacted into law.

Another matter of concern to our Merchant Marine, were the efforts being made to repeal the Cargo Preference Act, better known as the 50–50 law. This law, passed in the last Congress, requires that 50 percent of all Government-financed commodities be transported by privately owned United States vessels, when they are available. This law is intended to provide additional work for American-flag ships. Since enactment, many charges were leveled against it, both by some of our own Government departments, and by foreign shipping associations. After a thorough investigation of the charges by the committee, which included weeks of hearings, the committee recommended to the House that it vigorously oppose all efforts to change or modify the present law.

The national wildlife system has developed slowly over a great many years, as the result of the efforts of many citizens, conservation organizations and official agencies. The tremendous growth of population, and the industrial and agricultural expansion of the country in recent years, has compelled the realization that the preservation of wildlife values can be achieved only through large-scale steps to preserve and manage suitable habitat areas for such purposes. Extensive committee hearings revealed that there is extreme administrative confusion in the administration of the laws governing the wildlife system. After careful study of the matter, the committee decided to try, for an experimental period of time, an arrangement between the Secretary of the Interior and the committee, under which each proposed alienation or relinquishment of any interest the Fish and Wildlife Service has in lands under its jurisdiction, would be submitted to the committee for approval or disapproval. If this arrangement does not work satisfactorily, the committee will recommend appropriate legislation.

SOCIAL SECURITY ACT AMENDMENTS

I was especially pleased with the passage of these amendments, as I believe this act must be continually reviewed, to make sure the benefits are kept abreast of economic developments, so that it serves the purpose for which it was intended. This legislation will affect more people in my district, than any other legislation enacted in this Congress, and is the greatest importance to them. Some of the major changes with respect to benefits under the law are:

First. It reduces the age at which women can qualify for old-age insurance benefits, or for benefits as the wife, widow, or dependent mother of an insured worker, from 65 to 62.

Second. It provides disability insurance benefits for certain persons who become disabled between the ages of 50 and 65.

Third. It provides child's insurance benefits to disabled children age 18 or over, in case the disability began before attaining age 18.

Fourth. It extends social-security coverage to lawyers, dentists, veterinarians, naturopaths, osteopaths, chiropractors, and optometrists.

Fifth. It provides matching Federal funds for medical care furnished by the States to recipients of old-age assistance, aid to dependent children, aid to the blind, and aid to the permanently and totally disabled up to a maximum average of $6 per adult and $3 per child receiving assistance. This is a new provision.

Sixth. It amends the matching formulas for grants to States for various forms of public assistance. For old-age assistance, aid to the blind and aid to the permanently and totally disabled, the new formula calls for Federal grants equal to four-fifths of expenditures up to $30—formerly $25—for any individual, plus one-half of expenditures between $30 and $60—formerly one-half of expenditures between $25 and $55. For aid to dependent children, it provides for grants equal to fourteen-seventeenths—formerly four-fifths—of expenditures up to $17—formerly $15—for each person for whom benefits are paid, plus one-half of expenditures over $17 which do not exceed the maximum of $32—formerly $30—for the adult, $32—formerly $30—for the first child and $23—formerly $21—for each additional child in the same home.

RAILROAD RETIREMENT ACTS AMENDMENTS

A bill to raise the limitation on the amount of railroad-retirement annuity to spouses to maximum payable under the Social Security Act, was approved in the first session. The bill just approved, increases benefits under the act by approximately 10 percent. However, it does not increase an annuity which now equals an annuitant's average monthly wage. An annuity which has already been increased to the social-security minimum, will be further increased only where that minimum is less than the amount computed under the regular railroad-retirement formula, as amended by this bill. The present maximum of $54.30 for a spouse's annuity remains unchanged. These changes are effective as of July 1, 1956.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEES AND ANNUITANTS

The merit system of Federal employment was improved and strengthened through the reorganization of the Civil Service Commission. The merit system was extended to 60,000 Federal employees by the granting of career-type appointments for indefinite Federal employees who were in positions in the competitive civil service on January 23, 1955, who had passed competitive qualifying examinations, or who would pass such examinations within 1 year, and who had 3 years of satisfactory service in the competitive civil service. A bill approved just recently, and which I sponsored, provided the same benefits for postal employees.

Classified Federal employees were given a salary increase of 7½ percent. An allowance was granted to all Government employees required to wear uniforms. Over one-half million Federal employees were bonded without charge. Where positions were placed in a lower grade due to reclassification, employees in those positions were protected from salary reductions.

The third of a series of increases in annuities for Federal employees already retired was approved. The Civil Service Retirement Act was completely rewritten, and some of its major provisions now are:

First. Annuities for Federal employees will be computed at (a) 2 percent of the average salary multiplied by all years of service in excess of 10, plus 1½ percent of such salary multiplied by the first 5 years of service plus 1¾ percent, multiplied by the years of service from 5 to 10 or (b) 1 percent of the average salary, plus $25 multiplied by the total years of service, whichever is greater. Under the prior law, annuities were computed on the basis of 1½ percent of the average salary, or 1 percent of such salary plus $25, multiplied by the total years of service, whichever is greater.

Second. The annuity of an employee retiring before reaching 60 will be reduced by 1 percent for each year the retiring employee is under age 60 and 2 percent for each year under 55. The prior law required a reduction of 3 percent for each year under 60.

Third. The annuity of an employee electing a survivor annuity will be reduced by 2½ percent of the first $2,400 and 10 percent of the balance.

Fourth. For disability benefits, the act establishes a minimum of 40 percent of the average salary, or the annuity which would have been earned at age 60, whichever is less.

Fifth. A reduced annuity is granted upon involuntary separation from service after attaining age 50 with 20 years of service. Heretofore an annuity was granted upon involuntary separation after 25 years of service, regardless of age. This provision is continued.

Sixth. Survivor annuities of an employee who dies after 5 years of service, or of a retired employee who dies, are increased by an average of 150 percent.

All of these measures and many others which were in the public interest and necessary for our economy or national defense had my support. This Democratic-controlled Congress has again proved that the interest and welfare of all the people, are its major concern and prime consideration, and as a result, was able, despite considerable opposition in many instances, to achieve a splendid record of a most constructive nature, which will have far-reaching effects.

A Partial Review of Republican Misrule

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. ABRAHAM J. MULTER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, I can think of no better prelude to my annual report to my constituents than to remind them of what I said at the close of each of the first 3 years of this Republican administration. For purposes of better comparison, I point out that during the 83d Congress which coincided with the first 2 years of the Eisenhower administration, the Republicans were in the majority in both Houses.

On August 3, 1953, I said:

SO THE TIME FOR A CHANGE ARRIVED, AND CREEPING SOCIALISM BECAME THE BIG GIVEAWAY WHILE THE LITTLE FELLOW LOST HIS SHIRT

Mr. Speaker, this is the true story—I wish it were a fairy tale—of an America grown up—but not wiser.

If what follows sounds political, believe me it is intentionally so. After all, politics, according to all lexicographers, is the science of government and this saga deals only with government—your Government.

If it sounds partisan it is so only because the members of the opposite political faith have slanted the record that way by their actions.

If what I say hurts, it is only because the sponsors of inimical policies have failed to provide any armor against the cruelties inherent therein.

With such brief apologia, let me proceed to tell this tale of woe.

For 20 years almost every attempt by Democratic leaders and legislators to improve the conditions of our country and to establish world peace and to expand man's divine right of equal opportunity to earn a livelihood with a decent standard of living, has been ridiculed, derided and opposed by members of the Republican Party. In all those years there was little or no constructive criticism. There was much carping and bitterness as phony labels were sought to be attached to every progressive step that was taken to benefit the citizenry of our country.

Home loans, farm loans, small-business assistance, housing and power, rural electrification and telephones, soil conservation and flood control, farm subsidies and fuel regulation, savings programs and bank deposit insurance, development of natural resources for the benefit of all, social security and unemployment insurance, protection of the right to work, improvement of the lot of the civil servant, protection of the veteran, particularly the maimed and disabled, assistance to the orphan, the widow and the helpless, aids to health, education, and the public welfare were all labeled "creeping socialism" and worse.

Only in the field of foreign policy was there any semblance of bipartisan cooperation for the best interests of the country. Even there it was only agreement on principle. Despite the fact that a Democratic administration sought and obtained only the best available men, regardless of political affiliation, thus putting as many Republicans as Democrats in charge of administration, the sniping never abated.

We were told:

Time for a change—stop the monster from creeping further into the Nation's vitals—drive it out—return the country to free enterprise—stop inflation—bring prices down—produce more—pay less—get more—balance the budget—cut expenditures—reduce taxes.

Repetition had its effect. Even those who knew better, began to succumb to the never-ending stream of propaganda.

At the psychologically correct moment, the knight in shining armor appeared on the scene, a truly great soldier, deservedly honored as a world hero. When he, unacquainted with the ways of politics, but in the best of faith and intentions, began to sing the same song, the melody was indeed sweet and the words most beguiling.

Logic and reason took flight. Fantasy and wishful thinking wafted many into the land of make-believe. What could we lose? Is a Republican mink coat—or is it sable—different from the Democratic one? Is it not time for a change? Few asked: A change to what or why or for whom? After all—we can always change back. Nor did they stop long enough to inquire: If the change should be for the worse, can we regain our losses?

Election day, 1952, came and with it the first change as the people willed it. A Republican President and a Republican Congress.

Eureka, but not yet Utopia.

Democrats, who for 20 years winced under the tongue lashing of the Republicans, remembered the Biblical injunction to do unto others as you would have them do unto you.

Like good American citizens, they bowed to the will of the majority.

They promised cooperation. They announced there would be only constructive criticism, no sniping, no back-biting, no invectives.

Came January 3, 1953, and the new Congress was sworn in and organized. They listened politely but impatiently and indifferently to the outgoing President. They waited for Inauguration Day.

Came Inauguration Day, January 20, 1953, and they listened, fearfully but enthusiastically, to the incoming President. And again they waited.

Be not impatient. Give them time. Give them a chance.

Time passed. And they acted—both the new President and the new Congress. Things happened. Not too much and, certainly, not too good.

Now as the 1st session of the 83d Congress comes to a close this fine summer day, August 3, 1953, would it be unfair if I stated the account, totaled the "do's" and the "don'ts," the "gives" and the "takes" and tried to get a balance—knowing full well that there will be little balance left for our fellow citizens.

Here goes:

Promise: A balanced budget.

Performance: More unbalanced than when the Republicans took over.

Promise: Spend less.

Performance: Spent more with an increase in future fixed charges of government.

Promise: Reduce taxes.

Performance: Increased by extending taxes due to expire.

Promise: A stabilized economy by reduction of prices and cost of living.

Performance: Higher prices to the consumer, higher costs to the home buyer, higher rents to the tenant, and lower prices to the farmer.

Promise: Reduce the national debt.

Performance: An attempt to increase it, prevented by an almost solid Democratic opposition in the Senate. It passed the House with 84 percent of the Republicans voting for it and 61 percent of the Democrats opposed.

Promise: A new foreign policy. Precisely what changes we were to expect were never told.

Performance: Absolutely no change in policy. The change in administration, however, is driving our friends and allies further and further away from us.

Promise: A new farm policy.

Performance: No change in policy. A change in administration that has antagonized the farmer who has voted 10 to 1 to continue the old policy.

Promise: A new tax program.

Performance: None presented. The only change is the reduction in individual income taxes effective January 1954, pursuant to a law enacted by the last Democratic Congress and signed by the last Democratic President. However, Mr. Taxpayer, do not spend that saving. The next session of this Republican Congress may take it away from you. They are even now threatening us with a Federal sales tax.

Promise: The Republican Party promised to keep the Taft-Hartley labor law intact. The Republican candidate for President said he recognized its inequities and promised amendments.

Performance: No change in that law.

Promise: Statehood for Hawaii and Alaska.

Performance: Nothing.

Promise: A change in our permanent immigration laws to liberalize them and remove the inequities and unfairness thereof.

Performance: No change. The temporary Refugee Immigration Act to admit 217,000 immigrants over a 3-year period was part of the Democratic program and was enacted only because of Democratic support.

Promise: To conserve the natural resources of the Nation.

Performance: Submerged oil lands given away. This was promised by the Republican candidate and he was supported by southern Democrats who campaigned for reelection on that pledge. Public power, TVA, AEC, and soil conservation programs gutted. Rubber plants ordered sold, RFC assets, including defense plants, ordered disposed of.

Promise: Encouragement and improvement of health and education programs.

Performance: Cutting the budgets for these programs.

Promise: A comprehensive civil-rights program.

Performance: Nothing.

Changes that we got even though not promised:

First. Hard money, that is, money that is harder to get.

Second. Higher interest rates on Government bonds, thus increasing the cost of Government and the burden of the taxpayer; higher rates on mortgages; higher rates on consumer's financing; higher rates on veteran's loans; higher rates on business loans; higher rates on State and municipal loans; higher rates on farmer's loans; higher rates on auto loans.

Third. Depreciation of Government bonds, some are selling as low as 92 cents on the dollar.

Fourth. Destruction of the public-housing program.

Fifth. Impairment of the morale of civil-service employees by executive orders emasculating the merit system.

Sixth. Decrease in veterans' benefits.

In sharp contrast to all of the foregoing is the conduct of the responsible Democratic Members of the Congress.

They offered bills to implement their party platform. They could get no hearings from committees controlled by the majority party.

They offered bills and amendments to bills to effectuate the President's program to the extent that it coincided with the Democratic program.

The press, time after time, referred to the passage of such bills as Eisenhower victories. Actually they were part and parcel of the Democratic platform. They could never have been enacted without Democratic votes. In most instances there were more Democrats than Republicans voting for those measures.

Notable among these measures were, first, extension of the President's power to reorganize the executive departments—if he does not economize in that field, the responsibility is solely his; second, establishment of the Cabinet post of Health, Education, and Welfare; third, rejection of the cut in funds for REA; fourth, prevention of the weakening of civil service; fifth, rejection of cut in funds for soil conservation; sixth, restoration of funds for aid to schools; seventh, continuance of a nonpolitical tariff commission; eighth, extension of reciprocal trade-agreements authority; ninth, prohibiting arbitrary denial of medical care to veterans; tenth, authorization and appropriation of moneys for foreign aid; eleventh, extension of the mutual-security program; twelfth, gift of wheat to starving Pakistanians; thirteenth, admission of 217,000 immigrants over 3-year period.

That is the record to date.

Even if President Eisenhower should not acknowledge that his program could never have been enacted without Democratic votes, we in the Democratic Party will continue to vote for what we believe is in the best interests of our country.

In the not too distant future, the electorate will have an opportunity to voice its approval or disapproval of the changes it got and of the changes it did not get.

Until then, we will do our duty as we see it—let the chips fall where they may.

On August 19, 1954, I said:

To Secure These Rights the Fight Must Go On

Mr. Speaker, at the close of the first session of this Congress, on August 3, 1953, I reviewed for my constituents the accomplishments, and lack thereof, of our distinguished body. I pointed out the great divergence between the pledges and promises by the Republican Party and its presidential candidate in 1952 and their performance or lack thereof as the majority party in power in 1953.

Another legislative year has now gone by. It is time again to take a look. Perhaps not a New Look, but certainly a good look, even though we know it will not look good. I intend today to reverse the usual form of stating first the facts and then the conclusion.

CONCLUSION

When the 80th Congress was dubbed the worst Congress of history, our contemporaries overlooked that worse than a "do-nothing Congress" is a Congress that does nothing but give away the birthright of a nation.

The 83d Congress and this Republican administration have earned the right to be charged with doing nothing but giving away the people's rights and property.

The balance of this report will be devoted to documentation of the foregoing conclusion.

HUMAN RIGHTS

This is an excellent time to refresh our memories with a quotation from our Declaration of Independence of these immortal words:

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their health and happiness."

Those principles have been written into our Constitution as rights accorded to our citizens, and with restrictions against any impairment by executive, judicial, or legislative action.

If they are to be changed, that change can be accomplished only by constitutional amendment.

Nevertheless, we have seen during these last 2 years, a complete disregard of those basic concepts.

Fear runs wild, and hysteria has taken over.

Laws have been enacted in violation of article I of the Constitution, prohibiting ex post facto laws and bills of attainder. An ex post facto law imposes punishment for past conduct which was not previously criminal. A bill of attainder imposes punishment upon a person or group without indictment and trial.

Laws and executive orders violative of the Bill of Rights, as contained in our Constitution, have been enacted and promulgated.

I have done my best to resist such utterly un-American conduct, first because it is fundamentally wrong and secondly, because it strengthens our enemies and weakens our will to withstand their totalitarian philosophy.

I favor the right, under safeguard of court order or search warrant, to obtain evidence, even by wiretapping, to convict criminals. I opposed the bill to give the right to use such evidence previously obtained without court order or search warrant.

I favor empowering the courts to require witnesses to testify in criminal proceedings by granting them immunity where otherwise some other criminal might escape trial. I oppose giving that right to Congress, because Congress is a legislative body and not a court. Congress is supposed to investigate solely for the purpose of legislating; it is not the FBI; it is not a grand jury; it is not a petit jury; it is not a judge; it is not a prosecutor; it is not a President with power to pardon. No legislative body in our entire American history has ever been blocked from legislating because a witness or group of witnesses refused to testify.

The best evidence that I am correct in that statement is that despite witnesses who have refused to testify about communism, the Congress has, nevertheless, enacted a law finding that the Communist Party is not a political party but a criminal conspiracy.

I agree with the finding, but urged that the law was a very bad one because it usurps the function of the judiciary.

The bill to outlaw the Communist Party violates every principle of good government. Aside from being a bill of attainder and an ex post facto law, it denies not only free speech but free thought; it denies the right of assembly and the right of petition for redress of wrongs. It is a completely totalitarian technique.

The manner in which these bills were foisted upon the Congress was even worse. Not only was gag rule imposed by limitation of debate, but they were brought before the House without having had adequate hearings, without reports for guidance of the Members, without copies of the bills, and under rules permitting no amendments.

That is the horribly terrifying manner in which a heretofore deliberative body struck down our liberties and impaired our freedom by pushing through in the closing days of this session bills which do violence to the things for which men and women have fought and died since before Magna Carta.

I attribute these bad bills to what has come to be known as McCarthyism. Those who contend that McCarthyism has alerted the country to the danger of communism must now concede that the direct result has been the creation of an unhealthy atmosphere of fear and suspicion which may easily destroy the very vitals of good government.

LIBERALISM VERSUS CONSERVATISM

Our President has repeatedly told us that as to human values and human rights, he is liberal, but as to property and property rights, he is conservative. It sounds good. I wish it were true. I will not repeat here the many failures of President Eisenhower to perform the pledges of Candidate Eisenhower. They have been previously documented. Let us today analyze what has happened under our President's leadership and thereby make apparent his and the Republican Party's fulfillment of the converse of his declared policy.

OPERATION GIVEAWAY, OR BUNDLES FOR BILLIONAIRES

The gift of the submerged-oil lands was camouflaged as a return to certain States of their property. You cannot return to a State what it never had. The United States Supreme Court three times ruled that these lands and rights never belonged to any State. As a matter of fact, most of them were bought with funds from the United States Treasury.

If Congress and the President had not given them away for the benefit of the big oil companies and not the few States involved as is claimed, the revenues from those lands would have been used to educate the children of every State of the Union.

OUR NATIONAL RESOURCES: CREEPING FAVORITISM

The Nation's resources have been the subject of a whole series of gigantic giveaways, beginning with the offshore oil bill endorsed by President Eisenhower.

Perhaps the most incredible giveaway of all deals with atomic energy. The people of the country have spent $12 billion of their tax money in developing an atomic-energy program. The Eisenhower administration and the Republican-controlled Congress, however, chose to set the wheels in motion for giving away the rights to atomic energy to the few private power monopolies. The most fantastic Republican proposition was the Dixon-Yates contract whereby a certain private group was granted contract rights to provide power without competitive bidding; it was arbitrarily selected for the benefit, although other firms offered to do the job more cheaply. The Eisenhower administration even offered to pay all their taxes for them and guarantee them against any loss. I am proud of my vote against the atomic energy giveaway.

The efforts to dispose of our synthetic-rubber and tin-smelting plants and the attempt to wreck TVA and our entire public power program, are more of the giveaway philosophy in action.

MONEY: HARDER TO GET

I spent considerable time and effort in opposing the Republican giveaway to bankers through higher interest rates. The so-called hard-money policy actually made money harder to get. Republican bankers took over the Treasury Department and promptly proceeded to raise the interest rate to the highest level since 1933. They sold Government bonds below par value to bankers who profited immensely from unnecessarily higher interest rates. I joined with other Members of Congress in protesting this giveaway to bankers, and my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD are quite numerous on this subject.

Not only did this hard-money policy constitute excessive profit for bankers, but it was perhaps the principal cause of the recession we have had. With interest rates excessively high, consumers and small-business men could not borrow money. As a result, mass unemployment occurred, causing a serious recession because of a lack of consumer purchasing power to buy the products of American industry.

The Eisenhower administration was disastrously slow in taking action against this recession; indeed, we still have close to 4 million Americans unemployed, with many more in jobs at only part time. Because of our constant pounding, the administration finally reversed itself and repudiated the hard-money policy, although its evil effects are regrettably still with us.

Call me a prophet of gloom, Mr. President. But it is your Secretary of Commerce who says that the gross national production is down $9 billion from 1953 to 1954, and it is your Federal Reserve Board that says that industrial production is down $12 billion from 1953 to 1954.

VETERANS' RIGHTS

Part of the liberal Republican policies was the increase of interest rates on veterans' mortgages. This was among the very first accomplishments of this administration.

As soon as we achieved a reversal of the hard-money policy, I started a campaign to decrease the veterans' loan interest rates to what they had been.

The chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, on the floor of the House, promised me such legislation would be enacted.

It has not even been reported to the Congress.

We did succeed in enacting a bill to increase veterans' pensions by 5 percent. Liberal, indeed. A monthly pension of $50 is now $52.50.

But all veterans' services—medical care, hospitalization, and the like—have been cut and cut more than 5 percent.

That was not being illiberal as to humans; it was being conservative as to money.

I have consistently supported measures to adequately compensate our Armed Forces and veterans for the sacrifices they make in the Nation's behalf. I have introduced bills providing free postage on letters to and from members of our Armed Forces, extra compensation for prisoners of the Korean war, income-tax exemption for members of the Armed Forces, and various adjustments to secure equitable pensions, compensation, and retirement pay.

THE CONSUMERS' POCKETBOOK AND THE FARMERS' PLIGHT

During these 2 years of Republicanism, the cost of living has reached an alltime high, as any shopper can testify and as Government statistics prove in black and white. Coupled with this record high cost of living have been the hardships caused by the recession, so that many millions of Americans have suffered reductions in their standard of living.

Particularly pernicious has been the price of food. Consumers are forced to pay twice for their food, first in their tax bill to the Government and then in the market place. There is something radically wrong with the present agricultural program, as I have often said in Congress. Official reports show that food prices to the consumer have actually risen, while prices to farmers have declined.

Yet the Republican leadership has done nothing to remedy this situation. The only solution the Secretary of Agriculture offers is to reduce farmers' incomes below their present level, despite his claim that no appreciable reduction in consumer food prices will result. The proposal I have made is to try the Brannan plan for all agriculture, which Candidate Eisenhower termed "moral bankruptcy," but which President Eisenhower has instituted for the wool industry.

The President and his agriculture experts pretend that a flexible price support program will reduce prices to the consumer and increase income to the farmer.

They continue in that fallacious claim even after they have proved themselves wrong.

We have never had rigid but only flexible price supports for the dairy industry.

One of the first things done by our Secretary of Agriculture, with the hearty approval of our President, was to drop price supports for this industry from 90 percent of parity to 75 percent.

Result: The farmer is getting less and the consumer is paying more.

That is not caused by any failure of the cut in prices to seep through.

I am talking about milk produced one day and sold the next day for which the farmer receives less and the consumer pays more.

How can they urge that any different result can come from products that will be stored for long periods of time.

Do not be fooled by any pretense that we will store less of the staples or basic commodities.

On the basis of the representations of the President and his Secretary of Agriculture that we will store more, this very session of Congress increased the buying, lending, and storing authority of the President and his Department of Agriculture from $6½ billion to $10 billion. That is in addition to all the billions to be taken out of storage and not charged to the authorization.

LABOR AND UNEMPLOYMENT

One of the most important Republican pledges was amendment of the Taft-Hartley law. I favored the elimination of the Taft-Hartley Act's repressive measures against organized labor. I have always sought to promote legislation fair to labor and management.

But, as you may remember, President Eisenhower reversed himself when he refused to go along with Secretary of Labor Durkin's program for labor legislation, which followed Candidate Eisenhower's promises. Mr. Durkin resigned. The Republican leadership did not allow Congress to pass on the bills seeking to right the wrongs of the Taft-Hartley Act.

I sponsored a number of bills in the labor field, but as usual the Republican leadership did nothing. One called for equal pay for equal work and an end to discriminatory wage practices against women. Still another case where the Republicans did nothing was the minimum wage. My bill called for an increase in the minimum wage from 75 cents to $1 an hour. Secretary of Labor Mitchell agreed there should be an increase, but President Eisenhower's economic report flatly opposed one.

The most serious problem in this field is that apparently the Republican Party is not concerned over the tremendous loss of earnings of the wage earners of our country. I have called attention to the millions of Americans without jobs, largely due to the administration's hard-money policy, and to the millions more earning smaller wages and working only part time.

In the present Congress, I have been a cosponsor of H. R. 9430, the Forand bill, dealing with unemployment-compensation standards. I introduced H. R. 1270 to permit an increase in earnings without loss of social-security benefits. My bill, H. R. 1277, called for income-tax exemption on annuities and pensions, a principle adopted in part in the new tax law.

This administration takes credit for enactment of a broader social-security law, but soft-pedals the fact that this was a New Deal-Fair Deal measure that was supported and fought for by Democrats during all the years Republicans were resisting it as creeping socialism.

PUBLIC HEALTH AND HOUSING

I have always insisted that effective government action must be taken to improve the national health. Proper medical care must be put within the reach of every American. It is a duty of the Government to assure that and to do it without socializing medicine.

Yet the Eisenhower budget cut cancer research 28 percent, heart disease research 33 percent, and the National Institutes of Health allotment 34 percent.

The so-called health reinsurance bill, the administration proposed, merely came to the aid of certain insurance companies, and did nothing for the health of the individual American man, woman, and child. The only public health in the bill was in its title. It made neither health nor insurance available to any citizen.

A similar situation was the Republican housing bill, which I called "a sham and a fraud upon the American people." I have long maintained a particular interest in public housing, and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is replete with my attempts to try to provide decent housing for all Americans. I proposed amendments to legislation to deal with FHA abuses, but Republicans joined as a unit to vote them down, as they did my efforts to prevent discrimination against minority groups and to provide low interest rates on housing loans and veterans' home loans.

However, the Republican leadership insisted on guaranteeing excessive profits for builders and lenders and blocked my efforts and those of my colleagues to write into law even the minimum number of public-housing units requested by the President.

Here too, the only public housing in the bill was in the title. I think it is outrageous that the people of this country should be denied an opportunity to live in decent shelter.

The so-called housing bill passed this year prevents any new public housing and effectively kills the program. The same bill, however, makes it easier for the bankers, mortgage lenders, and builders to get richer. It contains no real safeguards against a repetition of the FHA scandals now filling the newspapers. It does contain a provision subsidizing the mortgage lenders, guaranteeing them not only against loss, but also a profit, all at Government risk.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS: BEWITCHED, BOTHERED, AND BEWILDERED

The present world situation is one of crisis, and I have wholeheartedly supported the administration's continuation of the bipartisan policies initiated by prior Democratic administrations, including the point 4 program and foreign aid. I have urged the strengthening of our greatest potential instrument for peace, the United Nations.

Our position in world affairs, however, has worsened markedly under Republican leadership. World communism has increased, and we have lost much of the good will painstakingly built up by Democratic administrations with the non-Communist nations of the world. The present administration has cut our military strength and has foolishly tried to compensate for it by a series of transparently hypocritical slogans.

No one knows where we stand on anything. If you add up all the pronouncements made by the President, the Vice President, the Secretary of State, and assorted Republican leaders, the sum total is bluff and backtalk, threat, and retreat.

If the matter were not so very serious, we could sing Bewitched, Bothered, and Bewildered. We have learned a bitter lesson that Indochina could not be saved by the threats of Mr. Dulles and his colleagues. The situation in the Far East is bad.

The same muddled thinking is causing the situation in the Near East to worsen from day to day. This administration refuses to recognize that an enemy of a friend cannot be a friend and that you do not arm one who may use the arms against your friend.

I opposed the Bricker amendment, which would paralyze the President's right to conduct our foreign affairs.

I have supported the extension of reciprocal trade agreements and lower tariffs to aid our allies, even though the President backed down from the request he has termed "essential."

I have tried to build up friendly relations with the Latin American Republics, and with Italy, whose late Premier Alcide de Gasperi I had the pleasure of greeting on his visit here in 1951.

I have striven for peace in the Near East and the proper development of that new addition to the family of free nations, Israel.

OPERATION TAKEAWAY: GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

I have long felt that the Government should act as a model employer, and I have been deeply distressed by the methods of the present Republican administration as regards civil service. Aside from the reprehensible "numbers game" reflecting on many loyal civil servants, the Eisenhower administration has conducted the crudest sort of spoils system in taking away the jobs of Government employees for political reasons.

I have opposed the transfer of Government agencies from the New York and Brooklyn areas for political reasons, such as the Quartermaster Purchasing Agency and the diversion of contracts from the Brooklyn Navy Yard. I have sponsored bills to extend Federal compensation coverage to civil-defense workers, for longevity step increases in the civil-service scale, to exempt compensation and pensions from income tax, to excuse Government employees from work to permit them time to vote in elections, and similar measures aimed at making the Government an employer of which every citizen can be proud.

I realize full well the inadequate salaries paid civil servants, and I have supported proposed increases. Having worked as a railway mail clerk, I know the hardships of postal employees, and on their behalf have testified before the House Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

It is nothing less than reprehensible to deny postal and Federal employees a 5-percent increase in their pay. From the President down, every Republican concedes that these loyal men and woman are underpaid.

To deny them a pay increase unless we simultaneously provide additional revenue is a fraud and a sham. The subsidy given to business, by the Post Office Department alone, exceeds the entire amount of such increase. The dividend tax exemption alone exceeds the cost of such a pitifully inadequate increase. The additional depreciation tax cut to big business is about double that cost.

Conservative policy indeed, as to wages for the underpaid and liberal, as to tax cuts for the greedy.

IMMIGRATION

The inequities of our present immigration laws make a mockery of the splendid inscription on the base of the Statue of Liberty in New York Harbor. I was happy to serve as a cosponsor with Senator LEHMAN and many other Members of Congress of a bill designed to rewrite completely our immigration laws and to remove every trace of bigotry therefrom.

In addition, I introduced a bill calling for 240,000 special visas during the fiscal year 1953–54, and have sponsored many private bills for the relief of my constituents and their families.

In this field, as in so many others, the fight must go on, and I am confident that someday the faults of our present immigration system will be corrected. They still remain under President Eisenhower's administration, although candidate Eisenhower pledged prompt reform.

TAXES: THE TRICKLE-DOWN BILL

Surely no part of the activities of government is more important than taxation—and it is in this field that we find the most glaring and inequitable giveaway.

Ninety-two percent of American families have good reason to be unhappy about the Republican tax bill that is now the law of the land, for they do not own any corporation stock. This Republican Congress and administration, however, have given tax benefits to the 8 percent of American families who do. In fact, the Republican program of "bundles for billionaires" especially benefits only six-tenths of 1 percent of American families, who own 80 percent of all publicly held stock.

The new Republican tax law provides benefits for stockholders, to the detriment of those Americans who earn their income through the sweat of their brow. Let us take as an example two families, each with husband, wife, and 1 child, and an income of $5,000. One of these 2 families has an income consisting entirely of wages or salary; its income tax will be $420. The other family, with income entirely from stock dividends, will pay an income tax of only $328. Thus unearned income is to be taxed less than earned income of the same size.

Of course, the tax difference increases greatly as income increases. Seventy-three and seven-tenths percent of taxpayers with incomes over $25,000 reported dividend receipts, while only 4.5 percent of taxpayers with incomes under $5,000 did so. It is primarily those with incomes of $10,000 or more per year who report dividend receipts. I might point out further that the Eisenhower administration asked for much greater benefits for stockholders, but Democrats in Congress managed to cut them down.

This Republican tax bill gives corporations, and the 20 percent of American taxpayers with incomes over $5,000, 77 percent of the total tax benefits. The 80 percent of American taxpayers with incomes less than $5,000 get only 23 percent of tax relief, thanks to republicanism. It seems that the basis for Republican taxation is the old "trickle-down" idea, which we thought had disappeared forever; it gives the wealthy the benefit of tax relief although they need it least, in the hope that some of the benefit will trickle down to the great mass of the people. I am proud of my vote against the trickle-down tax bill.

I believe in giving tax relief to those who need it most. Ever since 1948 I have introduced resolutions calling for an increase in personal exemptions to $3,500 for heads of families as the first step in reducing taxes. But of course this was in conflict with the policy of the Republicans in control who insist on giving tax preference to those wealthy enough not to need it. One of my proposals, however, was partially carried into effect: An exemption will be provided for the first $1,200 of retirement income. Another of my proposals gained some ground, too; child-care allowances were provided, but much less than adequate and much less than I called for in my bill.

One further fact should be mentioned here about taxes, because Republicans are very unlikely to mention it themselves; the general 10-percent decrease in individual taxes that became effective the first of this year was passed by a Democratic Congress and signed by a Democratic President. The Republican tax bill is the one benefiting the well-to-do, and that is the giveaway I opposed.

Please understand, I am not opposed to eliminating double taxation. But I insist that inequities be remedied equally. The taxpayer earning interest on a savings account is entitled to the same relief as a taxpayer receiving dividends on stock. Furthermore, if we cannot remove all inequities because we will lose too much revenue, do not select one class as against another.

Do not increase and continue depreciation and depletion allowances at the expense of the wage earner. If we cannot save taxes for all, save taxes for him first. He spends all of his earnings almost as fast as he gets them. That is what makes for prosperity.

CIVIL RIGHTS AND BROTHERHOOD

Unfortunately, the Republican leadership defeated my efforts to prohibit discrimination in regard to public housing projects, and did nothing about my measures to prevent Federal aid to National Guard units practicing discrimination and to secure similar acts to guarantee civil rights for all.

I have always recognized the role of religion in life, and I have been privileged to participate in many religious and interfaith activities.

Although I recognize the separation of church and state guaranteed by our Constitution, I appreciate that the fundamental principles of civil rights are based on the brotherhood of man under the fatherhood of God.

We can legislate on these principles intelligently only if we understand them. We understand them only if we know religion.

That is why I constantly direct my colleagues' attention to the activities of all religious groups and do my utmost to stir them into action against all antireligious groups and activities.

In opposing McCarthyism and in deploring the current wave of hysteria in this country largely inspired thereby, I do not lessen my hatred of communism and all its works. My constituents may well remember the campaign of 1948 when my opponent was Lee Pressman, once described as the No. 1 Communist of the country. In that year the Communists spent a quarter of a million dollars trying to defeat me, and I was viciously attacked because of my vigorous anticommunism. I am happy to associate myself with the remarks of the Most Reverend Bernard J. Sheil, auxiliary bishop of Chicago and a leading Roman Catholic churchman and genuine anti-Communist. He said, among other things:

"I take it that a genuine anti-Communist is one who despises the court methods of the Communists. I take it he hates the Communist idea that one is guilty until proved innocent. I take it that the genuine anti-Communist is one who above all believes in the democratic procedures and is willing to stand by them. even in the face of great temptations to lose one's temper and to lose one's faith in the methods of freemen."

I am proud to stand alongside him in this vital fight for our civil liberties.

I am the only Member of any Congress who had an opponent who dared to avail himself of the privilege of running for office under the name and emblem of the Communist Party.

I am also proud of the autographed photograph given me by one of the great statesmen of the free anti-Communist world, the late Premier Alcide de Gasperi of Italy, for my efforts in behalf of Italy's fight against communism. Indeed, when I think that a certain Senator first discovered communism in 1950, 2 years after I had opposed and defeated communism in a congressional election; when I think of my votes for foreign aid to bolster the anti-Communist allies of this country and the contrast with his votes against all foreign aid; when I think of his apparent objective, the catching of headlines rather than Communists, and the demoralizing effect of his wave of fear, then I am certain that even my humble efforts have done more against communism than his ever will.

I have called attention to the McCarthyite actions of the staff of the Reece investigating committee, branding as communistic the encyclicals of two Popes of the Catholic Church. I have opposed—even when almost alone—the serious threats to our civil liberties posed by actions taken during a wave of hysteria, when some legislators abdicated their responsibilities because of fear. In my position, I have been happy to coincide with the views of J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the FBI, and Judge Harold Medina, who presided over the trial which resulted in the conviction of the top Communists of the country.

THE FOLKS BACK HOME

It is with mixed humility and pride that I present this report. It is with humility, because I recognize my responsibility as a servant of my constituents and of the public interest. It is with pride, because I have never failed to carry out a campaign pledge, and because I have consistently striven to serve the public interest as I saw it to be.

My services have always been at the disposal of my constituents. I have never failed to try to help with their individual problems so far as I was able to do so. I joined with my colleagues in trying to keep local Federal services operating efficiently and at a maximum.

Some criticism has been leveled at me for eulogizing a departed former Member. It is traditional for the dean of a State delegation to lead in such a eulogy and for other Members to join him, regardless of political beliefs. One Protestant and four Catholic Members joined two Jewish Members on that occasion.

While I do not expect the electorate to agree with me at all times on all matters, at least we will make every effort to understand one another so that our respect for each other will survive our disagreement.

That is the American way.

On August 2, 1955, I said:

HOBGOBLINS AND REALITIES

Mr. Speaker, before the start of our legislative session, the President had great misgivings about the coming months. He reprimanded the voters of the Nation because they chose to send Democrats to Congress, while the administration was of the opposing political faith. He forecast that a Republican administration would not have the support of a Democratic Congress. During the 1954 congressional campaign, he even foresaw the possibility of a cold war within Government which could destroy the Nation's unity at this crucial time.

The same kind of talk from a Democratic President would have been labeled in the one-party press either as intended to scare our people or as an insult to our intelligence. Coming from the leader of the Republican Party, that same part of our American press repeated the reckless charge as though it were unimpeachable gospel.

How disappointing it must be to them to find that the hobgoblins and the gremlins disappeared into thin air even before the 84th Congress opened.

Now that the first session of this Congress has closed, the American people are entitled to the full story.

Even though an ardent Democrat, I will not pretend that none of my Democratic colleagues made any mistakes, nor that there was no occasion when some of my Republican colleagues did vote right. I do proclaim, however, as loudly as I can, that my Democratic colleagues voted right more frequently than my Republican colleagues and conversely, that the Republicans voted wrong more frequently than the Democrats—too frequently for the good of our country.

Let us now proceed to analyze the record.

The President greatly underestimated the caliber and character of the Democratic majority. He now admits that the political responsibility of the Democratic-controlled Congress made the successes of this session possible. The proof of Democratic leadership and support—the willingness to lay aside political antagonism, and jealousies—is a part of the record.

It is with great pleasure that I review these accomplishments. In doing so, we must have in mind that what is right or wrong is not determined by who sponsors a proposal, nor by which party supports it. The determination must be based on the sole test of what is best for the greatest number of our people.

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS: UNITY AND STRENGTH

Nowhere is the story of cooperation and responsibility better illustrated than in the areas of foreign policy and national defense. The world situation threatens to remain a precarious one for many years to come. Although the great ideological conflicts between East and West show some indication of being eased, few are shortsighted enough to believe that the aims of international communism have changed so completely in so short a time. If these differences between East and West cannot be settled or at least compromised, the alternative is a global atomic war from which no side could emerge victorious. While urging thorough exploration of every path that might lead to world peace, the Democratic Party stood as one man in favor of keeping our guard up and our defenses strong enough to withstand a sneak attack. In our system of government the President and his State Department must assume the leadership in the realm of international affairs. Congress responded by supporting them completely on every major issue. The President was authorized to use United States military forces in defending Formosa and the nearby Pescadores Islands. Executive agreements were ratified establishing a mutual-defense treaty with Nationalist China and a NATO-type defense alliance for southeast Asia.

Despite overwhelming sentiment in the Congress for it, the executive branch of our Government took no firm or realistic step toward establishing permanent peace in the Near East.

The occupation of Germany was ended so that she could be armed and brought into the European defense system. Austria was reestablished as an independent and democratic state.

To carry out our foreign policy aims, Congress authorized $3.2 billion for economic and military aid to foreign countries.

To encourage the benefits of international trade, the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act was extended for 3 years so that the President has the full authority to continue his efforts to promote our foreign affairs. A bill simplifying our complicated and outmoded system of customs definition, classification, and rate structure was passed by the House of Representatives and awaits Senate approval in the next session of Congress.

A manpower reserve program was put into effect which provides for a trained military reserve of 3,900,000 men by 1959. Such a program, the President told us, will avoid the cost and inconvenience of a large standing army, while at the same time providing for the national defense. It was necessary, nevertheless, to extend the selective-service law for 4 more years, including the draft of doctors and dentists for 2 more years. I am far from satisfied with either of these laws, but believe they are the best compromise we could get at this time.

Atomic-energy projects were authorized to the extent of $237 million for research facilities and actual production of atomic peacetime projects, as well as atomic weapons. Funds were also authorized for the expansion of existing aeronautical research, for construction of foreign military bases and housing, and for a billion-dollar Navy shipbuilding program.

The only issue on which Congress and the administration clashed was the relatively minor one involving Marine Corps manpower. Congress refused to bow to the Republican demand for a 22,000-man cut in this important military unit.

All in all, the Democratic Congress was happy to follow a foreign-policy program whose principles were enunciated by President Truman and Secretary of State Acheson, several years ago. The result has been a satisfying one. American prestige has grown abroad; the cold war tensions have lessened, if only temporarily, and a period of diplomatic negotiation has been vigorously begun. Democratic support, far from being absent, has been consistently greater than the support of the President's own party. Because of this support, the United States has been able to demonstrate its strength and unity.

SOCIAL LEGISLATION: FOR THE MANY AND NOT THE FEW

In domestic matters, of course, there was no comparable need for unanimity of thinking. The Democratic majority acted according to its political and economic principles and clashed with the administration where there was substantial difference. Once again, however, Mr. Eisenhower's forecast of a cold war was completely unfounded. The Democratic opposition to administration policies was as intelligent and high-minded as it was determined. There was no opposition merely for opposition's sake.

In the area of social legislation, several of the administration's proposals were extensions of earlier New Deal and Fair Deal ideas. These found enthusiastic Democratic support as far as they went—but often they did not go nearly far enough. Increased railroad retirement benefits, better FHA mortgage insurance coverage, and improved surplus property disposal to schools and hospitals were implementations of the Democratic program. Other parts of the administration program, however, proved quite inadequate.

A minimum wage proposal of $0.90 per hour, unreal at a time of high prices and general prosperity, was changed to a $1 minimum. This increase over the old $0.75 minimum will help keep industries from "running away" to the South and West where labor is so much cheaper, as well as preserve a decent wage for all American workers. More important, it raises the standard of living of all our citizens, nationally and not sectionally.

The administration's housing bill asked for only 35,000 public-housing units and made them well-nigh impossible of construction by improper restrictions. Congress increased the low-rent provisions by 10,000 additional units and eased the requirements to enable more extensive and better-balanced housing projects. Such liberalization of the law is necessitated by the acute housing shortage and the slum clearance needs of our urban centers.

To cure the unfortunate polio vaccine mixup, Congress authorized $2 million more than was asked by the President. In addition, all necessary funds are to be made available to the States to purchase enough vaccine for one-third of all the unvaccinated children, plus all expectant mothers. A more extensive and a better program was opposed by the administration as unnecessary and a step toward socialized medicine. The threat of a veto of the entire program effectually prevented the enactment of control legislation. Obviously, this administration is willing to risk black markets which may destroy the health of our people.

In appropriations for general matters of health, education, and social welfare, the Congress added more than $17 million to the Eisenhower program. The Congress felt that these were matters in which false economy was extremely dangerous. We were not willing to hear the responsibility of holding back research programs on cancer, heart disease, arthritis, and mental health so that the Federal budget might be a fraction of 1 percent lower. This, too, points up a basic difference of philosophy. The Democrats believe in being liberal with money to conserve the health of our people.

So too, an attempt to liberalize the social security laws and make the program more adequate to meet today's problems was stoutly opposed by the Republican administration. The Democratic majority in the House of Representatives overwhelmingly passed a bill to lower retirement age for women from 65 to 62, to allow disability benefits to 250,000 workers aged 50 or more, to continue disability benefits for children after age 18, and to extend coverage to the professions. Administration opposition in the Senate defeated this program there, although the need for such legislation has become more and more apparent in recent years.

Throughout the consideration of these matters, the Republicans consistently showed themselves for what they are—a party dedicated to the few rather than the many; a party which is more interested in budgetary figures than hunman needs; a party seeking to carry out a minimal social program at a minimal expense. Plenty of lip service, but no votes.

BUSINESS AND TAXATION: THE LITTLE FISH IN A BIG POND

The Eisenhower administration has time and again denied that it is an administration of, by, and for big business. And yet the record clearly shows that almost all of the major economic policies which seek to help the small-business man have orginated among the Democratic Members of Congress and have been opposed by the Republican administration.

The Small Business Administration, an agency dedicated to the plight of small business, was extended for 2 years. The administration opposed any increases in its authorized funds. The amount of any individual loan was increased to $250,000. These loans are intended for those deserving small-business men who cannot get help from regular bank sources. The disaster loan program and the small business participation in Government procurement were strengthened. The lending function together with the help given to small business in geting a fair share of Government procurement contracts makes SBA one of the most important agencies to have been started in recent years.

This is one of the few domestic policies, which in principle, has been consistently supported by both parties.

Bills were passed to halt the growing monopolistic practices in business. The antitrust penalty for violation of the Sherman Act was raised from $5,000 to $50,000. It was evident that $5,000 to a large corporation is merely a petty-cash transaction which was no deterrent to such a potential violator. In addition, the House passed a bill to curb the influence of bank holding companies by requiring Federal approval of new bank acquisitions by holding companies and requiring those companies to divest themselves of their nonbanking interests. This bill is designed to preserve the small independent bank as the banking unit best able to serve the interest of the small-business men. In the area of taxes, most of the existing income, corporate and excess-profits taxes were extended for another year. The only important proposal for tax relief came from the Democratic side of the Senate and the House of Representatives. Although this concerned a mere $20 cut in personal income taxes for each taxpayer and each dependent—relief aimed at the lowest-income bracket, yet equally fair to all income brackets—the Republican administration forcefully rejected the idea and caused its defeat in the Senate after the House had given its approval.

ARMED SERVICES AND VETERANS: SOMETHING FOR SOMETHING

Thanks to Democratic support, the serviceman and veteran were not forgotten during the past few months. Those who were in the service as of Janury 31, 1955, were allowed to go on building up GI schooling benefits until discharged from the service. The Veterans' Administration direct-loan program was extended for another 2 years and was broadened to include home improvements as well as home purchases. Disabled veterans, including those who fought in Korea, were given the privilege of starting purchase of a special automobile before October 1956.

To help the buildup of a strong backbone of career servicemen—an essential supplement to the new military Reserve program—Congress raised the pay and created greater benefits for servicemen as an incentive to a military career. Finally, Congress decided to continue regular pay to the dependents and relatives of missing or captured men who had fought in Korea.

The feeling was strong in the Congress that our Government should do as much as it could for the men who defend our country and are called upon to make great sacrifices. This program was both an expression of gratitude of the American citizen and a means of compensation for their sacrifices.

TRANSPORTATION: BUT NOT AT ANY COST

The pressing need to bring the Nation's transportation system up to date was apparent to the leaders of both parties. Airport construction was encouraged to the extent of $252 million in grants-in-aid to the States for 4 years.

In advocating a nationwide highway-construction program, the Eisenhower administration asked that the 10-year program be financed with special high-rate bonds. This would have involved at least $2.7 billion in unnecessary interest payments to bankers and other bondholders. The administration proposal was another unfortunate example of special-interest legislation which the Democratic majority has refused to stomach. The Democratic majority almost unanimously rejected this. They proposed in its place a system of user taxes on gasoline and tires, a plan by which those who benefited by the construction of the highways would pay their cost. Opposition to this proposal arose from many sources and the House defeated the bill even though the Senate had given its approval. The Republican opposition was almost unanimous.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEES: MORE OF THE SAME

With regard to the pay of Federal employees, the administration insisted it would approve only a straight 5 percent increase, while conceding the employees were entitled to more. The Democrats once again felt this to be bad business and false economy, having in mind how much Government workers' pay had lagged behind the cost-of-living increases and comparable wage increases among other workers throughout the country. We prevailed, though not to the full extent. Increased pay bills for more than the administration recommended were passed and approved.

THE GIVEAWAYS: BIGGER AND MORE

The minks are now sables. The 5-percenters are 10-percenters. Teapot Dome was a drop in a bucket compared to Dixon-Yates. First they gave away our oil lands. Now they are trying to give away all the rest of our natural resources.

The projects in which big business would not risk its stockholders' money are now beginning to pay back the taxpayer his investment. So the administration will now get the Government out of business by giving to big business the taxpayers' property.

To help do this our Government now uses WOC's. That is the old dollar-a-year man. He now works for us "without compensation." Big business pays him and lends him to the Government for nothing. For nothing to the taxpayer, but not for nothing to his private employer. He merely steers the Government business to his employer. He sits in on all the highlevel policymaking conferences, either as the head of the department or as his consultant. Maybe he does not give his private employer any advance information. Maybe he does not write the specifications that only his private employer can bid on. Maybe I am speculating. Then why did Secretary of Commerce Weeks refuse to tell a congressional committee what his big business advisers do? Why was it necessary to employ as a top executive in the Container Division of that Department, the Washington "special representative," on the payroll as such, of the country's largest container corporation? The testimony showed this man knew nothing about the business.

The full story is being developed now and promises to be the biggest scandal of our history.

THE FARMER AND THE CONSUMER: THEY NEED EACH OTHER

I have supported the Democratic farm program because I am convinced that neither farmer nor consumer can prosper alone. They live and prosper together, or not at all.

The Eisenhower farm program will destroy our country.

Our warehouses are bursting at the seams. Some because they are overloaded. Others because this administration bought and paid for defective storage facilities.

In various parts of the country there is unemployment so serious that our people are starving while surplus commodities in Government warehouses are rotting away.

Under 20 years of Democratic administration the farm program sustained losses of $1 billion. In less than 2½ years of Republican administration the farm program lost $2½ billion.

In 20 years under the Democrats, the maximum authorization for the program was $6¾ billion. In 2½ years under the Republicans, the Eisenhower administration increased it to $12 billion.

If you do not think cheese smells ask Secretary Benson to explain about the millions of dollars he just handed to—no not the farmers—to the big cheese processors.

FISCAL POLICY: I HOPE YOU CAN ADD

Candidate Eisenhower promised to balance the budget. Of course, you know he was fooling. President Eisenhower, thinking you took Candidate Eisenhower seriously, has hastened to explain that he did not say when.

But he did promise as President, that if we increased the national debt limit in 1954 to $281 billion, he would cut back the increase in 1955. In the last days of this session, he sent word to your Congress that he could not keep his promise and that we must give him another year in which to do what he said needed only 1 year to do.

Let us not be too hard on him. I think that you, too, would have trouble with that much money. I know that I would.

MY OWN PROJECTS: SOMETHING FOR THE FUTURE

Every Congressman has his own particular interests that he hopes to see enacted. Throughout the years I have been able to gain the approval of many proposals while others still await congressional approval. Without attempting to set them forth in the order of their importance, some of the proposals I hope to see enacted in the near future are: low-income housing for the aged; a complete civil-rights program; revision of the refugee relief and immigration laws; no discrimination or segregation in National Guard units; measures to keep racist and defamatory literature out of the mail; power to the President to act in health matters in case of a national emergency; strengthening of our antitrust laws to help keep the small-business man as the backbone of our free-enterprise system; income-tax deductions for all educational expenses of dependents and exemptions for servicemen serving overseas; prevention of the giveaway programs of Government rights and property; free postage to and from members of the Armed Forces; a review of all disapproved veterans' claims by the United States Court of Claims; a sound and just security program that will weed out the disloyal, without destroying the loyal; a system of standby economic controls for the prevention of inflation; a system of allocations and priorities of fuel for emergencies; a Department of Civil Defense within the Department of Defense, with strengthened authority; greater consideration of consumer problems by establishing a congressional committee therefor, as well as an executive department to protect the consumer; better pay for Federal employees; equal pay for equal work by women; and a code of ethics in Government for Government officials which, among other things, will prevent big business from acquiring our birthright.

CONCLUSION: RESPONSIBILITY AND INTELLIGENCE

The record of the Congress this year has been a mixed one. And this is far from a complete record. It is merely a brief summary. Some of the more important legislation that might have been enacted this year has been left until next year.

The accomplishments, nevertheless, have been solid ones—the very opposite of what the Republican leaders told the American people to expect.

The moral of this story may be simply stated; the opposition to the administration by the Democratic majority has been intelligent and responsible. Where differences have existed between administration and Congress, there has been a give-and-take and compromise worthy of democratic institutions. The people of this country were not neglected by their Government in favor of partisan politics and petty jealousies. The Democrats of this country have a right to be proud of that record.

RECESS BUT NOT RESPITE

Although Congress is about to recess until January 1956, your Congressman will continue to serve you. His office—your office—is room 1305, New House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C. It will remain open and fully staffed throughout the year. If visiting Washington, feel free to come in. If you have a problem that you think your Congressman can help you solve, write him a note to that address. He may not be able to help you, but you may be sure he will try.

Report to the People of the 12th Congressional District of New York

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. FRANCIS E. DORN
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. DORN of New York. Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of this 2d session of the 84th Congress, I sent a questionnaire to the people of the 12th Congressional District of New York, whom I have the honor to serve. The response to the questionnaire was most pleasing and in order that they may know the results I list the questions and answers:

First. Do you feel that, on the whole, President Eisenhower's recommendations to the Congress should be supported? Seventy-six percent yes. Eleven percent no. Thirteen percent no opinion.

Second. Do you favor: (a) Continuing foreign military aid? Fifty percent yes. Thirty-six percent no. Fourteen percent no opinion.

(b) Continuing foreign economic aid? Fifty percent yes. Thirty-seven percent no. Thirteen percent no opinion.

Third. Do you approve additional Federal expenditures to develop and apply atomic and hydrogen energy to peaceful purposes? Three percent yes. Eighty-seven percent no. Ten percent no opinion.

Fourth. Do you approve amending the McCarran-Walter Immigration Act? Forty percent yes. Thirty-nine percent no. Twenty-one percent no opinion.

Fifth. Do you favor reduction of taxes before balancing the budget? Twenty-six percent yes. Sixty-six percent no. Eight percent no opinion.

Sixth. Do you approve direct Federal grants to States for education? Forty-eight percent yes. Forty-four percent no. Eight percent no opinion.

Seventh. Do you favor requiring registration of union pension and welfare funds and disclosure of financial transactions involving them? Eighty-eight percent yes. Nine percent no. Three percent no opinion.

Eighth. Do you favor an increase in postal rates to meet the postal deficits? Sixty-six percent yes. Thirty percent no. Four percent no opinion.

Ninth. Do you approve making all women eligible for old-age insurance benefits at 60 years of age instead of 65? Sixty-six percent yes. Thirty-two percent no. Two percent no opinion.

Tenth. Do you favor Federal plans for reinsuring privately run voluntary hospitalization and surgical insurance? Thirty-eight percent yes. Fifty-three percent no. Nine percent no opinion.

Eleventh. Do you favor continuation of the Federal low-rent public housing program? Fifty-one percent yes. Forty-seven percent no. Two percent no opinion.

Twelfth. Should the United States sell surplus farm commodities to Iron Curtain countries? Thirty-six percent yes. Fifty-nine percent no. Five percent no opinion.

Thirteenth. Do you favor free Federal medical treatment of veterans for non-service-connected disability? Twenty-six percent yes. Seventy-one percent no. Three percent no opinion.

On the 14th question, "If the 1956 presidential election were to be held today, whom do you favor?", 65 percent favored President Eisenhower, 12½ percent favored Mr. Stevenson, with the remaining 22½ percent distributed among 30 other candidates, no one of whom polled more than a partial percent. Thirty-six percent favored continuing Vice President NIXON in his present role, with 8 percent for Senator KEFAUVER for Vice President. The remaining percentage was given to 60 suggestions ranging from purely local names to national figures.

A study of the answers reveals a growing interest in good government. I am deeply appreciative that so large a number replied, and that so many took time to write additional comments.

The answers and comments were of great value to me in considering legislation upon which I had to vote. I intend to continue this procedure, if reelected, in order to know the views of the people whom I represent.

Despite television, radio, and all the advances that have been made in the field of communications in recent years, there is no substitute for personal visits by which a Member of Congress may learn the views of the people of his district and render to them the best possible service. As I have done on Saturdays this year and in previous years, I shall continue to travel throughout the district in my trailer office, meeting my constituents. It has been a pleasure to discuss with them legislation in which they were interested, national defense, veteran and social-security benefits, Academy appointments, immigration procedures, and business and personal problems.

The achievements of the present Republican administration under the leadership of President Eisenhower can be expressed in words understood by all—peace, prosperity, and progress.

PEACE

At the time President Eisenhower took over our boys were being killed in Korea. Today we have peace. Notwithstanding the troubled state of the world, arising from numerous and varied questions, creating problems that are new each day and causing deep concern, yet the fact remains we are at peace and our boys are not being called upon to die on foreign battlefields.

PROSPERITY

Today, as a people, we enjoy a degree of prosperity that exceeds that of the people of any other country in all the world. Our employment exceeds the fabulous figure of 65 million workers.

Our national production in value reaches toward $400 billion. All of this has enabled us to enjoy a standard of living that exceeds any other period in our Nation's history.

PROGRESS

Innovations in the social-security program which would give additional benefits to about 1,225,000 workers of this Nation.

The 2 major changes in the Social Security Act would, first, allow physically or mentally disabled workers to obtain cash benefits at age 50; and, second, reduce the retirement age of women workers from 65 to 62. The disability plan will take effect on January 1, 1957, and make about 250,000 more persons eligible for benefits.

The lowering of the age limit for women workers will provide benefits for about 325,000 workingwomen and 275,000 wives of workingmen. The bill also will provide benefits to about 175,000 widows at age 62. The measure also extends old-age and survivors insurance coverage to about 200,000 lawyers, dentists, and other self-employed persons who have been excluded from social-security coverage.

In an effort to improve the various veterans' programs of this grateful Nation, the Congress this year appropriated $4.7 billion for all veterans' benefits. This Nation has the greatest veterans' program of any nation in the world. This program includes education and training, insurance, housing, compensation and pensions, medical services, and many other benefits for veterans and their dependents.

Raised the minimum wage from 75 cents to $1 per hour; approved a 4-year program to stimulate airport construction; extended the life of the Small Business Administration and increased the revolving fund for loans to small business; strengthened our antimonopoly law and passed a law to curb the influence of large bank-holding companies.

Enacted improved housing laws, providing special aid in this respect to our elderly citizens; approved dynamic, farsighted programs for medical and dental research, for the training of public health personnel, and for hospital construction; and passed several laws which are specifically designed to benefit our youth.

Railroad retirement: Railroad retirement pensions were increased by 10 percent.

Civil service retirement: The Civil Service Retirement Act was liberalized and improved, thus benefiting the millions of postal and Federal employees.

On the international scene, we have authorized and appropriated $3.8 billion to continue and implement our mutual security agreements. The Congress has taken note of the increasing dissatisfaction of the people at home with the use of so much of our funds abroad. We have exercised our right over the purse strings of the Nation and decreased, so far as was commensurate with our security abroad, the funds authorized for this purpose. At the same time, we voted a ban on practically all future military aid to Yugoslavia. Our administration has taken note of this feeling also, as was evidenced by the recent withdrawal by the State Department of its offer of financial aid to Egypt for construction of the Aswan High Dam.

For our national defense, we have appropriated over $34½ billion for the armed services for the fiscal year. We have increased by $72 million the 1956 fiscal year authority for appropriations for construction of aircraft control and warning system; we have authorized a $1.4 billion program of naval construction and conversion for 1957, including a nuclear powered cruiser and a 60,000-ton aircraft carrier.

At this point, and with pleasure, I point out that construction of the new aircraft carrier, the CVA 64 has been assigned to our own New York Naval Shipyard—the "Know-How Yard." Delegations representing the top skilled workers from the yard came to Washington, and with them I presented to the Secretary of the Navy the compelling reasons why our yard should build the new carrier. I was proud to be the spokesman for these fine men and am humbly grateful for the many expressions of appreciation I have received from the locals represented. This new construction means continued employment for over 16,000 men—6,000 more than before the Korean war.

In addition to my work in studying and voting on legislation which has been brought to the floor, I personally have sponsored measures which I thought were deserving of House consideration. One among these was a bill to amend the Social Security Act to prevent the payment of any pensions thereunder to individuals who have been convicted of espionage, sabotage, or subversive activities. I do not believe such persons should receive benefits from the very Government they seek to destroy.

Spurred by the inability of the FBI to act immediately in kidnaping cases, I introduced a bill designed to permit this fine agency to take immediate action.

One of the most important measures I introduced was designed to establish a commission to study the shortage of doctors of medicine in the United States. The New York Times, in commenting on the situation which so sorely needs study, said:

> Even with scheduled expansion American medical colleges cannot meet the demand for doctors needed or for admission of above-average students who want to study; 2,000 American students are studying medicine abroad and this source of training will become increasingly important.

The bill has met with enthusiastic response.

In the preceding paragraphs I have tried to show you, the people of the 12th Congressional District of New York, how I have personally tried to serve you. You are the people who elected me to represent you in the Congress of the United States. If there is any way in which I can be of service to you in my congressional capacity, please do not hesitate to call upon me. Both my Washington and Brooklyn offices remain open. I have a competent staff, and my services and theirs are yours. I want you to know that even when the Congress is not in session, I am on the job.

America Faces the World Challenge—Will Meet the Oil-Suez Crisis Successfully

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ALEXANDER WILEY
OF WISCONSIN
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, as the 84th Congress concludes its session, we may well look forward to a most challenging period up ahead—challenging in both domestic and foreign affairs.

Events are moving so fast at home and abroad as to almost awe the imagination of man.

I ask unanimous consent that in the final edition of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD there be printed a statement by myself on the subject of America Faces the World Challenge.

I shall make particular reference to one phase of that challenge—the world petroleum problem, as tied up with the Suez crisis and the whole unfortunate problem of possible foreign nationalization of private resources.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR WILEY

"Will the Middle East countries some day make the tragic mistake of nationalizing oil? Will the Arab lands eventually commit the blunder of taking over foreign petroleum resources—the oilfields, the refineries, the pipelines?"

Those are the big questions in the minds of thinking people throughout the free world. Those questions loom behind the serious controversy over Egyptian nationalization of the Suez Canal.

The free world certainly hopes the tragic mistake of nationalization will not occur.

WE HAVE FAITH REASON WILL PREVAIL

Actually, it is our hope that reason and judgment and fair play will instead prevail. We trust that a sense of enlightened self-interest, a sense of playing by the rules of the game, the rules of contracts—will prevail in the Middle East.

We hope tempers will cool. Bitterness should subside. Commonsense should take over, as world diplomacy brings the full power of moral persuasion to bear.

The free world knows—even if all the leaders of the Arab lands may not know—that nationalization of the oil in the ground, of the pipelines which carry it or the refineries which process it—would be a calamity to the Middle East and a tragedy for the free world. Such a ruinous step—if it occurred—would work to the disadvantage most of all—of the Arab governments and peoples themselves.

MUCH MISUNDERSTANDING OF NATIONALIZATION PROBLEM

Unfortunately, there is a great deal of misunderstanding of precisely what is involved in this nationalization controversy.

Some few fuzzy-minded people in the West may tend to go along with the nationalization concept. They may do so on the ground, they say, that it is "within the legal right of a country to take over foreign property within its borders, provided fair and prompt compensation is assured."

What such people entirely forget is the net affect—direct and indirect—of nationalization. They forget that the legal issue, while obviously fundamental, is accompanied by other issues—political, economic, military, moral. And the legal problem itself is by no means as simple as the fuzzy-minds assert.

INVESTORS AVOID NATIONALIZING COUNTRY LIKE A PLAGUE

The fuzzy-minds forget that as early as when a nationalization decree is possibly in the offing, an evil chain reaction begins to occur. And the end result is the inevitable tendency for investors forever after to avoid that country like a plague.

There are many reasons for such well-merited avoidance. Let me cite three such reasons:

1. In the first place, the very fact of nationalization indicates a breach of faith, a unilateral and illegal violation of contract.

The very essence of free enterprise is to abide by one's contractual commitments.

By contrast it should be noted, for example, that the Eyptian Government had concluded legal agreement after agreement with the Suez Canal Company, the most recent within the period of the last 2 months. But now, Egypt, by itself, is ripping up its own contract.

How can private investors in the future have faith in the word of the Egyptian Government?

POLITICAL DEMAGOGERY AND FINANCIAL IRRESPONSIBILITY

2. In the second place, the very fact of nationalization usually indicates a country's fiscal irresponsibility.

When a country recklessly nationalizes, it is very often caused by some demagogic politician who wants to fasten his greedy hands on an alluring asset, which doesn't belong to him. He wants to convert it into a source of patronage and plunder.

The same type of politician who will arbitrarily nationalize a company will usually tend to wreck a country's financial position. If he thinks so little of private property that he will confiscate it, he probably has a poor concept of running his own country's treasury and its entire fiscal system.

History indicates that political demagogery is tied hand and glove with financial demagogery.

SO-CALLED COMPENSATION PAYMENTS MAY BE WORTHLESS

What does that mean, in turn? It means that the so-called compensation which a country may glibly promise in return for this confiscated property may not prove to be worth the paper it is written upon.

So-called bonds which are issued as compensation, may prove utterly worthless. The interest promised on them may not be paid at all, or may be paid in a currency which in the end is worthlessly depreciated. Money after all is only as good as the credit standing of the government which issues it and which backs it up.

FOREIGN CAPITAL WILL STAY AT HOME

So, nationalization, or even the threat of it, makes investors stay at home. It should be remembered that the great United States itself remains the foremost single attraction for United States investors' funds. Why should any American investor who can earn 4 or 5 percent or more with almost complete safety here in our own country, risk sending capital abroad, when he may get there only the same return or perhaps slightly more, but will be risking having his entire principal confiscated overseas?

Obviously, if a foreign land expects to attract capital, it must provide some measure of special financial attraction to make up for the risk which an investor may foresee even under the best of conditions.

If the chances are even one in a hundred that foreign capital may be nationalized, that in itself is serious. But if the chances of nationalization increase, then, there is no sensible investor who would think of going into such a land.

UNITED STATES CORPORATION HEADS ARE TRUSTEES

Foreign governments must realize that the executives of the United States corporations are trustees of corporate funds. A chairman of a board and his fellow members of a board of directors are charged with faithfully administering resources of the corporation. They dare not squander those resources. They dare not invest stockholders' or bondholders' capital in propositions of grave risk.

Some foreign governments complain that United States capital will not come in for relatively long-range projects. They say our corporations prefer instead to invest in projects which will pay for themselves relatively quickly.

What the foreign governments don't realize (or only pretend not to realize) is that it is their governments' own threatening policies which are the very cause of any private preference for short term, quick turnover investments.

Moreover, it is not simply the threat of nationalization which discourages United States corporations; it is often local governments' policies of harassment. Such harassment includes the unreasonable imposing of retroactive taxes or duties or the arbitrary, unilateral raising of pipeline fees or the like. Such arbitrary governmental policies can utterly discourage foreign companies. We Americans don't like to be squeezed. We don't like to be pushed around.

FAIRNESS FOR ARAB PEOPLES AND FOR FOREIGN COMPANIES

What I am saying in effect is that it is the total climate of a country—favorable or unfavorable climate—which will determine how much foreign capital will come into it and how much will remain.

Of course, the Arab peoples have pride. The Arab peoples are entitled to their due. Within the vast 3.6 million square miles—of the Middle East—with their 54 million inhabitants—are fortunately vast petroleum riches. And a fair return on their own wealth for the inhabitants is obviously essential.

But so, too, is a fair return for private foreign companies which have poured more than $2 billion of indispensable investment into the area.

Such companies are also entitled to their due. They are also entitled to be treated fairly and squarely.

SENATOR WILEY'S PREVIOUS COMMENTS ON THIS ISSUE

On previous occasions in the Senate, for example, on March 21 and July 25, I have referred to this same general issue of fair treatment. I have pointed out that how a country, like our friend Venezuela, which cooperates with foreign capital, which welcomes capital and treats it fairly, has prospered beyond almost the brightest dreams and hopes of its Government and its people.

I have pointed out by contrast how a foreign government which freezes out capital does itself no good and does the cause of the free world no good. My observations and analyses are based on personal review of this type of problem over a period of many years. I have directed supplementary studies, made at my request by a member of our committee staff.

MY RESPONSIBILITY AS A UNITED STATES SENATOR

I feel that it is incumbent upon me as a United States Senator and as senior Republican on the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations to follow this problem extremely closely.

After all, the American and other foreign oil companies working in the Middle East are hardly in the easiest position where they themselves can speak their own minds frankly and openly against local demagogic influences which may harass them.

But someone must certainly speak frankly to these Middle East lands. And that is why I feel that the executive branch deserves the fullest support, and why we in the legislative branch must likewise speak our piece firmly, but in a friendly way, as I am doing now.

MY BASIC PURPOSE TODAY: PROTECT UNITED STATES NATIONAL SECURITY

I am speaking for the principle of morality.

I am speaking for the principle that any American, working or investing abroad, is entitled to reasonable protection from his own Government.

But I am speaking as well for a crucial strategic interest of my country. For it is Mid-East oil which fuels Western Europe's economy, which helps maintain Western Europe financially solvent, and which helps power NATO's defensive mechanism.

Moreover, we must never forget that an expanded foothold in the Middle East is what the Soviet Union covets for her own revolutionary purposes—a foothold which must certainly be prevented by the West.

OUR VAST OIL RESOURCES COMPARED WITH RUSSIA'S

A comparison between free world and Soviet world resources is of interest. For the total free world, the authoritative Oil and Gas Journal estimates for 1955: proven reserves of 177,984,314,000 barrels, 569,661 total wells in production, 13,690,000 barrels average daily production, 574 operating refineries with capacity for crude distillation of 15,887,000 barrels daily.

By contrast, the comparative figures for Red Russia and controlled areas are: 10,833,-300,000 barrels reserve, an undetemined number of wells, 1,450,000 barrels average daily production, 50 operating refineries with capacity of 1,481,000 barrels daily.

NATIONALIZATION OFTEN ACCOMPANIED BY SOCIALIST POISON

I have referred so far to two reason why investors will avoid like a plague certain lands which toy with nationalization.

3. A third basic reason to bear in mind is that a trend toward nationalization is very often accompanied by socialistic concepts.

The same demagog who may breathe fire and brimstone against foreign capital, may also falsely denounce the whole capitalist system as allegedly constituting "exploitation of the sweat on labor's brow."

Few criticisms are more unjustified.

It is capitalism—America's private enterprise system—which nas enriched the average man in this country to a greater degree than the common man has experienced anywhere else in the world.

The common man is king in America. Ours is a country of "people's capitalism."

And it is "people's capitalism which we believe in abroad, as well.

THE ROAD TO EGYPTIAN PROSPERITY NOT PAVED WITH RED TANKS

No people want to see the living standof the Middle East uplifted more than we.

Few peoples will get greater satisfaction than we will from seeing the life span of the average Egyptian extended, disease in Egypt eradicated, sanitation systems built, schools, houses, and the like.

But we know that the road to a higher standard in Egypt cannot be built by Czech or Soviet tanks. On the contrary, every bale of Egyptian cotton which is mortgaged to the Reds for Soviet arms is one bale of cotton which is not being used to uplift the standards of Egypt's own people.

The Soviet technicians pouring into Egypt are the ruthless disciples of the atheist Karl Marx; they have no sympathy for the prophet Mohammed, nor for Islam and its faithful.

ARAMCO AND OTHER COMPANIES' FINE RECORD

I say that, contrary to misrepresentations, the record of American companies operating abroad in dealing with foreign governments and peoples makes for one of the finest of all chapters.

Far from constituting exploitation, the record shows that enlightened American companies have brought higher wages, better living conditions, modern schools, hospitals, and every conceivable modern service to foreign areas.

For example, I understand that the pay scale of the Arabian-American Oil Co. for the average Arab worker is $1,000 a year, whereas the pay for the non-oil-company workers in these lands is $50 per year.

So United States oil companies operating in the Middle East, individually and/or in conjunction with British, French, Dutch, or other foreign capital, have good reason to feel that they have operated more than fairly.

In any event, why should an American investor remove his capital from a country where free enterprise has flowered and is safe and place it in a country where Socialist confiscation thinking is rampant?

EARLY UNITED STATES NATIONALISM UNLIKE PRESENT MID-EAST NATIONALISM

Earlier, I referred to "fuzzy minds" which confuse the real issues.

Such fuzzy minded people think that the nationalism of the Middle East may be compared to the nationalism of America in our early days or as of today.

To be sure, there are some superficial resemblances. To be sure, each people—our own or any other—is entitled to its own sovereignty, its own nationhood—to love of its own flag, its own national anthem, its own national heroes, and culture.

But there, all resemblance ceases between our type of enlightened nationalism and the type of fanatic, blind, and self-defeating nationalism which is unfortunately arising in much of the Middle East and in other parts of the world as well.

UNITED STATES IN 1800'S WELCOMED FOREIGN CAPITAL

We of America welcomed foreign capital. It was foreign capital which built our railroads and many of our other great milestones of progress. Such foreign capital helped to generate local United States capital. We always treated foreign capital fairly. We welcomed, too, the contributions of emigrants to America.

We recognized from the very start that we could not adopt a two-faced policy—being capitalistic toward our own domestic capital, while being socialistic against foreign capital.

We recognized that if the free-enterprise system is to work, it must work uniformly for all groups in our land.

We welcomed friendly relations with all the peoples of the world. We recognized that prejudice against any people abroad would inevitably be harmful in our own land as well.

Fortunately, other lands, like Canada, the United Kingdom, France, the Netherlands, West Germany, and Venezuela have displayed similar enlightened attitudes.

The more enlightenment, the better a country serves its own interests.

ARTICLE, NEW HORIZONS IN FOREIGN OIL

In the summer 1956 issue of the magazine the Lamp, published by the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, there was a most interesting article entitled "New Horizons in Foreign Oil." It pointed out how favorable petroleum legislation in various countries provides heightened incentive to foreign capital.

Oil exploration is, of course, an exceedingly costly process. Today, the world's soaring fuel needs require more and more fuel reserves.

From Guatemala, from Haiti, to Zanzibar, Turkey, and beyond, intensive oil drilling is now taking place. But exploration cannot go on, and on the scale which is necessary, unless there is a continuing favorable climate in the foreign lands—a favorable economic, legal, political, and moral climate.

THE $63 BILLION WORLD OIL INDUSTRY

As I have already indicated, the oil industry is one of the free world's greatest resources. A study by the Chase Manhattan Bank estimates that the gross fixed assets of the free world's oil industry total $63 billion. Sixty-four percent of that huge sum is invested in the United States. It is, of course, here in our own land that the petroleum industry has made the greatest of all contributions toward the highest, most modern standard of living for an entire people.

What we have done constructively, other people can begin to do, if they will allow the rule of law and not of demagogs or mobs; the rule of free enterprise and not the rule of socialism, the rule of unbreakable contracts which cannot be changed except by mutual consent, as against the rule of one side tearing up contracts like scraps of paper.

WE HOPE FOREIGN LANDS WILL SEE THE LIGHT

In conclusion it is my earnest hope that those foreign lands which are, unfortunately, playing with dynamite by toying with oil-nationalization ideas, will see the light.

No object lesson is more illustrative of the utter folly of oil nationalization, than the pitiful record of Iran's mismanagement of the resources of the Anglo-Iranian Oil Co. during the period of nationalization. Iran's bankruptcy—economic and otherwise—during that period should certainly not be forgotten.

It is my hope that present fears of oil nationalization will prove groundless. I trust that moderate leaders in the Middle East—men of real understanding, men of vision and of courage, will put a brake on the extremists, the hotheads, the demagogs, who are trying to whip up supernationalist frenzy.

A WORD OF WARNING TO DEMAGOGS

But let not the demagogs think that the free world can be blackmailed into submission. Let not the demagogs think that the free world will not use its resources to devise alternative methods to cope with demagogery.

Admittedly the free world is heavily dependent upon the Suez Canal. Admittedly it is dependent upon Mid-East petroleum resources. But the free world is not without ample peaceful alternatives to utilize, so as to curb blackmailers and to show them that they cannot get away with extortion.

TANKER PRODUCTION MUST BE EXPANDED

Fortunately, world tanker production is constantly increasing. United States and foreign shipyards will have to lay still more supersized bottoms so as to help meet current and future oil transportation problems.

Thus, we will be in a stronger position to cope with efforts to blackmail us over the canal.

These are not simply my own frank views. They are views, I feel, which are shown by men of good will, by leaders of the free world generally. We want peace in the Middle East. We want security and justice. We want neither the Red flag of communism to fly there, nor the black flag of piracy.

REACTIONS TO SENATOR WILEY'S COMMENTS INVITED

I cordially invite now the reactions of readers of my comments to the frank remarks which I have presented above. I appreciate the very fine reactions which I have received in response to previous statements on the general theme of a green light for foreign free enterprise.

The Bradley Report

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. JAMES G. POLK

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. POLK. Mr. Speaker, the Bradley report, a report to the President by the President's Commission on Veterans Pensions, which was released on April 23, 1956, has caused grave concern to war veterans and to veterans' organizations. Veterans believe this report to the President to be a direct attack on the Federal war veterans' pension system which has been in effect in one form or another since 1818. Not since the Economy Act of 1933 have veterans been so concerned about the future of veterans pensions, disability compensation, widows and orphans allowances and other benefits granted by Congress.

I share in this concern and believe that all Members of Congress interested in veterans legislation should be alerted to the implications of the Bradley recommendations. The members of the Commission were Clarence G. Ademy, director, National Citizens Committee for Educational Television; William J. Donovan, attorney; Paul R. Hawley, director, American College of Surgeons; Martin D. Jenkins, president, Morgan State College; Theodore S. Petersen, president, Standard Oil Company of California; and John S. Thompson, vice chairman of the board, Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Co. Gen. Omar N. Bradley was Chairman. The Commission made 70 specific recommendations and the report covers 410 printed pages.

I wish to call attention to certain specific statements in the report to which I cannot agree:

First. Survey data show that the overwhelming proportion of veterans believe that non-service-connected benefits should not be generally provided—page 9.

Second. Military service in time of war or peace is an obligation of citizenship and should not be considered inherently a basis for future Government benefits—page 10.

Third. It cannot justifiably be contended that all sacrifices, however small and transient, by those in the Nation's military service should establish entitlement to monetary claim and special privileges—page 10.

Fourth. Under present-day conditions, military service in itself cannot continue to serve as a basis for special privilege—page 16.

Fifth. The Commission recommends that veterans' pension benefits be coordinated with those payable under old-age and survivors insurance. It is proposed that this be done by maintaining a separate veterans' pension program, but changing the present eligibility standards to take account of all income, including OASI but not public assistance payments, as resources in determining need for a pension—page 18.

Sixth. As measures of need, present income limits are too high and result in payment of tax-free pensions to persons who are not in genuine need—page 18.

Seventh. A disability of at least 30 percent should be required at ages below 70. Only those found incapable of rehabilitation and unemployable should be eligible for a pension—page 19.

Eighth. Military service in time of war or peace should be treated as discharging an obligation of citizenship and not of itself as a basis for future Government benefits—page 136.

Ninth. Special veterans benefits should be provided only for the significant requirements of veterans that arise directly out of their military service—page 136.

Tenth. The ordinary or nonservice connected needs which veterans have in common with all citizens should be met wherever possible through the general welfare programs under which veterans are covered along with other people. Veterans' non-service-connected benefits should be minimized and gradually eliminated—page 137.

Eleventh. The Commission's survey of medical specialists indicated that the statutory awards for arrested tuberculosis were unwarranted and unrealistic in the light of recent advances in medical knowledge. In this survey it was also observed that other statutory awards generally were obsolete and should be abolished—pages 166–167.

Twelfth. The presumption of service connection for chronic diseases, tropical diseases, psychoses, tuberculosis, and multiple sclerosis as now listed should be withdrawn—page 178.

Thirteenth. That Government life insurance be issued to servicemen upon termination of active service only if they have a service-connected disability that will prevent them from obtaining commercial life insurance at standard rates—page 224.

Fourteenth. Under the more normal conditions now prevailing in the economy, there appears to be no need for special muster-out payments to ex-servicemen—page 339.

Fifteenth. Under present conditions of military service the degree of interruption of the educational process incurred by peacetime ex-servicemen does not warrant special programs of educational benefits—page 345.

Sixteenth. It is recommended that no special loan benefits be made available for peacetime ex-servicemen—page 346.

Seventeenth. Within the not too distant future a separate veterans' pension program should no longer be necessary—page 372.

Eighteenth. The test of impairment at ages 65 to 70 should be made more realistic by requiring at least a 30-percent disability. Pension applicants should be required to register with the State employment service. The fulfillment of this requirement should be attested by a statement from the veteran's employment representative that efforts made to place the applicant have not been successful. Applicants for pensions at ages below 55 and those aged 55 or over who claim to be unemployable due to a disability which is of a lesser degree than that required for a pension at their age should be referred to the Federal State Vocational Rehabilitation Service—pages 388–389.

The 18 statements and recommendations I have mentioned are not all of the statements and recommendations in the Bradley report to which I object, but they are typical of the many bad features of this report.

I strongly object to the philosophy which runs throughout the report, that military service in time of war or peace is similar to any other type of employment and not of itself causing any obligation on the Federal Government for special benefits or pensions. It is difficult for me to understand how a commission made up of reasonable men could come to this conclusion. It is contrary to American principles and traditions and must be repudiated by action in the next Congress.

I want to assure all veterans, their widows and dependents, and all veterans' organizations that I shall strongly oppose all Bradley report recommendations which would deprive any veteran, widow, or dependent of any benefits now in effect. Many veterans' benefits should be increased and substantially liberalized.

Congressman Wolverton's Seniority in Congress Helps First Congressional District

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, my decision to be a candidate for reelection to Congress is based upon a desire to serve and with the thought that my long experience in Congress can be helpful in solving problems arising in these exceptional times.

I think all will agree that experience in any line of endeavor can prove beneficial in the fulfillment of the duties of that particular activity. This is particularly true in matters of legislation. Furthermore, in legislative bodies seniority is highly important. It naturally increases usefulness and influence.

As a result of the seniority I have gained by continuity of service I have become the ranking member of one of the most important committees of the House of Representatives, namely, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. And, in the opinion of many, it is the most important of all the committees from the standpoint of legislative duties.

The importance of this committee arises from the numerous and varied subjects of great importance to our Nation and its people which come within its legislative jurisdiction. There is no committee of the House that has such an extensive jurisdiction as the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. It was one of the first committees of Congress, having been established in 1795, and it has had a continuous existence from that time to the present.

The committee has jurisdiction over all types of transportation, including railroads, buses, and trucks; all forms of communication, including radio, television, telephone, telegraph, and cables; civil aviation, both domestic and foreign; public health in all its many and varied activities to promote the health of our people, including research activities relating to heart, cancer, mental and circulatory diseases, cerebral palsy, muscular distrophy, arthritis, nervous diseases, and many others; advanced scientific endeavor by means of the National Science Foundation, the Bureau of Standards, and kindred organizations; the Fair Trade Commission, to guarantee fairness and truth in business; the Federal Power Commission, to control and regulate the interchange of electric power across State lines; food and drug legislation to guarantee and make certain of the quality of all such for public consumption; laws governing administration and disposition of alien property taken over from enemy countries during the last war; welfare legislation; railroad retirement and Mediation Service, and all activities pertaining to the welfare of railroad labor. These and many other activities indicate the wide scope of the work of this committee and its importance to the people, not only of the First Congressional District of New Jersey but throughout the Nation.

It has been a privilege and an honor to represent the First Congressional District for 15 terms in the Congress of the United States. During this period of time we have experienced high prosperity, so-called, in the late twenties, followed by a depression period that brought us to the very depths of distress. Then, before we had fully recovered from the depression came World War II and the Korean conflict. These brought postwar problems affecting our veterans and every other segment of our people.

All of these conditions have presented their particular problems for solution. The experience gained by participating in their solution and in others that have arisen cannot be otherwise than helpful in dealing with new problems in the future. In addition, there have been the problems incident to communism and our endeavor to maintain peace in the world.

In all of my service as a Member of Congress I have striven to render the best possible service to all of our people regardless of political affiliation or partisanship. By word and by deed I have sought to do that which I thought was right and for the best interest of the First Congressional District and its people. In recent months I have worked diligently to bring work to the New York shipyard. I led the fight against increased bridge tolls and against the Philadelphia wage tax. I shall continue to do so. I backed pay raises for postal and other Government workers, and assisted in obtaining funds for the deepening of the Delaware River channel to the end that the district may take on increased importance. These are only a few of what I consider worthwhile things done for the welfare of our people.

I will consider it a great honor to continue to serve the First Congressional District. I pledge my best endeavors at all times to do in the future, as I have done in the past, that which is in the best interest of our people and which will tend most surely to promote their welfare.

Mystery and Misery of the Backache

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. VICTOR WICKERSHAM

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Speaker, it is no accident that the American people each year are becoming increasingly concerned about the overall status of our national health. For, as modern technology works its wonders in the field of science and industry, we as a people now are able to concentrate our public time and energy on improvement of our own human welfare.

One of the latest manifestations of this particular national trend has been the study recently undertaken by the Public Affairs Institute of Washington, D. C., a nonprofit, objective research organization which published the results of this study in a booklet entitled "The Present Day Doctor of Chiropractic."

The Public Affairs Institute in its definitive study says:

> The present-day doctor of chiropractic is equipped both by training and experience to treat successfully many of the ills besetting mankind.

It also points out that the profession of chiropractic has specialized in the diagnosis and treatment of illnesses having their origin in the region of the back.

Considering the institute's new study, it is interesting to note that a recent issue of Life magazine concerns itself with a corollary subject entitled "Mystery and Misery of the Backache."

The national need for further information on this subject is apparent in Life's statement that—

> Something like 250,000 workmen a year hurt their backs while on the job and have to be sent home * * * most of them incapacitated longer than workers who have suffered such far more spectacular damage as broken legs or arms.

All Americans should realize, too, that the agonizing discomfort and pain of a backache is not, by any means, necessarily confined to those persons doing hard physical labor. The stresses and strains of modern living force every citizen to give consideration to what is now realized as one of our national health problems.

This situation is pointed up by the eminent psychiatrist, Dr. Thomas H. Holmes, of the University of Washington School of Medicine, who testifies from clinical experience that "almost invariably any anxiety, resentment, or hostility in a patient is reflected by muscle tension in the lower back. If the tension lasts long enough, it will produce pain."

LIFE RESEARCH GOES TO WORK

Considering the widespread prevalence of backache throughout all segments of our modern society, it is evident that Life magazine has done us all a real service in putting a team of researchers to work getting the facts which describe a backache, briefly and pointedly, in the following words:

> Mankind * * * insists on defying gravity by standing erect. His back muscles have to work 16 hours a day just to hold him up. He bounces up and down on his spine as on a pogo stick, putting a heavy load of weight and shock on the discs. And when he bends over from the waist to pick up a shoe or golf ball, as he is always doing, he exerts an almost intolerable strain on his lower back. The bend comes between the fused vertebrae of the sacrum and the lumbar vertebrae just above them.
> This point, called the lumbo-sacral joint, is like the fulcrum of a lever. It and the one or two joints above it must support the entire weight of the torso and do the hard work of lifting it. When a man straightens up from a bent-over position, the strain on the muscles, vertebrae, ligaments, and discs can amount to more than a quarter of a ton. If something is lifted at the same time, the weight of the object is multiplied by a leverage factor of 15 or more, depending on the length of the torso and the position of the arms. Thus the frailest stenographer who bends over to lift a portable typewriter or the housewife who picks up a sack of flour from the pantry floor subjects her lower back to tensions of as much as half a ton or more.
> While the spine is a most ingenious structure, it is also highly vulnerable under mankind's abuse. Anybody who has ever suffered a sprained ankle knows how much pain can come from a ligament stretched too far—and there are more ligaments in the back than in all the rest of the body put together. Anybody who has suffered a Charley horse knows the pain of a muscle spasm—and the back has layer after layer of complicated muscle. Anybody who has cracked his so-called funny bone knows how pain can radiate along a squeezed nerve—and the spinal cord has big trunk nerves branching off between each pair of vertebra and radiating out to all the extremities of the body. The human back, in short, is abundantly endowed with all sorts of potentially painful parts just waiting to be abused.

Certainly the problem has been very clearly presented by these statements from the Life magazine article.

With regard to the treatment for this widespread ailment, I think it pertinent to point out that the second largest branch of the healing arts—the profession of chiropractic—has specialized in the diagnosis and treatment of illnesses having their origin in the region of the back.

The fact that this profession has grown so rapidly in recent years is, in no small measure, due to the success this profession has had in relieving people's backaches and all the ills that appear to be dependent on bad back conditions.

Indeed, Life's article takes on new and hopeful meaning when brought into context with the modern doctor of chiropractic and his successful efforts in treating backache—now recognized as one of the Nation's far-flung illnesses.

The Public Affairs Institute study gives us the following facts:

> Today's doctor of chiropractic is a graduate of a 4-year college that accepts only high-school graduates or those with at least 2 years of general college work beyond the high school. In the 8 colleges accredited by the National Chiropractic Association a minimum of 4,000 hours of classroom lectures, clinical and laboratory work are required for graduation.
> Of this, 1,960 hours are devoted to the diagnosis and treatment of illnesses according to chiropractic principles, and this is premised on 740 hours of instruction and laboratory work in anatomy, 240 hours of physiology, 180 hours of biochemistry, 520 hours of pathology and bacteriology and 200 hours of public health and hygiene.
> With such a background of scientific training and clinical practice, today's doctor of chiropractic is licensed to practice his particular form of the healing art by boards in the several States of the Nation, all but four States having special laws to cover this body of practitioners.
> The broadest definition of licensure, that of California reads: "The basic principle of chiropractic is the maintenance of the structural and functional integrity of the nervous system. The practice of chiropractic consists of all necessary means to carry out this basic principle."

TWO MILLION NEW PATIENTS

> Public recognition has grown as doctors of chiropractic have become better trained and as the beneficial results of their treatments have become known to more people. Each year now, some 2 million new patients seek the aid of over 25,000 practicing doctors of chiropractic. Over 500 insurance companies now accept chiropractors' certification for claims.
> Business and industry, and the great labor unions such as the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen have either contracts with doctors of chiropractic or arrangements for the treatment of their people, or have endorsed chiropractic as beneficial. The big motion-picture companies, such as Columbia Pictures, use the services of doctors of chiropractic so that "the show can go on."
> Sordoni Enterprises of Pennsylvania, headed by Andrew Sordoni, president of the American Automobile Association, employs five full-time doctors of chiropractic available to its corps of workers, which is typical of many industrial concerns. The Veterans of Foreign Wars, and the Disabled American Veterans, among other veterans' organizations, have consistently and actively supported chiropractic as an important means of treating illnesses.
> Chief among the virtues of the chiropractic treatment is the fact that, as Dr. Philip Lewin, associate professor of bone and joint surgery of Northwestern University's Medical School, so well points out—"Backache is one of the human crossroads where body and mind meet and where minor errors and variations may cause major discomforts and disabilities." On that one truism of medical science alone, the chiropractic treatment could well rest its case. For it is with the treatment of ills which have either their origin in the back area or are benefited by attention to that area that the chiropractic treatment has come to be recognized as most helpful.
> This has been pointed out succinctly by Dr. C. W. Weiant, chiropractor and doctor of philosophy, research director of the Chiropractic Research Foundation, in this brief statement: "Today the medical profession is beginning to recognize what the chiropractor has been contending for the past half century: (1) that the spinal column is the source of many physical ills and pains which appear in other parts of the body; and (2) that the human backbone is an intricate mechanism."
> With the National Safety Council reporting that 1 out of every 14 people suffers some accidental injury during the year, and over 10 million accidents occur within 12 months, the Council said that back strain accounted for nearly 10 percent of all lost-time injuries. A survey of the State Workmen's Compensation cases in Colorado indicate that under chiropractic care the loss of time from work averaged about 2½ days, or about one-half the time averaged by other methods of treatment.

Now it is particularly interesting to note, in the Life magazine article, that research on cases of backache at the Institute of Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation at New York University has led to the conclusion that "practically all back trouble is functional."

ACCOMPLISHING GREAT GOOD

Thus we can realize, as the Public Affairs Institute has indicated, that a body of present-day trained doctors of chiropractic, using modern methods of diagnosis and treatment and prescribing proper hygienic care to restore the normal functioning of the back region and its related parts, can accomplish great good for the millions of Americans suffering from our Nation's widespread troublesome illness.

The Life article corroborates this with the statement that—

Because chiropractors specialize in manipulation of the spine, they attract a lot of patients who suffer from backache. They press against some suspect vertebra and often there is a sudden snap and the patient gets up feeling much better.

That statement, of course, is an oversimplification of the methods used by the modern-day doctor of chiropractic who, according to the scientific study of the Public Affairs Institute, "is a force for good in promoting the health of his community."

Small Business, 84th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. WILLIAM S. HILL

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 26, 1956

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I am impelled to express my disappointment because of the fact that the 84th Congress will pass into history without a single major legislation enactment in the interest of small business. There has been no lack of discussion on the subject of small business. It seems to me, in retrospect, that each legislative day has produced at least one speech or one statement on small business. Much of the discussion has been constructive and fair but for the most part, unfortunately, these discussions have not been concerned with legislation. However, I hasten to add that a number of statements purportedly on the subject of small business have, in fact, been attacks on President Eisenhower and the President's small-business program. Nobody has been fooled by these attacks, and particularly the small-business men themselves have not been fooled, because they know that business of every type is enjoying the greatest peacetime prosperity in the history of our country.

Many bills have been introduced to aid small business but very few have received any consideration whatsoever. A great many of these bills, had they been enacted into law, would have assured small business of further gains and the opportunity to advance to greater prosperity while maintaining a sound competitive position. I need hardly remind my colleagues that the Democrats have had complete charge of all legislative and investigative committees in both the Senate and the House. The legislative program, therefore, has been subject to the will and the control of the majority party in both Houses of Congress.

The few bills which have been reported out of committee and scheduled for further action have received the support of practically every Republican Member of the House and Senate.

THE GOOD-FAITH ISSUE

Thanks to Republican leadership in the House, one bill in which hundreds of thousands of small-business men were interested passed the House almost unanimously. This bill was strongly supported by our independent retail grocers, wholesalers, and other groups in the food industry. It was also supported by our independent druggists, tire dealers, filling-station operators, independent bakers, independent candy wholesalers, and, in fact, by practically every independent merchant in the country. This bill, as we know, proposed to amend the Robinson-Patman Act to strengthen the position of small business. It failed of passage in the Senate.

Why did not this bill, which had so much small-business support, become law? I think it is fair to say that if the acknowledged leaders of the Democratic Party had wanted this small-business bill enacted into law there would have been no question about it.

In addition to the bill designed to strengthen small business under the Robinson-Patman Act, many other bills looking toward the improvement and strengthening of our antitrust laws were introduced. However, the most important antitrust bill which affected corporate mergers failed of enactment.

CONGRESS AND SMALL BUSINESS

As I stated, I am disappointed with the legislative results for small business in the 84th Congress. This disappointment stems from the fact that constructive and remedial legislation is constantly needed to strengthen our free-enterprise system. As we all realize, most of our business institutions had small beginnings. It is through the initiative, imagination, rugged individualism and the hard work of American businessmen that our small businesses grow and prosper. For the most part, however, this growth is possible only when the scales of opportunity are in balance, and here the Congress has a grave responsibility. This responsibility is discharged either through the passage of laws or constructive investigations which will, in fact, keep the scales of opportunity in balance.

As the elected representatives of our respective districts we in the House of Representatives are in the best position to seek out and respond to the needs of our people as these needs develop. There are certain legislative areas in which it is the sole responsibility of the House of Representatives, under the Constitution, to initiate legislation. The Constitution requires that the House originate our tax laws. Therefore, we who are Members of the House of Representatives should be especially concerned with the present unequal and inequitable Federal tax structure which bears so heavily on small business. The majority in the 84th Congress has failed to listen to the pleas of small business for equitable tax treatment under the law.

FREE ENTERPRISE AND SMALL BUSINESS—INCOME TAXES

The Federal income tax burden on small business became more apparent in the 84th Congress than ever before. Many bills were introduced which would have lessened this burden and would have had the further effect of allowing small concerns to keep pace with the urgency and necessity for growth, expansion, and modernization. The Republican Members of the Select Committee on Small Business of the House introduced tax measures as well as bills to correct many of the inequities which exist in the law applying to Government contract renegotiation. These bills, which were designed to equalize the burden of Federal taxes, were never given even passing consideration.

It can be safely assumed that our free-enterprise society, as we know it here in America, will exist only as long as small business remains. Once small business disappears from our midst then our economic system will lose its health and dynamic character.

Where would the Fords, the Chryslers, and the rest of them be if they had not been able to grow and expand under the tax structure that was in effect in the early days of their existence? Under the present tax structure there are very limited possibilities for growing businesses to make their full contribution to a prosperous economy and to the economic well-being of our Nation.

It is very generally recognized that the present tax structure makes it difficult, if not impossible, for small business to accumulate sufficient working capital to purchase up-to-date fixtures and machinery, to improve its plants and equipment, and to expand to its full potential usefulness. We must face the issue as we see it today because small business now, as well as in the past, must depend on back earnings for equity and working capital. It is practically impossible for small, closely-held businesses to have access to the capital markets. The issuance of stocks and bonds, except to a limited extent, is not a realiable source for small business financing. In order to survive the ups and downs of the economic cycle it is absolutely necessary for small business to be able to retain a fair share of earnings so that when a bad period comes it can weather the storm. Big corporations, with their vast borrowing power and with their ability to put away money because of the large capital structure, can weather the economic crises. The small business cannot. Therefore, it is our duty to make sure that small business does survive and that the tax structure is such that small business is always in a position to contribute in a full measure to our Nation's welfare.

THE SMALL-BUSINESS ISSUE?

As I mentioned earlier, measured by volume, the speeches on the subject of small business in the 84th Congress reached a new high, but certainly if legislative accomplishment for small business did not reach a new low it came pretty close to it. This was because most of the small business speeches of my Democratic friends were tirades against President Eisenhower's small-business program and were not, as they should have been, informative debates on legislation. The almost continual barrage of misstatement of fact regarding the well-being of small business under this Republican administration was only for the purpose of blowing up a false issue. False issues usually meet the fate of the Biblical house which was built upon the sands; they are destined to perish in the quicksand of untruths.

PRESIDENT EISENHOWER AND SMALL BUSINESS

It may have been a source of great satisfaction to some Democrats to belittle the efforts of the present administration to provide every possible aid for small business. Unfortunately, however, this belittling criticism carried with it the unhappy conclusion that business as a whole was not important to our total economy. This Democratic Party line is ridiculous from any viewpoint. Our gross national product has now reached a record high, and to supply the things which permit us to enjoy this high standard of living there are more businesses in operation than ever before. There are more persons gainfully employed and our wages and salaries have reached unprecedented high levels in 1956. Personal income and the average weekly earnings in our factories are at the highest rate on record. All of these beacons on the road to prosperity have required the goods and services of our total business population. The most important point to remember is that small business has contributed its part and has shared in this unprecedented era of prosperity which has brought with it the highest standard of living in our history.

The vast majority of the people of this country are interested in results. The important thing, of course, is to have a program—that you must have before you can achieve results. President Eisenhower and his administration have had a program for small business which has been earnestly and forcefully put forward. This administration, under the laws previously enacted by the Congress and to the extent of its executive powers, has made it possible for small business to more nearly fulfil its vital role in our business life.

The President himself has stated that small business must remain the bulwark of our economy. President Eisenhower, in furtherance of his conviction, has established a Cabinet Committee on Small Business to study its problems and to make recommendations for both legislative proposals and administrative action. The Eisenhower administration realizes that ever during our most prosperous times some smaller business concerns will have their problems, many arising from unfair competition.

The Eisenhower administration is keenly aware that our economy and our way of life will continue to be strong and to flourish as long as our businessmen possess their skills, their inventiveness, their initiative, and their desire to compete one against the other. This administration has and will supplement these sterling qualities of our businessmen by making certain that everyone plays the game fairly and by rendering particular assistance to small firms. We Republicans know beyond any doubt that a vigorous and healthy small-business community is one of the best assurances we have for the continued success and prosperity of our Nation.

THE SMALL BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION

The Small Business Administration, an independent agency of the Government and responsible in the executive department only to the President himself, has been the keystone of the President's program. As chairman of the Select Committee on Small Business in the 83d Republican Congress, it was my privilege to introduce the bill which became the Small Business Act of 1953. It was a source of great gratification to have had this legislation so strongly supported by President Eisenhower. It is equally gratifying that the Small Business Administration has had the unqualified support of our great President throughout the 3 years of its existence.

Under the direction of President Eisenhower the Small Business Administration has continually improved its services to small business and has constantly sought ways and means to broaden the scope of its operations.

The essential requirement for the success of any program is leadership. The personal interest of the President has enabled the Small Business Administration to make progress never before achieved in any other program of assistance to small business. President Eisenhower's leadership has secured for SBA a brand of cooperation from all other departments and agencies of the Government which small-business programs have sorely lacked under previous administrations. The Small Business Administration has been successful because the requisite cooperation has been forthcoming.

As we know from information which has been supplied for the record on numerous occasions, the financial program entrusted to the Small Business Administration has been increasingly effective. The small-business loan program has been constantly expanded to serve small business everywhere and in practically every line of endeavor. The operation of the disaster loan program has been outstanding. The efficiency with which the Small Business Administration has moved into disaster areas has brought much favorable comment. Such comment from those who had suffered through the tragic hours of disaster and who had witnessed the terrible loss of life and destruction of property is the best evidence of SBA's efforts to carry out its mission with no other thought but to serve—and to serve well.

The Small Business Administration's program to secure civilian and military contracts for small-business concerns has been continually improved and enlarged. The Department of Defense and the General Services Administration, the two major agencies of the Government charged with the responsibility of procurement, have, in cooperation with the Small Business Administration, broadened the opportunity for small business participation in both prime and subcontract awards. Every civilian agency including the Veterans' Administration, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of the Interior, and the Post Office Department now have small-business programs. The Department of Defense has used every proper means to encourage subcontracting with small business by the larger prime contractors. The subcontracting program has been particularly effective in the aircraft manufacturing industry. The joint agreements of the Department of Defense with SBA which permits setasides of military purchases to be reserved for the exclusive competition of small-business concerns continues to grow in dollar value as well as in small-business participants.

The management and production assistance programs have been constantly improved. These programs have enabled thousands of small businessmen to learn of new management techniques and production skills, an opportunity they would not have had except for the sound provisions in the Small Business Act of 1953, which has enabled the Small Business Administration to carry on this important work.

The Small Business Administration has been accepted as the spokesman and proponent of small business in the executive department of our Government. SBA does not have to peer through a knothole in the fence to learn the score as did its predecessor agencies. The Small Business Administration is a full-fledged member of President Eisenhower's team. It shares full membership in the President's Cabinet Committee on Small Business.

It is well, I believe, to enumerate a few of SBA's other important functions as a member of the Eisenhower team.

The SBA is a key member of the Office of Defense Mobilization's Committee for the Maintaining of the Mobilization Base.

It has a leading role in the Production Equipment program which is designed to secure maximum utilization of Government-owned and Government-procured defense tools and facilities, especially machine tools.

The SBA shares the responsibility, in an advisory capacity, for direct loans under section 302 of the Defense Production Act which are granted to expedite the performance of defense contracts.

It takes part in the programs designed to encourage and stimulate the expansion of mining and the recovery of strategic metals and minerals for the national defense.

The SBA attends, as an observer, all meetings of the Business and Defense Services Administration's Industry Advisory Committees in order to advise ODM and BDSA on any matter which may affect small business.

It provides special assistance to small business in securing priorities for scarce materials which are needed for the execution of defense contracts.

The Small Business Administration represents small-business concerns before the ODM in securing fast tax write-offs for national-defense expansion and in the replacement of facilities destroyed or damaged by disasters.

Even the most casual, but fair, observer will recognize the growing usefulness of the Small Business Administration to the small-business community. As this usefulness increases the conviction grows that the SBA should not only be an independent agency but it should be a permanent agency. I repeat, the Small Business Administration should be made a permanent, independent agency of our Government. It should not be made a political football each time the act comes up for extension. It is my purpose to introduce legislation designed to give the Small Business Administration a permanent status on the 1st day of the 85th Congress.

We must remember that the Small Business Administration is a peacetime agency, and I emphasize—the first peacetime agency exclusively devoted to the interests of small business in the history of our country. It was not born as a stopgap agency in the midst of war; it came into being in a Republican Congress with the assistance of a Republican President in recognition of the basic fact that the scales must always be kept in balance, otherwise the free-enterprise society to which we owe our allegiance might not survive.

Report to the People of the 21st Congressional District of New York

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. HERBERT ZELENKO

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. ZELENKO. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I feel it is my duty to the electorate of the 21st Congressional District, New York, which I have the honor to represent, to make part of the official RECORD some of my more important activities in the 84th Congress.

On more important issues, I voted in favor of increased minimum wage; Federal aid for housing; Federal aid for road construction; increased payments for retired Government workers; wage increases for postal and other Government workers; mutual security; expanded social security to permit, among other things, women to retire at 62, and the disabled at 50; Federal aid for local anti-pollution facilities; broadened health research plans; increased Federal aid to farmers, including the soil bank; Federal eral aid for education, including the Powell amendment; the civil rights bill; the appropriation of money for small-business loans; strengthening of the Anti-Monopoly Act against big business; payments for disaster loans on people's homes; continued and increased defense appropriations; continued increased and expanded veterans' benefits; Federal assistance in flood control; the continuation and expansion of the school-milk program, and the resolution opposing the admission of Red China to the United Nations.

Important measures which I voted against were the Natural Gas Act and the attempt to increase postal rates.

Legislation was introduced by me to repeal section 462 of the Internal Revenue Code—billion-dollar giveaway—to combat juvenile delinquency; to increase the minimum wage to $1.25; to amend and revise the Immigration Act; to provide increased safety regulations for railroad workers and passengers; to amend the Railroad Retirement Act; to amend the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act; to provide increased benefits in the Civil Service Retirement Act; to provide increased annuities for former FBI and other Government enforcement officials; to expand the Fair Labor Standards Act to provide increased coverage for retail employees; to amend the War Risk Insurance Act; to provide relief for victims of disasters resulting from floods; to establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of excessive unemployment in certain economically depressed areas; to establish within the Department of Defense a civilian department of civil defense; to amend the Internal Revenue Code to provide a tax credit for payments made on account of education in public or private institutions; to amend the Civil Aeronautics Act to require financial responsibility for damages to persons injured from the operation of any aircraft; to provide a deduction for income-tax purposes for all disabled individuals for their expenses for transportation to and from work; and to provide an additional exemption for any taxpayer or spouse who is physically or mentally incapable of caring for himself. I have also introduced over 40 private bills providing relief under the present harsh immigration laws for residents of my district.

In my 1955 report, mention was made of my successful effort to save the Government several billion dollars by detection of a loophole in the internal-revenue laws. These efforts received nationwide approval by newspapers and distinguished Americans, in the following exact excerpts and quotations:

The Washington Evening Star, March 1, 1955:

BIG BUSINESS TAX WINDFALL CHARGES RATTLE REPUBLICANS

Charges that businesses have been given a five billion dollar windfall through a widening loophole in the 1954 Tax Revenue Act were before the Congress today.

The windfall case was laid before Congress by Representative HERBERT ZELENKO, Democrat-Liberal, New York, in his maiden speech to the House.

Mr. ZELENKO first made the charge when speaking during the last week's debate for the proposed $20 deduction from individual's tax bills.

The charges apparently caught the Republican leadership unaware. GOP spokesmen have not yet refuted Mr. ZELENKO's declaration that the revenue loophole, in effect, provided corporations multi-billion-dollar tax forgiveness.

Labor, March 5, 1955:

HUGE NEW TAX LOOPHOLE—FRESHMAN SOLON CITES GIMMICK WHICH MAY COST UNCLE SAM BILLIONS OF DOLLARS

Another huge windfall loophole in last year's rich man's tax bill was pointed out this week by Congressman HERBERT ZELENKO, Democrat, of New York. In his first speech as a freshman Member of the House, he caused a sensation by making serious charges which made Republican leaders and top administration officials run for cover.

The Milwaukee Journal, March 16, 1955:

A horrible blooper in last year's mammoth revision of the Federal tax cut has been turned up by the freshman Congressman from President Eisenhower's home district, HERBERT ZELENKO, of New York, Democrat-Liberal. The size of it can be guessed as high as $5 billion of revenue loss this year, if the provisions are not retroactively repealed at once.

The Providence Journal, March 20, 1955:

A freshman Member, Representative HERBERT ZELENKO, Democrat, of New York, a Manhattan tax lawyer, surprised his leaders by popping up with a charge that under the 1954 tax law, sponsored by Humphrey's Department, business was being allowed to take a double deduction for expenses. That would cost the Treasury not $2½ billion but $5 billion.

On March 24, 1955, the loophole section of the law was repealed. The remarks of the distinguished chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, the Honorable JERE COOPER, taken from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the same date, were as follows:

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to state that our distinguished colleague from New York, Mr. ZELENKO, was the first member to introduce the bill dealing with the subject now under consideration. He introduced a bill to repeal section 462 of the Internal Revenue Code. He has done a great deal of work on this subject and deserves a great deal of credit for the splendid contributions he has made. He spoke on this subject during a consideration of the tax bill in the House. I want to give him full credit for the splendid contribution he has made and to acknowledge the debt of gratitude to him for the assistance he has given in meeting and dealing with this problem.

Further comment on this subject appeared in Labor, April 2, 1955:

The House unanimously, and the Senate, are expected to pass soon a bill repealing tax Secretary George M. Humphrey's blooper, that is, the rich man's tax bill provision which would enable corporations to count 2 years' expenses in 1, thus reducing their tax by at least $1 billion. The blooper was first exposed by Congressman ZELENKO (Democrat, New York).

On June 16, 1955, the New York Daily Mirror reported as follows:

President Eisenhower signed a bill Wednesday closing a loophole in the tax law under which business firms might have saved an estimated $1 billion in taxes.

On May 6, 1955, the Honorable PAUL H. DOUGLAS, United States Senator from Illinois, in writing to Mr. Sidney Barnett, a prominent citizen of the district, stated as follows:

DEAR MR. BARNETT: Congressman ZELENKO has done a marvelous job in exposing the tremendous abuses in section 462 of last year's tax bill. Seldom, if ever, has a freshman Congressman hit the bull's eye with such a bang.

With best wishes,

Faithfully yours,

PAUL H. DOUGLAS,
Senator.

The American Forum, a national television discussion program, on May 27, 1956, had for one of its guests the Honorable Paul M. Butler, chairman of the National Democratic Committee, who, in the course of debate, stated as follows:

If you do come up with a balanced budget and you have not yet arrived at that point, $1 billion of that, of any surplus that may arise, should be credited to Congressman ZELENKO, a Democrat, of New York, who found that loophole in the 83d Congress tax bill, as you will remember.

ON OTHER SUBJECTS

The New York Daily News, January 18, 1955:

Representative ZELENKO, Democrat, of New York, has introduced a bill to set up a $50 million appropriation for combating juvenile delinquency.

The New York Post, January 18, 1955:

Freshman Representative ZELENKO, Washington Heights, Democrat-Liberal today reported strong support for his measure proposing a $50 million Federal grant to help States combat juvenile delinquency.

ZELENKO said governors of some States have promised to ask their Congressmen to back the proposal.

The New York World-Telegram and Sun, May 12, 1955:

Representative HERBERT ZELENKO said yesterday he found a way for Congress to give away $30 million a year without costing the taxpayer 1 penny. He introduced a bill to provide an across-the-board 10-percent boost in pension benefits to retired Government workers and their survivors. He said the money would come from the growing surplus of the Civil Service Retirement Fund, which now exceeds $6 billion.

The New York Daily News, November 9, 1955:

Representative HERBERT ZELENKO, Democrat-Liberal, New York, proposes that at least 5,000 screened volunteers from the Armed Forces be put through a short training period to help combat narcotic smuggling.

The New York Herald Tribune, November 9, 1955:

A proposal that at least 5,000 members of the Armed Forces be screened on a voluntary basis and assigned, after a short training period, to a Federal agency to help stamp out the flow of illicit narcotics into this country, was made yesterday by Representative HERBERT ZELENKO, Manhattan Democrat.

The West Side News, December 8, 1955:

Congressman HERBERT ZELENKO, Democrat-Liberal, New York, this week presented to the Congressional Committee on Education and Labor in San Juan, P. R., which investigated increased minimum wages for the island, a letter from Gov. Averell Harriman of New York asking minimum wage increases in Puerto Rico.

Congressman ZELENKO has stated, in releasing the Governor's letter, that thousands of his constituents of Puerto Rican origin have asked him to do his utmost to help raise minimum wage standards in the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

The New York World-Telegram and Sun, March 1, 1956:

A bill giving a better income-tax break to parents of college students as well as to teachers who will take advanced courses was presented to Congress today.

Introduced by Representative HERBERT ZELENKO, New York Democrat, it would allow Federal tax income credit of 30 percent, but not exceeding $450 a year, of money paid for tuition charges.

The tax credit idea intended to lighten the financial load borne by students and their families is essentially that proposed by the American Council of Education.

The West Side News, March 29, 1956:

Congressman ZELENKO introduced a bill to amend title 3 of the Social Security Act to provide, where a husband and wife are both entitled to benefits under the act, and one of them dies, the benefit of the survivor shall be equal to the total of the combined benefits to which they were entitled when living.

In introducing the bill he said:

"Many of our elderly married citizens who in the twilight of their lives are subsisting on the bare minimum of social-security benefits are entitled to this additional protection from an appreciative government."

The West Side News, May 17, 1956:

AID CRIPPLED ON TAX PAYMENTS

Congressman ZELENKO introduced before Congress a bill to provide a deduction for income-tax purposes in the case of a disabled individual for expenses of transportation to and from work. He said this legislation was vitally necessary to help the gainfully employed handicapped person to continue to be self-sufficient. The bill also provides for an additional exemption for income-tax purposes for a taxpayer or spouse who is physically or mentally incapable of caring for himself.

The New York World-Telegram and Sun, July 19, 1956:

Representative HERBERT ZELENKO, Democrat, New York, freshman legislator, who first called Congress' attention to a loophole in the 1954 tax law paving the way for its repeal in time to save the Government billions of dollars in tax forgiveness to corporations, says that he is now out to save a few more million.

This time he is seeking to prevent adoption of legislation which he claims would cost the Government some twenty to twenty-five million more than is necessary in connection with a tanker-chartering program.

The Washington Daily News, July 20, 1956:

READ ABOUT THIS ONE, TAXPAYER—THE SHIPPING BILL THAT SMELLS LIKE $25 MILLION

It would cost the taxpayer some $20 to $25 million, according to Representative HERBERT ZELENKO, Democrat, New York. Up to now he has been fighting the battle against the tanker bill almost singlehandedly. Representative ZELENKO is a freshman legislator who first called Congress' attention to a loophole in the 1954 tax law, paving the way for this repeal in time to save the Government billions of dollars in tax forgiveness to corporations.

Drew Pearson, writing in his column, the Washington Merry-Go-Round, in the Washington Post and Times Herald on July 25, 1956, and commenting on my efforts to block the tanker giveaway, said:

It takes alert Congressmen to make the wheels of democracy run efficiently. ZELENKO, New York Democrat * * * was alert, blocked this giveaway from sneaking through on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. Pearson again wrote in the Washington Post and Times Herald of August 5, 1956:

One of the best watchdogs in our recent Congress was HERBERT ZELENKO, former champion wrestler at Columbia University and Congressman from Ike's former voting district in Manhattan. * * * He blocked two bills which would have cost the taxpayers money. One was to give a ship to friends of Dictator Trujillo of the Dominican Republic, and another to permit the sale of ships to Uncle Sam at an inflated value by McLean Industries.

Cognizant of the cosmopolitan nature of my district, I have supported those measures and ideals which are closest to the hearts of my constituents. Some written verbatim comments with respect to these activities I believe will be of interest to my constituents:

Ancient Order of Hibernians, Division 3, New York County:

APRIL 2, 1955.

The Honorable HERBERT ZELENKO,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: The officers and members wish to express to you their appreciation for the fine article in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD containing your remarks on "The Great Contribution of the Irish people to America" * * *.

With every good wish for your success and my own kindest regards, I am,

Sincerely,

JAMES M. GRUNDY.

On the same subject, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch of March 17, 1955, had the following to say:

Representative HERBERT ZELENKO of New York, in a speech before the House of Representatives, spoke on Irish Builders of America * * * Among other things, Congressman ZELENKO said: "Irish blood, brain and brawn have played a valiant part in the fabric of America. People of Irish descent may take a pardonable pride in the Irish contribution to the development and preservation of the American Government."

Royal Greek Embassy, Washington, D. C.:

APRIL 19, 1955.

The Honorable HERBERT ZELENKO,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I would like you to know how much I appreciate your appropriate remarks in the House of Representatives on the 24th ult. on the occasion of the 134th anniversary of the independence of Greece.

With my reiterated thanks for this public expression of your philhellenic sentiments which are fully appreciated, not only by the Greek people and the Greek Government; but also, I am sure, by the Americans of Greek ancestry, I remain,

Very sincerely,

GEORGE V. MELAS,
Ambassador of Greece.

CONGRESSMAN ZELENKO RECEIVES SCROLL FROM 10TH ZOA DISTRICT

At the 35th annual meeting of district 10, Zionist Organization of America, held on Monday evening, June 25, Congressman HERBERT ZELENKO was presented with a scroll citing his leadership in the community.

Embassy of Israel, Washington, D. C.:
MAY 16, 1955.

DEAR MR. ZELENKO: I have noticed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that on April 27, 1955, you saluted the State of Israel on the floor of the House of Representatives on the occasion of Israel's Independence Day. Please accept the expression of my deep appreciation.

Sincerely,
ABBA EBAN.

In 1954 I received from Manhattanville Post No. 1057 the American Legion citation for merit in recognition of outstanding service and accomplishment.

This, then, is a general outline of my congressional activities. I trust it has met the approval of my constituency and in some way has proved of benefit and value to all in our beloved United States of America.

Additional Hospital and Medical Attention for Veterans

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, during the time that it has been my privilege to serve in Congress problems affecting the welfare of our veterans have been before us for consideration every year.

It has always been a pleasure, as well as a privilege, to support the efforts that have been made to improve the welfare of ex-service men, their widows, survivors, and dependents. No nation can long succeed that does not recognize and hold sacred the sacrifices of the men and women who answer the call of their country in the hour of emergency.

It is gratifying to realize there has been a general recognition of this duty and an obligation by Congress throughout the years. I hope the time will never come when there will be any lack of desire to be helpful.

Although the benefits provided for veterans and their dependents have been numerous and varied, yet there are many ways that remain for further improvement. Without attempting to enumerate them in detail, I do wish to express the opinion that steps should be taken, by legislation or by administrative means, to improve and expand the right of veterans to have greater hospital facilities and the benefit of additional medical attention. Too often I have found that because of restrictions, limitations, or administrative interpretations it is difficult, and sometimes impossible, for a veteran to gain admission to a veteran's hospital. This should not be so.

I trust that the Veterans' Affairs Committee of the House, which has already done an excellent job for our veterans, shall give this subject careful and favorable consideration.

Report to My Constituents of the 11th Congressional District of Indiana

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES B. BROWNSON
OF INDIANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. BROWNSON. Mr. Speaker, at the end of each 2 years I have rendered a report to the 600,000 citizens I represent in Marion County which makes up the 11th Congressional District of Indiana.

In 1952, at the end of the 82d Congress, my first summary was written as a Republican Congressman serving as a minority Member in a Democratic Congress under a Democratic President, Harry Truman. The chairman and majority of the members of each subcommittee and committee were Democrats, the leadership was Democratic. The Republicans were knit tightly together as the party of loyal opposition fighting for economy, integrity, decentralization of Government, freedom from controls, and security for the country from enemies abroad and at home.

In 1954, at the end of the 83d Congress, my report was written from the viewpoint of a majority Member in a Republican Congress under a Republican President, Dwight D. Eisenhower. The responsibility of the Republican Party was clearly identified and readily accepted by both the executive and the legislative. In 1953, according to Congressional Quarterly, the new President submitted 44 proposals. Congress approved 32, giving President Eisenhower a record of 72.7 percent cooperation by a Republican Congress in his first year. In 1954, Congressional Quarterly states that President Eisenhower submitted 232 legislative requests of which 150 were approved by a Republican Congress for a cooperation score of 64.7 percent.

EIGHTY-THIRD CONGRESS ENACTS 68.7 PERCENT OF EISENHOWER PROGRAM

Averaging the percentages for the 1st and 2d session of the Republican 83d Congress it becomes apparent that President Eisenhower received an overall support of 68.7 percent based on the Congressional Quarterly figures. The White House itself credited the Republican 83d Congress with passing 53 out of 64 bills requested by the President for a cooperation score of 83 percent for the 2-year period. This 83d "do something" Congress cut Government expenditures and reduced taxes by a whopping $7.4 billion of which individuals received $4.7 billion. Besides, it added 10 million to those eligible to receive social security benefits.

After 230 days in session and over 935 hours of debate, the House of Represenatives of the 84th Democratic Congress will adjourn today. This report to my constituents is prepared from the viewpoint of a Republican Congressman serving as a minority Member in a Democratic Congress under a Republican President. Again, the chairman and the majority of the members of every single subcommittee and committee are Democrats. The Committee on Rules, legislative traffic policemen for the House, again has 8 Democrat members and but 4 Republican members. The leadership is Democratic.

In spite of promises to support the Eisenhower program which were offered by the Democrats during the 1954 congressional campaigns, the record clearly indicates that the Democratic 84th Congress fell short of the record of cooperation with President Eisenhower made by the Republican 83d. According to Congressional Quarterly, a news service which has never been accused of being pro-Republican, the President submitted 207 proposals in 1955, of which only 96 were approved by the Democratic Congress which is a percentage score of only 46.3 percent cooperation. In 1956 the White House submitted 224 proposals of which 103 were approved by Congress, a percentage score of only 45.9 percent.

EIGHTY-FOURTH CONGRESS ENACTS ONLY 46.1 PERCENT OF EISENHOWER PROGRAM

Averaging the percentages of the 1st and 2d sessions of the 84th Democratic Congress, it is apparent that President Eisenhower received an overall support of 46.1 percent based on the CQ figures. When you compare this 46.1 percent with the 68.7 percent which represents the cooperation extended by the Republican 83d Congress, it becomes obvious that it does make a difference as to which party controls the 2 Houses of Congress.

It makes quite a difference to the taxpayer, too, as to which party controls the Congress. A compilation of appropriations over the past 12 years established beyond question the difference between the 2 parties in the matter of spending and proves that the Republican Party, by its record, is truly entitled to be known as the economy party. In the past 25 fiscal years our Federal budget has been balanced only 4 times, twice during the Republican 80th Congress, once during fiscal year 1951, and again this year under the administration of a Republican President, Dwight D. Eisenhower. Let us look at the record:

APPROPRIATIONS (EXCLUDING PAYMENTS FROM TRUST FUNDS)

Democratic 79th Congress, fiscal 1946–47: $105,514,346,275.

Republican 80th Congress, fiscal 1948–49: $77,658,368,635.

Democratic 81st Congress, fiscal 1950–51: $127,542,497,308.

Democratic 82d Congress, fiscal 1952–53: $187,117,415,303.

Republican 83d Congress, fiscal 1954–55: $123,316,700,300.

Democratic 84th Congress, fiscal 1956–57: $128,566,274,914.

These appropriations during the 12 years indicated exclude approximately $83,325,000,000 payable from trust fund receipts. It is interesting to note that appropriations by the Democratic 82d Congress were the second largest in our entire history as a nation being exceeded only by the $204,863,924,329 appropriated by the 77th Democratic Congress during World War II.

EIGHTY-FOURTH CONGRESS HAS BEEN WEAK BUT NOT VICIOUS

Mr. Speaker, even the kindliest of critics must admit that his has been a weak Congress. The Democrats have advanced no challenging legislative programs and no major reforms. They have been so busy finding new ways to squander money that they have failed to build up a legislative record to which they can point with any great pride, althought the leadership responsibility was clearly theirs. To the Republicans, this was a frustrating Congress.

Only five times since the Civil War have both Houses of Congress been controlled by a political party opposed to that of the President. Contrary to predictions, there was no violent opposition to the President's program as such. It wasn't that kind of a war. It wasn't a cold war either. It was a disorganized struggle of sabotage and sit-down strike with plenty of time out for looting and raiding the Treasury. The sense of positive drive which was sometimes evident in the Republican 83d Congress was lacking.

THE BUDGET—SPENDING

The 84th Democratic Congress has apparently cinched two records. It looks like 2,875 to 2,880 bills will be passed during the 234 days it has been in session during the past 2 years for a new, all-time high. It is equally obvious that this Congress has appropriated more money to run the Federal Government than any other Congress in peacetime or time of cold war.

That the Federal budget was balanced this year with a $1.7 billion surplus to be applied to the Federal debt was no fault of the Democrats. The appropriations made this year at the height of the congressional spending spree will not be felt until next year, meantime unusually large revenue resulting from the high level of business and individual prosperity during the Eisenhower peacetime prosperity has enabled the Treasury to end the year in the black.

For fiscal year 1957, the President submitted to Congress requests for appropriations aggregating $59.9 billion. The House approved $57.7 billion while the Senate voted some $2.6 billion more for a total of $60.3 billion. Conference agreements between the House and the Senate on the individual bills resulted in a final total of $59.7 billion. The major increases of the Senate were $1,149,000,000 for defense, $686 million for foreign aid, $81 million for public works, and $75 million for the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, and the Department of Labor. Eight hundred million dollars more was actually approved for the Department of Defense than the President requested. Two billion, five hundred million dollars was authorized for farm price supports more than in the January budget.

Only a Presidential veto can now save the taxpayers from authorizations for rivers and harbors projects, many of which have not been adequately screened. The commendable restraint of recent Congresses which refused to add new authorizations during debate on the floor was suddenly scrapped and authorizations were added on a "pork-barrel basis." While some of these projects may have been worthy, failure to provide for scrutiny by the Bureau of the Budget and consideration by trained subcommittee and committee personnel evidenced little concern for economy as compared to election year politics by a Democrat-controlled Congress. This may well be characterized as the "giveaway Congress of the century."

I believe it is fair to say that the foundation for today's prosperity was worked out in close cooperation between President Eisenhower and the 83d Republican Congress. Controls were removed, a $7.4 billion tax cut was made of which $4.7 went to individuals and the budget was brought into balance. The effect of the spendthrift programs of the last 2 years will be felt for at least 5 years in the future. What this fiscal irresponsibility will do toward increasing inflationary pressures and preventing future reductions in taxes is difficult to predict.

CIVIL RIGHTS

After introducing a resolution to make a discharge petition possible so that H. R. 627, President Eisenhower's civil rights bill might be brought to the floor, it was gratifying to me to have the Committee on Rules agree, finally, to schedule floor consideration for this measure.

The House approved this moderate and evolutionary civil rights bill by a vote of 279 to 126. This civil rights bill extended no new privileges. It would have set up a commission to investigate denials of civil rights, would have elevated the civil rights group in the Department of Justice to a separate division under the control of an Assistant Attorney General and would have protected the right to vote by empowering the Attorney General to initiate special civil suits against groups depriving, or about to deprive persons of their civil rights. The Senate did not consider the civil rights bill. The House vote was 168 Republicans for, 24 against and 111 Democrats for, 102 against.

DEFENSE

President Eisenhower's defense proposals sent to the 84th Congress stressed continued improvement in our armed services' combat readiness and effectiveness without straining the Nation's economy. For defense in the current fiscal year the President requested $34.1 billion in new funds. The Democratic Congress approved $34.6 billion, insisting on authorizing $900 million more for the Air Force than requested, finally agreed in conference committee that the additional funds need not be earmarked for B–52 bombers alone but, "the added funds should be utilized to expedite production of heavy bombers, tankers, and other essential Air Force weapons to the optimum limit of existing facilities."

The Democratic Congress did not renew its veto power, enacted in the first session, which made it easier for the Defense Department to remain in civilian type commercial operations that often competed directly with private businesses. Instead of having to come before the Committee on Appropriations to justify dispensing with these commercial operations, the Department is now given greater latitude.

Besides extending the Defense Production Act with provisions to require industrial dispersion of new plants, the 84th Congress extended the Renegotiation Act for 2 years and increased the exemption to $1 million, provided for an $87 million stockpile of tungsten, asbestos, and so forth.

Public Law 968 appropriated $2.1 billion for military bases, housing, and so forth.

The 84th Congress gave career status to Reserve Army and Air Force officers, put the Armed Forces under social security effective January 1 and equalized survivors benefits.

FARM PROGRAM

The farm problem was one of the most stubborn problems confronting the Congress. The farm bill which finally became law after exasperating delays and emphasis on partisanship by the Democrats was a barely statisfactory compromise.

The Democrats and a few Republican members of the farm bloc, chiefly from one-crop States, wanted a return to rigid price supports, the very system under which today's surpluses had been accumulated and today's low prices generated. Accordingly, the Democrats passed a bill to return to rigid price supports of 90 percent of parity. Parity is a formula intended to correlate the price a farmer gets for his crop with the price he paid for his supplies.

The President vetoed this bill. Although 173 Republicans and 38 Democrats voted to sustain President Eisenhower, 182 Democrats and 20 Republicans opposed him. The two-thirds vote required to override a veto was not obtained. The House and Senate Agriculture Committees went to work again and produced what is now Public Law 540.

It includes a $1.2 billion, two-part soil-bank plan with no authority for 1956 prepayments on 1957 crops. Administration foes in Congress argued that such payments might influence voting in November. Agriculture Secretary Benson decided to make soil-bank payments this year to farmers who plowed up some of their plantings. He did so and by the sign-up deadline of July 27 had obligated $224 million, which will be paid out this fall.

One-year spending under the soil bank is limited to $750 million for the short-term acreage reserve, $450 million under the long-range conservation reserve.

Public Law 540 also retains flexible supports for the basic commodities but gives the Secretary of Agriculture authority to try a two-price plan on rice if he wishes; places feed grains at 76 percent of parity for this year; and increases from $300 million to $500 million the amount of surpluses that can be donated for disaster, famine, and foreign relief.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

Government employees fared well sometimes as a result of administration pressures on Congress, othertimes as a result of a generous Congress opposing the President.

Legislation protecting classified employees against salary cuts in cases of job reclassification, bills given regular status to indefinite and temporary postal substitutes are cases in point. Last year's 7.5 percent pay increase for classified employees and 8.6 percent pay boost for postal workers plus fringe benefits, gave Federal workers one of the largest single pay increases in history.

Many new retirement benefits for Federal employees are contained in Public Law 854 which was passed by this Congress. Annuities are increased for Federal workers and their widows and dependent widowers on the average of approximately 25 percent and those for surviving children by approximately 150 percent.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

The first session of the 84th Congress authorized the President, by an overwhelming bi-partisan vote to use American Armed Forces to defend Formosa, the Pescadores, and related positions.

Both Chambers adopted unanimously, a resolution putting Congress on record as opposing the United Nations seating of Communist China. The Democrat leadership and majority in the Senate did not bring up the Bricker amendment for final action.

FOREIGN AID

The President requested $4.9 billion in new appropriations for mutual security, or foreign aid, compared to $2.7 for the fiscal year just ahead.

The House approved $3.7 billion, the Senate approved $4.1 billion the House-Senate finally agreed on $3.8 billion. I voted against the entire foreign aid program on the basis that Congress has lost control of the funds for the whole area of spending. There is now an $8.7 billion carryover in the pipeline even if not one cent were appropriated this year. This carryover plus the counterpart funds available abroad, together with the new authorization makes $12.9 billion which the Executive can obligate, deobligate, and reobligate without checking back with the Congress. I do not believe that represents responsible legislative stewardship over the taxpayers' money, no matter which party is in power.

There is a definite and noticeable restiveness about annual renewals of the blank check aid authorizations evidenced by the fact that both the Senate and the House have authorized sweeping investigations of foreign aid. Both debate and voting on mutual security this year disclosed some decline in enthusiasm on the part of many southern Members who had once been strong supporters.

FOREIGN TRADE

The President barely succeeded in getting through his reciprocal trade extension bill last year. The vote on the resolution to consider H. R. 1 was probably the critical vote. It passed 193 to 192 on February 17, 1955. I supported the President. The President's major foreign trade achievement in Congress this year was in winning further simplification in customs procedures. Public Law 927 shifts valuations to export value alone, with certain exceptions. Authorization for United States membership in the Organization for Trade Cooperation, a key point in President Eisenhower's foreign trade program, was not brought to the floor in either House.

HEALTH

Public Law 911 is an omnibus law designed to reduce the shortage of nurses and health facilities and to improve mental health care authorizing Federal grants for training and extending the Hill-Burton Act which authorized up to $210 million a year for hospital construction. Public Law 835 authorizes $90 million over 3 years for the construction of research facilities. The 84th Congress also authorized $4 million for a dental research building at the National Institutes of Health and the establishment of a National Library of Medicine.

HOUSING

The 84th Congress revised the National Housing Act through Public Law 1020 extending to September 30, 1959 FHA home improvement loan authority. Loan maturities all increased from 3 years to 5 and maximums are raised to $3,500 for single-family dwellings, to $15,000 for nonsingle family units. FHA can insure up to 90 percent on dwellings costing not more than $8,100 per family unit built for elderly residents by nonprofit organizations. FHA mortgage insurance authority is increased by $3 billion. The military housing program is changed to allow a $16,500 maximum per unit with an overall ceiling of $2.3 billion and a cutoff date at the end of 1957.

Additional public housing is authorized at 35,000 units a year for this fiscal year and next but is tied to urban renewal in the local community. This is almost exactly the program the President wanted. The Democrats wanted a much larger program, 135,000 public housing units a year for 4 years. Public Law 898 extends the Veterans' Administration's home loan guaranty program to July 25, 1958.

IMMIGRATION

The President asked fundamental revision of the McCarran-Walter immigration law, which opponents had long contended was unfair to some racial and ethnic groups. Nothing substantial was done by Congress. The result: An Eisenhower defeat.

LABOR

The President for the fourth time vainly recommended amendment of the Taft-Hartley Act. The Democratic leadership, although making a campaign issue of Taft-Hartley repeal never seriously took up the issue in either house when they had a healthy Democratic majority to work with. As a matter of fact, the Committee on Education and Labor in the House met less frequently than in many other sessions. Since a majority of both parties supported the Taft-Hartley Act when it was originally passed in the 80th Congress, the Democratic leadership evidently feared that their party, too, would have been deeply split had the issue reached the floor for consideration.

NATURAL RESOURCES—POWER

The Republican administration and the Democratic Congress fought inconclusively over power projects. The Democrats compiled a pro-public-power record; the Republicans took a pro-private-power stand, combining the resources of Federal, local governments, and private capital to get the maximum power at the lowest cost to the taxpayer. The Hells Canyon public-power project on the Idaho-Oregon border was killed in the Senate. The House in turn killed a Senate-approved bill granting the State of New York authority to develop powerplants along the Niagara. Likewise, the House rejected a $156 million Fryingpan-Arkansas water diversion bill, but both bodies came to an agreement to authorize the $1.6 billion development of the upper Colorado River Basin in a 5-State area. The only inroads Federal power could make in the State of Indiana would be through authorization of federally built atomic reactors. Efforts by advocates of public power to put the Government into the atomic electric power business were halted by House Republicans when a bill, S. 4146, granting $400 million to build pilot reactors failed 203 to 191. This measure came to the floor without the sanction of the administration and without any consultations with the Atomic Energy Commission.

Due to the devastation and hardship wrought on many sections of the country during recent floods, this Congress was prompted to pass the Flood Insurance Act of 1956, establishing a $5 billion insurance and reinsurance program to assist flood victims.

This Congress also passed Public Law 660, increasing by $1 million annually Federal research grants to the States for water pollution and passed 8 significant reclamation and flood-control projects.

POSTAL

The administration supported a raise in postal rates to overcome the deficit of the Post Office Department. In 1955, in spite of the wage increase to postal workers, the deficit was whittled to $363 million, as compared to the 1952 Democratic administration's postal deficit of $727 million.

The House passed by 217 to 165 a bill to require a 4-cent stamp on first-class letters and to raise the airmail rate from 6 cents to 7 cents an ounce. This measure was killed in the Senate Post Office Subcommittee by a Democratic majority and the administration's efforts to offset the Post Office Department deficit failed.

REORGANIZATION

Pending before the 84th Democratic Congress were 19 major reports of the Second Hoover Commission Reports and 309 bills to implement the recommendations contained in these reports. The bipartisan Hoover Commission made a total of 314 recommendations of which 142 require legislative action. The balance can be enacted by administrative orders. A majority of the bills introduced were referred to the committee on which I serve, the House Committee on Government Operations. I constantly contacted our Democratic chairman, urging that action be taken on these measures which would result in increased efficiency and economy, but only one ever came out of committee to be passed by the Congress. Public Law 863 implements some of the Hoover Commission's recommendations for the reform of Government budgeting and accounting procedures. The law requires submission of budget information on program costs and accomplishments, departmental budgeting and accounting on an accrued cost basis and simplification of the subdivision in appropriations for funds. Even then, the bill was weakened by the House refusing to go along with the proposal that Congress appropriate funds on an accrued expenditure basis. Meanwhile, those recommendations which needed no legislative action were being implemented in the Federal Government by the Eisenhower administration at a savings of several billions to the taxpayer.

SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION

The Federal aid to school construction bill drew heavy support from the Democrat majority and lesser enthusiasm from the Republican side of the aisle. After days of debating, the House approved 225 to 192 an amendment to deny Federal funds to school districts or States that did not comply with the United States Supreme Court's decision against racial segregation in public schools. Then, by a vote of 261 to 158, the House refused a motion to send the bill back to its Labor and Education Committee for reconsideration and defeated the bill on a final rollcall vote of 224 to 194. The 84th Congress did authorize a $378 million extension of Federal aid to school districts overburdened by Federal activities.

SOCIAL SECURITY AND RETIREMENT

When the Republicans replaced the previous administration in Washington, only 47 percent of the aged were eligible for social-security benefits. The Republicans immediately brought into the social-security program 3,600,000 self-employed farm owners and operators and 4,500,000 others, including domestic workers, ministers, accountants, architects, engineers, State and local government employees, and so forth, as well as increasing retirement and death benefits. The first session of the Democratic 84th Congress showed a callous indifference to continuing improvements in the Social Security System. The single exception was a bill supported by both parties raising the limitation on the amount of railroad retirement annuities for spouses to the maximum payable under social security. The second session, however, enacted two changes in the social-security law. The first places some 800,000 women on Federal pension rolls by dropping the retirement age from 65 to 62, with reduced benefit payments. Widows can claim benefits at 62 with no reduction in payments. The second allows 250,000 totally and permanently disabled workers to draw retirement pensions at the age of 50. Social security payroll deductions beginning January 1957, will be increased one-fourth percent each for employer and employee, and three-eights percent for the self-employee.

TAXES

The contrast between Democrat tax-and-spend policies and Republican economies is dramatically presented in the record of the Eisenhower administration. In addition to the huge $7.4 billion tax cut of the Republican 83d Congress, Government spending was reduced more than $19 billion. These two factors contributed in a major way to the generation of unparalleled prosperity based on a record of economy of almost $400 billion. Fiscal 1956 ended with a balanced budget. The national debt was reduced. The budget for fiscal 1957 promises another surplus.

The Democrats who said that individuals would not benefit from the Republican tax cuts which actually put $4.6 billion directly into the pockets of the wage earner and his family, returned to Washington last January with tentative plans to carry out an individual income tax reduction. Even though the leadership was theirs, the only move they made toward a tax reduction was to have a subcommittee of the House Committee on Ways and Means study the Internal Revenue Code during the adjournment of Congress this fall.

In fact the record on income taxes shows during the period of 1900–56:

Democrats: Enacted the first Federal income-tax law in 1913.

Democrats: Voted 14 out of the 15 tax increases since 1913.

Democrats: Have put low-income workers on the tax rolls. During 20 years, Democrats added 44,900,000 persons, chiefly low-income workers, to the tax rolls.

Democrats: Have drastically increased taxes on low-income families by reducing exemptions from $2,500 for a married couple, to $1,000; from $1,000 for a single worker, to $500.

Republicans: Enacted 7 out of the 10 reductions in income taxes.

Republicans: Have enacted only 1 of the 15 tax increases since 1913.

The 84th Congress extended the 52 percent corporation income tax rate to April 1, 1957—Public Law 458—and declined to cut excise taxes generally. Public Law 1010 is the exception which drops the 10 percent excise tax on amusement admissions of 90 cents or less.

TRANSPORTATION

The Democrat-controlled Congress delayed passage of the administration's comprehensive highway plan in 1955 because of a disagreement over the method of financing. The second session finally approved the proposed legislation, and President Eisenhower signed into law the biggest highway building program in history. It is to cost an estimated $32.9 billion of which the Federal share will be $27.7 billion. A Federal user's tax is expected to provide an income of $14.8 billion in added revenue over a period of 16 years. This program will provide a 41,000-mile Interstate Highway System linking State capitals and major cities with dual-lane, limited-access highways. It will take 13 years to complete.

Also authorized is an additional 3-year regular Federal-aid highway program in which the cost is shared equally between the Federal and the State governments.

In the line of shipping, this Congress authorized the building of the atom-powered merchant ship. This new ship will be a joint undertaking of the Maritime Administration and the Atomic Energy Commission.

VETERANS AND SERVICEMEN

The House voted increases in veterans' pensions and disability payments, but the Senate shelved the legislation. Both Chambers extended the veterans' home-loan program; extended social-security coverage to all military personnel; provided medical care for dependents of military personnel; raised the pay of medical and dental officers in the Armed Forces; continued the veterans' educational-aid program; raised the pay and allowances of military personnel; extended the dependents' assistance law; authorized loans to veterans for farm homes.

House rollcall	Description and result	Date	BROWNSON vote	Eisenhower position	BROWNSON support
48 (46 and 47)	H. R. 12.—Restore rigid supports at 90 percent parity for 5 basic commodities. Yeas 206, nays 201, present 5	May 5	Nay	Nay	Supported.
52 (57)	H. Res. 223.—Would prohibit amendments to Hawaii and Alaska statehood bill including amendments to permit separate action on each territory. Yeas 323, nays 66.	May 9	Yea	Nay	Opposed.
62	On Vinson amendment to Department of Defense Appropriation bill to eliminate sec. 639 which forced Defense Department to come to congressional committees before terminating business-type activities. This section was the subject of a strong Presidential attack when he signed the legislation. Yeas 184, nays 202.	May 12	Yea	Yea	Supported.
72	H. R. 2851.—Makes available agricultural commodities owned by the CCC to persons in need in areas of acute distress. Yeas 344, nays 1, present 3.	May 25	Yea	Yea	Supported.
79	S. 2061.—Raises pay of postal workers an average of 8 percent. Administration proposal after President's veto of 8.59 percent raise had been sustained. Yeas 410, nays 1.	June 7	Yea	Yea	Supported.
80	H. R. 5923.—Expedites survey and construction of Inter-American Highway. Yeas 353, nays 13	June 8	Yea	Yea	Supported.
93	H. R. 6040.—Custom's simplification. Motion to recommit bill which amends Tariff Act of 1930 and repeals obsolete provisions. Recommit with instructions. Yeas 143, nays 232.	June 22	Nay	Nay	Supported.
95	H. R. 6992.—Extends for 1 year existing temporary increase in the public debt ceiling, to $281 billion. Yeas 267, nays 56.	June 27	Yea	Yea	Supported.
99 (100)	H. R. 3005.—Conference adds doctor's draft law to draft extension as passed by House. Motion to recommit conference report including doctor's draft. Yeas 171, nays 221.	June 28	Yea	Nay	Opposed.
105 (110)	S. 2090.—Mutual Security Act of 1954 amendments (foreign aid). Authorizes $3,285,800,000. Yeas, 273 nays 128.	June 30	Nay	Yea	Opposed.
109	H. R. 3210.—Water diversion. Authorizes increased diversion of water from Lake Michigan into Illinois Waterway. (Similar pocket-vetoed in 1954.) Motion to recommit. Yeas 74, nays 316.	July 6	Yea	Yea	Supported.
129	H. R. 7000.—A bill to provide for the strengthening of the Reserve Forces, referred to by its opponents as a modified UMT measure. It spells out the individual's military obligation. Yeas 315, nays 78.	July 25	Nay	Yea	Opposed.
132 (130 and 133)	H. R. 7474.—Highway construction. On motion to recommit with instructions to substitute Eisenhower program for Democrats 12-year plan with increased fuel and highway taxes. Yeas 193, nays 221.	July 27	Yea	Yea	Supported.
141	S. 2576.—Housing. Authorizes construction of only 35,000 public housing units a year for 2 years, improvement of housing, elimination of slums and the conservation of urban communities. Yeas 396, nays 3.	July 29	Yea	Yea	Supported.

NOTE.—Using Congressional Quarterly, the congressional record of debate, and information from the White House as a basis, this record indicates that I supported President Eisenhower 21 times and opposed him 4 times during the 1st sess. of the 84th Cong. for an Eisenhower support percentage of 84 percent and an opposition percentage of 16 percent with the opposition centered around separate consideration for Hawaiian statehood, the doctor's draft amendment, $3.3 billion of mutual security authorization (foreign aid) and the increase of individual military contribution by those largely under 21 years of age. In the ground rules employed, all appropriation bills have been eliminated as being more or less noncontroversial and an attempt has been made to select 1 decisive vote on each matter.

2D SESS., 1956

House rollcall	Description and result	Date	BROWNSON vote	Eisenhower position	BROWNSON support

94	H. R. 11380.—Postal rates. To raise postage rates in an effort to decrease the Post Office Department's deficit. Yeas 217, nays 166.	July 6	Yea	Yea	Supported.
101	H. R. 12038.—Service-connected pension rates. Increases service-connected disability compensation and dependency allowances. Yeas 391, nays 0.	July 12	Yea	Yea	Supported.
104	H. R. 11708.—Agricultural trade. Amends the Agricultural Trade Development Act of 1954 to provide an additional $1.5 billion to dispose of surplus agricultural commodities. Yeas 369, nays 6.	July 18	Yea	Yea	Supported.
111 (106, 110)	H. R. 627.—Civil rights. To provide means of further securing and protecting the civil rights of persons within the jurisdiction of the United States. Yeas 279, nays 126.	July 23	Yea	Yea	Supported.
115	On amendment to Defense Department appropriation bill requiring Secretary of Defense to notify Congress of proposed transfer of work to private industry and providing a 60-day period during which either Chamber of Congress could disapprove. Yeas 201, nays 185.	July 24	Nay	Nay	Supported.
117 (116)	H. R. 12061.—Federal civilian atomic powerplant acceleration. On motion to recommit. Yeas 203, nays 191	July 24	Yea	Yea	Supported.
119	Housing bill.—Compromise between Senate version of 135,000 units a year, House committee version of 60,000 units, and House version of 35,000. Extends and improves FHA property improvement loan program, authorizes $3 billion FHA insurance, etc. On amendment to rule to provide for striking out title V. Yeas 92, nays 299.	July 25	Nay	Nay	Supported.
123	Rule on authorizing construction of Fryingpan-Arkansas project in Colorado. Yeas 179, nays 194	July 26	Absent	Yea	Absent.
131	H. Res. 604 to consider H. R. 7850 authorizing the construction of the Little Wood River reclamation project in Idaho. Yeas 173, nays 168.	July 27	Yea	Yea	Supported.

NOTE.—Support of the President's program is measured by many things; work in the committee, debate on the floor of the House, cooperation with the executive department and supporting as many administration measures as possible. Statistically, the best compilation of legislation in which the President was interested indicates that I supported him 20 times, opposed him 4 times, and was absent attending a meeting with General Twining at the time 1 rollcall vote was taken. It is, of course, impractical to indicate support on voice votes, division and teller votes, which are not recorded but are often of far greater importance than the final rollcall vote.

Report to the People of the 11th District of Michigan

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. VICTOR A. KNOX

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, Congress has acted upon many bills during this second session that is approaching adjournment. All of them merit comment; but, as has been my practice since being a Member of Congress, I would like to report on those that are most beneficial to my constituents.

At the outset I wish to state that, because of the differences in opinions existing between Members of both the House of Representatives and the Senate, not all of the measures I favored were enacted into law in the form that I would like them to be in. Then, too, not all legislation I favored was considered. This is natural under the procedures in our representative form of government, and more so when the President and his administration are of one political party and the control of the Congress rests in the majority of another political party.

Another factor that has retarded the development of certain projects that we in the 11th District consider desirable has been the urgent need for restoring order to our Federal fiscal affairs. Now that the Eisenhower administration has ended deficit financing and achieved fiscal solvency, it is my expectation that American citizens can look forward to accelerated progress in the development of our economy, the conservation of our resources, and the preservation of our American heritage.

President Eisenhower again at the beginning of this session of this Congress submitted an extensive and worthy legislative program asking for soundly progressive action that would benefit all Americans equally.

Since all of my constituents live by or within close proximity to the Great Lakes I know they are all interested in the progress of the St. Lawrence Seaway, which will do so much to strengthen our Nation economically and militarily. The Corps of Engineers has recommended modification of existing projects on the Great Lakes to provide for further improvements to the channels in the St. Marys River, the Straits of Mackinac, the St. Clair River and Lake St. Clair, and Detroit River. So that an adequate draft for safe navigation would be possible, Congress passed legislation authorizing the controlling depth of the connecting channels to be not less than 27 feet. The estimated Federal cost for this channel improvement is $115,818,000 for new work and $200,000 annually for maintenance.

Living in a district that has approximately 1,000 miles of shoreline, we are aware that much work is needed to improve our harbors. During 1956 alone Congress appropriated $53,000 for the St. James Harbor at Beaver Island, with local interests providing an additional $7,500. One hundred and ten thousand dollars was appropriated for plans and specifications to initiate dredging work at the Cheboygan Harbor and River. Funds have been made available to permit the completion of the preliminary examination report at AuTrain-Shelter Bay Harbor. Harbor improvements which are quite urgent will be accomplished at Whitefish Point for which $100,000 was made available this year. It is estimated that to complete this project $394,000 will be needed.

Just within the last few weeks the Bureau of the Budget has released $241,000 to commence work on the Inland Waterway Route in the Lower Eleventh.

A resolution which I introduced was adopted providing for a review of the Waiska River Harbor.

Hearings have been arranged in Escanaba on September 12 by the Corps of Engineers on proposals to survey the needs of the harbor with a view to obtaining Federal assistance.

In September of 1955 I reported that there was included in the President's budget message $3,312,000 for the removal of the bridge island at the upper end of the Soo Locks and for the construction of a new railroad bridge. This expenditure will cover the 3-year period of 1956 to 1958. In July of this year the Congress authorized the Secretary of the Army to accomplish the alteration of the International Bridge across the St. Marys River under an agreement with the Sault Ste. Marie Bridge Co. The estimated cost of the alteration of the bridge is $2,620,000 of which the bridge company will pay $262,000.

The Escanaba Airport has received an appropriation of $87,500 to acquire land, grading, draining, and paving the east-west runways.

Seventy-three Capehart-type housing units will be provided at Camp Lucas. Two million one hundred and fifty-six thousand dollars has been allocated to Kinross Air Base for operation and training facilities, maintenance facilities, housing, and community facilities and land acquisition.

New post office facilities have been made available at St. Ignace, Atlanta, and Charlevoix. Indian River will have a new post office within the next few months, and bids are being requested for a new facility at Stephenson. The Post Office Department also has under consideration plans for other new post offices in the 11th Congressional District.

I am sure many of you will recall that a treaty has been adopted relative to the Great Lakes Fisheries Convention between the United States and Canada. The purpose of the treaty is to control, and if possible eradicate the lamprey eel which has seriously injured our fishing industry in the Great Lakes area. To carry out the provisions of the treaty $620,000 has been appropriated for this fiscal year.

We must have a proper resource development of fish, and still we must maintain the inherent right of every citizen and resident of the United States to engage in fishing for his own pleasure, enjoyment, and betterment; and still further we must stimulate the development of a strong, prosperous, and thriving fishery and fish processing industry. In order to establish a sound and comprehensive national policy with this respect and to strengthen the fisheries segment of the national economy, legislation was enacted creating a United States Fish and Wildlife Service within the Department of the Interior consisting of two separate agencies, both of which shall have the status of a Federal bureau. One of the agencies shall be known as the Bureau of Commercial Fisheries, and the other as the Bureau of Sport Fisheries and Wildlife.

At the urging of the Eisenhower administration newly passed farm legislation has brought into being the soil bank. Under this program an acreage reserve program is set up which authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to compensate the farmers for reducing their 1956 to 1959 acreage of basic commodities, feed grains, and so forth, at the discretion of the Secretary. Land put into the soil bank and retired from production may not be put to any other use. It is expected that with this legislation overproduction may be cut down in order to assist in the reduction of the multi-billion-dollar surplus agriculture stocks which are depressing farm prices and the income of the farmers. In addition we may expect that our precious farmland will be revitalized and replenished.

The school-milk program was extended to 1958. For each of the 2 fiscal years in the period beginning July 1, 1956, and ending July 30, 1956, $75 million of the funds of the Commodity Credit Corporation shall be used to increase the consumption of fluid milk by schoolchildren. This program will promote the health of our children and foster the economic well-being of our dairy farmers.

As a means of stabilizing the dairy industry and suppressing and eradicating brucellosis in cattle $20 million of the funds of the Commodity Credit are to be appropriated for the fiscal years 1957 and 1958.

Early in this 2d session of the 84th Congress action was taken on a bill which relieves the farmers of the burden of the excise taxes they pay on the gasoline and special fuels used on their farms for farming purposes. The refund under this new section of the Internal Revenue Code will be 3 cents a gallon.

On June 26 of this year Congress completed action on the biggest roadbuilding program in United States history. This highway measure will result in the expenditure of some $33 billion for highway construction during the next 13 years. It will be financed through increased taxes upon highway users. I would like to point out to my fellow citizens that despite the increased taxes necessary to finance this highway development progress, motoring in the future will be less expensive because of reduced congestion and fewer stops. Highway experts tell us that the increased taxes will be more than offset by motoring economies and of course the increased highway safety that will result from our improved road system more than justifies the added cost.

Amendments have been made to our Social Security Act which will make it possible for the totally disabled workers to begin to draw benefits at age 50; widows and workingwomen will be eligible for benefits at 62 instead of 65. Coverage has been extended to include all professional groups excepting physicians and osteopaths. In addition, increased Federal funds were voted for public assistance benefits and governmental medical help. I personally regret that more improvements were not enacted in our social-security law so that it would more adequate serve its intended purpose of providing for people in retirement and in adversity.

Effective January 1, 1957, under the Servicemen's and Veterans' Survivor Benefits Act the widows of servicemen and veterans dying from service-connected disabilities will receive $112 plus 12 percent of the deceased servicemen's base pay. There will be contributory social-security coverage after December 31, 1956, for all Armed Forces personnel. The lump-sum 6 months' death gratuity for in-service deaths occurring after December 31, 1956, will be continued with a minimum payment of $800 and a maximum of $3,000.

Many new retirement benefits for Federal employees are contained in legislation which was enacted in the closing days of this session. Annuities are increased for Federal employees and their widows and dependent widowers on the average of approximately 25 percent and those for surviving children by approximately 150 percent. The value of the benefits provided by this law is estimated at $340 million a year, of which the employees will contribute approximately $45 million, resulting from an increase in their payroll deduction from 6 percent to 6½ percent.

Every child, regardless of where he or she may live should have an equal opportunity to receive an education. We have large holdings of State and Federal lands in the State of Michigan upon which taxes cannot be levied and money received for educational purposes. Michigan itself has been negligent in assisting the poorer school districts to acquire the necessary facilities for the education of our youth. These are reasons for my feeling so strongly in favor of Federal aid for school construction and why I supported the school construction bill when it was before the Congress. I am sorry that it did not pass, but trust that in the future favorable consideration will be given to this much-needed legislation.

However, Congress did see fit to extend two laws which will assist those school districts where the federally caused impact of children anticipated from new or enlarged Federal installations create serious shortages of school facilities. Assistance will be granted to those school districts for school construction and also for the maintenance and operation of schools already in existence in areas affected by Federal activities. This assistance will be available until June 30, 1958.

The foregoing account is a dissertation on the mere highlights of the legislative accomplishments achieved in the past year. There were many other meritorious bills enacted that will benefit us all as American citizens. It is my hope and intention that the coming first session of the 85th Congress will bring about the passage of legislation beneficial to our farmers, aged, veterans, and Federal employees, and grant to the American people a substantial reduction in the tax burden they have shouldered so long. With the Congress and the President working together I am confident we can look forward to an America that is at peace, an America that is prosperous, and an America with a future that is limitless under God.

Biennial Report to Pennsylvania's 19th District Constituents

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. JAMES M. QUIGLEY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. QUIGLEY. Mr. Speaker, the 84th Congress has closed. When we look back over the months since January 1955, it looms as a constructive, progressive Congress, with its accomplishments far outweighing the disappointments.

Perhaps the greatest accomplishment of the 84th Congress has been to disprove, forever, the belief, widely publicized in the fall of 1954, that when the legislative branch is controlled by one political party and the executive another, a cold war must inevitably follow.

This has been true in past years; certainly a cold war existed during the 80th Congress. It may be true again in future years. But I am proud that the leadership of my party, the Democratic Party, in the House and in the other body, recognizes the responsibilities of service in a free society and upon that basis worked cooperatively with a Republican President in order to meet the problems of the day.

There have been many instances during the past 19 months when the majority in the Congress has not seen eye to eye with the President. In some instances our differences were fundamental and could not be resolved. In most instances we sought the common meeting ground so that a constructive, progressive effort resulted.

Instances where we failed include the matter of tax reduction. We Democrats were and remain firmly convinced that the national economy is best served by granting relief to the individual taxpayer. The administration was and remains just as firmly convinced that the right way to go about granting tax relief is to do it in such a manner that 90 cents of every reduction dollar benefits those with the highest incomes. We declined to give in because a matter of fundamental principle was involved. The result was no decrease in taxation. This was a disappointment.

Another "no compromise" area involves conservation of natural resources. We Democrats believe in a forthright, forward-looking program of development and conservation of resources for the benefit of all the people. The Eisenhower administration, by its actions, demonstrates that it believes in giving these resources for exploitation to special interest groups. In the absence of a forward-looking program from the administration, we have only accomplished negative results; we have halted the giveaways except those which may be accomplished by administrative procedures. We were able to force the administration to back up on its proposal to destroy the Dinosaur National Monument through its insistence upon including the Echo Canyon Dam in the upper Colorado project. This Congress saved this great educational and recreational area for the benefit of all the people, and thus has earned the gratitude of naturalists, sportsmen, and others devoted to preservation of great national parks, forests, and monuments. We have refused to compromise on this issue and the people are the benefactors. They will not, however, reap fullest benefits from these policies until the administration either changes its policies or is replaced.

There are several outstanding areas where common ground was sought, discovered, and where positive action was taken. One such instance was the highway program. Mr. Eisenhower recommended a moderate highway construction program. This was a program which we accepted and expanded. He also recommended a complicated system of budgetary legerdemain for financing the program which, at first glance, would have left the sacred cow budget with a paper balance, but would have saddled the taxpayers with terrific interest payments for years to come. For every dollar spent on highways, taxpayers would have been paying more than a dollar in interest. In the name of roads for the American people the administration was actually putting the New York investment bankers on easy street.

In contrast, the Democratic leadership in the Congress came up with a pay-as-you-go highway program under which every dollar collected for road construction will be spent on road construction. From this program which the administration finally went along with the people will benefit.

Another area where a common ground was sought involved minimum wages. We Democrats suggested an increase to $1.25 per hour. President Eisenhower recommended 90 cents. Throughout lengthy committee consideration, and throughout the debate in the House, the President remained obdurate. A veto was hinted. However, we compromised and the President did not go through with his veto. The result is that we now have a minimum of $1 per hour. This makes it possible for industries such as we have in the 19th Congressional District of Pennsylvania to compete on a more equitable basis with rivals from low-wage areas.

President Eisenhower has painted a picture of himself as being most concerned with matters of foreign policy—a field in which he felt his training as a career Army officer eminently qualified him. He considers the conduct of foreign policy, the creation of new policies where needed, and all aspects of our relations with the other nations of the world, to be the most important task he faces.

In this vital field, instead of being faced with a cold war in the Congress, Mr. Eisenhower has enjoyed far, far more cooperation and support from the 84th Congress, controlled by the Democratic Party, than he ever enjoyed from the 83d Congress, controlled by the Republican Party.

In fact, if we may believe the recently published authorized story of the Eisenhower administration by Richard Donovan—and it is pertinent to note that there have been no disavowals—the opposition of his own leadership in the Congress was so great that, at one time, the President toyed with the idea of forming a new party.

Contrariwise, on the key votes in the 84th Congress, we Democrats have given General Eisenhower a greater share of our votes than he has received from his own party.

Early in the 84th Congress we spoke to the President, through the record of our proceedings, informing him of our constructive, positive approach to foreign policy. We assured him that we would earnestly follow the belief that partisanship ceases when we reach the Nation's borders. We pledged that we would not seek out the petty as the basis for carping criticism and demagoguery, the warp and the woof of Republican Party attitudes when Mr. Truman and Mr. Roosevelt were in the White House.

This is not to say that we abrogated our responsibility as the loyal opposition. We have criticized tactics; we have criticized the smugness, the wishing-will-make-it-so-isms of Mr. Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles; we have criticized such contradictions as the recent series of Eisenhower-Dulles-Nixon-Dulles statements when the independent nations were praised, castigated, praised, castigated, and then praised in virtually that sequence; we have criticized the lack of forceful leadership here in the United States by Mr. Eisenhower in behalf of the things that must be done—the hard decisions that inevitably must be made.

We have urged the President to chart bold, new courses in the pursuit of peace, and promised our backing and support in these. When he has gently swayed in this direction, that backing and support have been forthcoming. We, in the Congress, cannot be blamed for the inertia of the White House.

Mr. Speaker, it is pertinent to point out that the record of the 84th Congress has earned such complimentary descriptions as a "do something Congress," a "constructive Congress," a "hard working Congress," and similar phrases from leading newspapers and such outstanding reporters as Roscoe Drummond, of the pro-Eisenhower New York Herald Tribune, Drew Pearson, and many others.

In addition to legislation already mentioned, the record shows that we legislated for the people in many other instances.

We have expanded coverage of the Social Security Act to include many self-employed professionals, and liberalized its benefits to women, dependent children and the disabled. We have extended and expanded the hospital construction program, and pioneered new health protection and research programs. We have provided for the training of an increased number of nurses. We initiated the Salk polio-vaccine program under which needy children and expectant mothers may be inoculated against the long dreaded disease. The Congress tightened up laws to control narcotics, and provided for discretionary death penalty for sales of illicit drugs to minors.

Of particular value to the people of the 19th District of Pennsylvania, where prosperity is based, in part, upon the well-being of many small industries, has been our efforts in behalf of small business. Faced with the tremendous number of mergers during the past several years, accompanied by a sharp increase in outright business failures, we have stiffened penalties for violation of antitrust laws, gave the Government right to sue for recovery of damages, and curbed activities of bank-holding companies.

In the House we adopted a measure to plug a loophole permitting discriminatory price practices; another to require advance notice to the Government of a merger; and both Houses adopted legislation to free the local automobile dealer from the shackles of the manufacturer under existing stifling trade practices.

In the field of agriculture we enacted a soil-bank plan, giving the Government an additional weapon to use to combat a farm depression; we expanded and extended the school-milk program over early opposition by the Department of Agriculture; we provided an expansion of the Agricultural and Trade Development Act; we liberalized the farm-loan program; and expanded the borrowing capacity of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

We passed, but the President vetoed, a bill which would permit farmers who raise their own feed grains to plant unlimited acreage.

We passed a bill, of which I was a cosponsor, granting the farmer relief from special taxes on gasoline and other motor fuels when they are used in vehicles operated on the farm.

We adopted many measures in the field of national security and foreign affairs—two functions of the Government which are very closely related—which have strengthened both. By stepping up the procurement of intercontinental A-bombers we have attempted to retrieve some of the ground lost by the early budget philosophy of the administration. We have, and this is most important, strengthened the President's hand in carrying out his constitutional function in foreign affairs.

There follows a compilation of my record on key matters:

VOTED FOR

Reorganization and strengthening military reserves.

Stepped up procurement international A-bombers and jet fighters.

Special funds to prevent drastic cut in Marine Corps.

Analysis of All House Rollcall Votes During President Eisenhower's Administration, Both 83d and 84th Congresses

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. RICHARD M. SIMPSON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, now that Congress has adjourned it is possible to examine the support which President Eisenhower received from the 83d and 84th Congresses in connection with his legislative program. The 83d Congress was a Republican Congress. The Republicans had a majority of 50.8 percent. The 84th was a Democrat Congress. The Democrats had a majority of 53.3 percent. In order to appraise the record of the Congress in dealing with President Eisenhower's program, I have had prepared a tabulation of every vote taken during the entire 4-year period covered by the 83d and 84th Congresses.

After eliminating procedural votes and votes on items which were not a part of President Eisenhower's program, there were 123 votes involving his program in the 83d and 129 votes in the 84th Congress—a total of 252 such votes. On the 252 votes, Republicans cast 37,954 of the votes for President Eisenhower's program, or 58.2 percent of the total. The Democrats cast 27,223 such votes, or 41.8 percent of the total. On these 252 issues, the Democrats cast 21,435 votes in opposition to President Eisenhower, or 69.9 percent of all the opposition votes. The Republicans cast 9,227 such votes, or 30.1 percent of all opposition votes. The tabulation shows a breakdown of the rollcalls for the 83d and 84th Congresses.

All Eisenhower rollcalls

Congress	Number of votes	Eisenhower position				Opposed to Eisenhower position
		Republicans		Democrats		Democrats		Republicans
		Votes cast	Percent	Votes cast	Percent	Votes cast	Percent	Votes cast	Percent
83d	123	19,985	61.5	12,498	38.5	9,717	71.7	3,833	28.3
84th	129	17,969	55.0	14,725	45.0	11,718	68.5	5,394	31.5
Total	252	37,954	58.2	27,223	41.8	21,435	69.9	9,227	30.1

The above tabulation included many votes which were adopted with full bipartisan support, including some on which there was no recorded opposition.

Mr. Speaker, all votes which were adopted with a majority of both parties supporting President Eisenhower's program have been eliminated to see what the picture looked like when the chips were down. This left 117 votes in the 2 Congresses which were not passed with bipartisan support. On votes falling into this category, Republicans cast 16,344 votes for President Eisenhower, or 74.3 percent of the total. The Democrats cast only 5,664 such votes, or 25.7 percent of the total. On this same group of 117 issues, the Democrats cast 17,306 votes in opposition to President Eisenhower, or 74.4 percent of all opposition votes, and the Republicans cast only 5,944 such votes, or 25.6 percent of the total. A breakdown of votes in this category for the two Congresses follows:

Eisenhower rollcalls on issues without bipartisan House support

Congress	Number of votes	Eisenhower position				Opposed to Eisenhower position
		Republicans		Democrats		Democrats		Republicans
		Votes cast	Percent	Votes cast	Percent	Votes cast	Percent	Vote cast	Percent
83d	54	8,296	77.0	2,479	23.0	7,421	75.9	2,352	24.1
84th	63	8,048	71.6	3,185	28.4	9,885	73.3	3,592	26.7
Total	117	16,344	74.3	5,664	25.7	17,306	74.4	5,944	25.6

Mr. Speaker, every vote we have taken during the past 4 years has been examined. This includes 296 rollcalls. They have been grouped into categories for each Congress.

The first group includes issues which were not included in the President's program which were supported by a majority of both parties. This group includes House organization and procedural matters.

The second group includes votes on items which were not included in the President's program but where a majority of the Republican Members took a position in opposition to the majority of the Democrat Members. The election of the Speaker would be included in this group.

The third group includes all issues included in the President's program which were supported by both parties with no recorded opposition.

The fourth group includes those issues in the President's program which were supported by a majority of both parties. Passage of the Mutual Security Act and the Formosa resolution, as well as numerous appropriations measures, fell into this category.

The fifth group includes those comparatively few issues where a majority of the Republicans were recorded in opposition to President Eisenhower's program. The vote on the Powell amendment to the school construction bill is an example of a vote which would fall into this category. During the 83d and 84th Congresses only 26 out of the 296 rollcalls—just 9 percent of the total—represented issues in this category. This clearly shows that the Republicans in the House have supported President Eisenhower's legislative programs.

The sixth group includes all those issues where a majority of the Republicans voted to support President Eisenhower's program and were opposed by a majority of the Democrats. There were 47 such votes in the 83d Congress and 44 in the 84th. Votes on issues in this group are a true measure of party support and opposition to President Eisenhower.

Mr. Speaker, included at this point is a summary of the tabulations for votes in category 6 for the 83d and 84th Congresses:

Congress	Number of votes	Eisenhower position				Opposed to Eisenhower position
		Republicans		Democrats		Democrats		Republicans
		Votes cast	Percent	Votes cast	Percent	Votes cast	Percent	Votes cast	Percent
83d	47	7,926	80.1	1,965	19.9	6,664	83.2	1,347	16.8
84th	44	6,736	82.2	1,460	17.8	7,596	83.8	1,466	16.2
Total	91	14,662	81.1	3,425	18.9	14,260	83.5	2,813	16.5

It will be noted that more than 80 percent of the votes cast in support of President Eisenhower's program in both the 83d and 84th Congresses on issues in this category were cast by Republicans, and that more than 80 percent of the opposition votes in each case were cast by Democrats.

House roll calls tell only a part of the story. Congressional committees determine the form in which legislation is presented to the Congress and in many cases, under our established rules, we have little opportunity to modify legislation on the floor. During the 84th Congress, the Democrat Party had control of all committees and they determined which issues would receive consideration.

The complete review of the voting patterns over the past 4 years should convince the voters of this country that they must support President Eisenhower by giving him a Republican Congress when we convene next January. As chairman of the Republican Congressional Campaign Committee, I shall leave no stone unturned in furthering President Eisenhower's program by the election of a Congress which will give his program the sympathetic consideration it deserves .

Mr. Speaker, so that the record may be complete and that every vote may be accounted for, included as a part of my remarks is a complete tabulation covering all votes taken during the 83d and 84th Congresses:

SUMMARY OF ANALYSIS OF HOUSE VOTES, 83D CONGRESS

This study reviews all of the House votes during the 83d Congress. One hundred forty-seven votes were taken. They have been placed into six groups as summarized below.

Groups 1 and 2 include items which were not included in the President's program. The 2 groups together include 24 votes, or 16 percent of the total.

No. 1. Issues not included in the President's program which were supported by a majority of both parties

Republicans:
- Yeas 1,648
- Nays 38

Democrats:
- Yeas 1,394
- Nays 157

The number of issues included in group 1 is 9, accounting for 6 percent of 147 votes.

No. 2. Issues which were not included in the President's program where majority of Republican Members voted in opposition to majority of Democratic Members

REPUBLICAN PARTY POSITION

Vote cast:
- Republicans 2,325
- Democrats 584

OPPOSED TO REPUBLICAN PARTY POSITION

Vote cast:

Better Roads for a Better America

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. LOUIS C. RABAUT

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, coming as I do from Detroit, the motor city of the world, it gives me great pleasure to have voted for the Federal highway-construction bill—a multi-billion-dollar roadbuilding project that will take more than a decade to complete. At long last, the American people, through their representatives in Congress, have placed the automotive problem in its proper perspective. You might say that the average citizen has come to realize what we in Detroit have known for a long time, namely, the family car is now a vital link in our everyday routine. Slowly but surely America also has been awakening to the fact that this wonderful invention, the automobile, is of no use if the roads are too congested to drive in comfort and parking is not available at our destination. In recent years State and local governments have been hard put even to repair roads enough to keep traffic moving. Some new roads have been constructed, but all too many of these are toll.

America is on the move. Today we are capable of traveling in hours a distance that would have taken our forefathers months. Mr. and Mrs. America on a modern-day vacation trip may journey 2,000 or 3,000 miles. The degree of enjoyment derived from a trip of this nature will depend in a large measure upon the ability of various regions to maintain their through-traffic roads. Quite often indebtedness limitations and other factors will prevent proper maintenance of the right-of-way. What then are we to do? The problem, unfortunately, cannot be attacked on a local basis. It is too big. The answer is to face the question squarely, admit that the interstate system is inadequate, and then make an effort to supply a solution.

Much is at stake in our highway system. The very complexion of our country is dependent upon the free movement of motor vehicles, both pleasure and commercial. In recent years, there has been a virtual exodus from the crowded cities to the clean air of the suburbs. Needless to say, this would have been impossible without the family car. With the suburban growth, however, the road congestion problem moved from the city to the county. Many suburban residents now find themselves quite inconvenienced since they must travel considerable distance to jobs, stores, and social events over choked, unsafe roads. It has been estimated that as high as 85 percent of workers living 10 miles from their place of employment must depend on their car for transportation. If suburban growth is to continue, we must link new communities and metropolitan areas with adequate roads. It is wonderful that so many parents are afforded the opportunity to raise their children in pleasant suburban communities; let us do nothing to inhibit further utilization of noncity areas.

A principal factor in the road problem demanding immediate attention is the rising toll of dead and injured on our Nation's thoroughfares. Every major holiday brings another sickening tabulation, each more terrible than the last. The plain fact is that the majority of our highways built 20 years ago were designed for light traffic and light vehicles but not to carry our present high-speed traffic. The neglect of the war years, coupled with expanded postwar production of fast, heavy motor vehicles, makes our present interstate system grossly inadequate.

It is quite safe to assume that in addition to personal annoyance, congestion, and loss of life and limb, many segments of our economy are being hampered and restricted in growth by the strangulation effect of poor roads. The farmer quite often cannot get his products to the consumer quickly enough to prevent spoilage; truckers cannot haul rapidly enough to assure inexpensive delivery of manufactured goods to the wholesale dealer. This in turn raises prices as expanded delivery charges are passed on to the ultimate consumer and, as prices go up, the customer restricts his purchasing. This is but one small instance of the indirect effect of poor roads on America's welfare. There are many other examples of industries adversely affected by the road situation. The most striking of these, of course, is the automobile industry.

It should be obvious to everyone that when the automobile industry suffers, the entire American economy will, in a very short time, feel the ill effects of a slump in Detroit.

It is difficult to visualize the many important ties that the city of Detroit has with every crossroad in America. The automobile figures prominently in all phases of commerce and has contributed mightily to the fabulous progress of American business. In addition to providing the workhorse of business, the automotive industry encourages and sustains a myriad of allied and subordinate industries. The 45,000 automobile dealers are but one small element of Detroit's contribution to the Nation's economic health. The thousands of gas stations—employing thousands of people—that dot the highways provide dissemination of the products of still other concerns which therein display and sell their wares to the auto owner.

Tires, glass, and mechanical repair shops, car washes, upholstery and convertible-top manufacturers, drive-in theaters, and restaurants—all are indebted to the automobile and all must have good roads to survive.

There are many reasons why an adequate road system is vital to the continued and expanded well-being of the American people. One out of every seven persons employed in the United States—or almost 10 million persons—is engaged in highway transport industries. This country owns 73 percent of the world's passenger cars, and almost $5 billion a year is paid in automobile insurance premiums. The Federal Government and the States have greatly benefited from auto vehicle taxes—some of which are too high. The automobile is a necessity, not a luxury.

The steel industry, the economic yardstick of the whole free-enterprise system, is also most dependent upon good roads to keep the sale of automobiles at a healthy level. As you probably know, the automobile industry consumes almost 40 percent of all sheet metal produced in the United States. Any economist will tell you that it is absolutely vital that the production of steel be kept as high as possible if the Nation is to remain financially stable.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that our vast road system has made us think big. We have astounded the world with our transportation feats in both peace and war. In World War II, our ability to move large numbers of troops both here and abroad utterly fascinated logistical experts from other nations. We did not learn these transportation secrets by accident. We developed them through a steady production of the best automotive products in the world, which in turn encouraged the best road system in the world. However, advancements in production methods in recent years have brought about an imbalance that must be corrected if we are to prosper and grow. I am certain the Federal highway construction bill of 1956, in addition to creating 150,000 new jobs, will alleviate the majority of highway problems facing us today.

Department of Defense Investigations

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES B. DEANE
OF NORTH CAROLINA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Speaker, during the 10 years I have had the honor of representing the people of the Eighth Congressional District of North Carolina, I have been increasingly impressed by the steady growth in the number and scope of congressional investigations.

There is no question but that the investigative function of the Congress is a most necessary adjunct to the legislative process. But it seems to me that greater care must be taken if these investigations are to fully serve the purposes for which they are intended. Where the matters being examined affect the executive branch of the Government, the investigation should be designed not only to help the Congress in its work but also the departments and agencies as well.

Since the Members of the Congress are themselves heavily burdened with their day-to-day legislative tasks, much of the actual investigatory work is, of necessity, placed in the hands of committee staffs. By and large, the staff personnel selected have been very good. However, I do not believe that the committees are making the best use of their potential. Individual members of committees are not always given an opportunity to participate directly with the staff and to guide their work. The staff, therefore, does not get the full benefit of the knowledge and experience of the entire committee.

The House Appropriations Committee, on which I have the honor and pleasure to serve, some months ago engaged a staff to investigate the procurement policies and practices of the Department of Defense. Although I was a member of the Subcommittee on Department of Defense Appropriations, I was not informed of the purpose and scope of this particular investigation. Other members of the subcommittee found themselves in the same situation. It was not until the investigating staff submitted its report that we were aware of the full nature of the investigation and the methods employed. We were thus deprived of an opportunity to make available to the staff the knowledge and experience which we had accumulated from our many contacts with officials at all levels in the Defense Establishment and from our personal inspections of defense installations throughout the world. I feel sure that the results of this investigation would have been of much greater value to both the committee and the Defense Department had the knowledge and experience of all the members of the subcommittee been brought to bear on this particular problem area.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish these remarks to be construed as criticism of the committee and subcommittee chairmen. They are extremely able, conscientious, and courteous gentlemen, and grossly overburdened with work. I offer these remarks purely as a suggestion for improving the work of committee staff investigators and to better assure that their reports contribute to the objective of better government.

Voting Record of the Honorable Richard E. Lankford, of Maryland

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. RICHARD E. LANKFORD
OF MARYLAND
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include a report of my voting record during the 84th Congress. The purpose of this report is to provide my interested constituents with a simple compilation of the votes I cast on important legislation which came before the Congress.

For the purpose of identification I include a brief description of each bill. For further simplification I have divided the list into categories according to general subjects.

FARM LEGISLATION

Voted for H. R. 10875 with soil-bank provisions and other programs designated to bolster farm income.

Voted for H. R. 8780 to eliminate gasoline taxes on fuel used in operation of farm machinery.

Voted for H. R. 12 to amend the Agriculture Act of 1949 with respect to price supports for basic crops.

Voted for H. R. 2851 to make Commodity Credit Corporation—farm surplus—commodities available for distribution to distressed areas.

Voted for H. R. 11708 to increase appropriations for disposal of agricultural products.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

Voted for S. 67 to increase pay of civil-service employees and provide fringe benefits.

Voted for H. R. 4644 to increase postal workers' pay, eliminate inequities in service.

Voted for H. R. 7619 which liberalizes civil-service retirement benefits.

LABOR

Voted for H. R. 7214 to increase the minimum wage to $1 per hour.

Voted against H. R. 9852 which would require dispersal of defense industries.

Voted for Bacon-Davis amendment to highway bill that requires prevailing rates of pay for all labor on highway-construction projects.

VETERANS

Voted for H. R. 7886 to provide increased pensions for World War I veterans.

Voted for H. R. 587 to extend the GI education bill.

Voted for H. R. 12038 for increased payments for service-connected disabilities.

Voted for H. R. 7089 to provide increased survivor benefits for servicemen.

Voted for H. R. 9824 which provides for educational assistance to children of certain veterans who died in World War II or Korea.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Voted for H. R. 6042 in 1955 and H. R. 10986 in 1956. Both bills provided for appropriations to operate the armed services.

Voted for H. R. 4393 in 1955 and H. R. 7993 in 1956. These bills provided $1.3 and $1.4 billion for Navy shipbuilding and modernization of fleet programs.

Voted for H. R. 3005 to increase benefits under dependents' assistance program and provide for a continuing Armed Forces personnel program.

Voted for H. R. 7000 to strengthen the Armed Forces Reserve program which offers youths choice of several ways to fulfill their military obligations.

Voted for H. R. 6829 in 1955 and H. R. 9893 in 1956 which provided nearly $4 billion for military construction projects.

Voted for H. R. 4720 to increase pay and allowances for members of the Armed Forces.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Voted for House Joint Resolution 159 which authorized the President to use the Armed Forces of the United States for the defense of Formosa and the Pescadores.

Voted for H. R. 1 which authorized the President to enter into beneficial trade negotiations with various nations of the world.

Voted for H. R. 7224 and H. R. 12130 which provided foreign aid funds.

Voted for House Concurrent Resolution 265 which expressed Congress' opposition to admittance of Red China into the United Nations.

HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE

Voted for H. R. 7535 to authorize a Federal aid program for school construction.

Voted for H. R. 7225 to lower the retirement age for women to 62 and start disability payments at age 50 under the social-security program.

Voted for S. 3272 which protects threatened communities by providing $15 million for Army engineers to construct without further authorization small flood-control projects.

Voted for H. R. 2840 which authorizes 5-year $7.5 million a year program of Federal aid for State library services in isolated rural areas.

Voted for S. 849 which authorizes Federal aid of $30 million annually for 3 years for construction of non-Federal facilities for research into various crippling and killing diseases.

Voted for S. 3616 to increase benefit payments under railroad retirement system.

Voted for H. R. 11861 which provides for Federal participation in the cost of protection of the shores of the United States from erosion and permits Federal assistance to shores other than those publicly owned where a benefit will accrue to or is incidental to the benefit to public property.

Voted for H. R. 10660 which sets up a 13-year $38 billion program to develop interstate primary and secondary highways in the Nation.

Voted for H. R. 8320 which extended school milk program and set up $75 million fund for program.

BUSINESS

Voted for H. R. 8710 which removed authority of Defense Department to negotiate big contracts. Bids must now be called on contracts over $2,500.

Voted for H. R. 7992 which would require Defense Department to submit proposal to Congress before contracting out work to private industry.

Voted for H. R. 6227 which provides regulation by the Government of bank holding companies.

Voted for H. R. 4259 and H. R. 9166 for extension of corporation taxes.

Voted for S. 3732—Federal Flood Insurance Act of 1956—provides liberal program for issuance of direct flood-insurance policies.

Voted for S. 3879 which permits automobile dealers to sue under antitrust laws for unjust revocation of franchise.

NATURAL RESOURCES

Voted against H. R. 6645, a bill which would have exempted independent gas producers from regulation under Natural Gas Act of 1938.

Voted for H. R. 12080 to authorize $1.3 billion for river and harbor improvements, flood and beach erosion control projects.

Voted for S. 890 which increases to $1 million a year Federal research grants to States and expands program for water-pollution control to $50 million a year for 5 years.

Voted for H. R. 8750 which broadens watershed and flood-prevention program—allocates shared costs among Federal and local interests.

Social Security and Benefits for the Aged

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, I have been from the very beginning a strong believer in the aims and purposes of social security, and consequently I gave my support to the first social-security bill that was passed and to every amendment that has been adopted since that time.

The first bill was not much more than an adoption of the principle that underlies social security, namely, assistance to workers in their old age and to others handicapped and in need of help. The amount of benefits fixed by the bill was not large. But it was, at least, something. As time went on deficiencies in the legislation became more and more apparent. This brought demands for correction. Congress was sympathetic. It recognized the need. It sought to remedy the deficiencies. Thus, throughout the years and even up to and including this session of Congress changes have been made that have greatly improved the status of retired workers, elderly people, and the handicapped. Benefits have been increased, but there is more that should be done in this respect.

In addition to the many improvements made in the past, an admendment adopted during this session of Congress has reduced the age of eligibility of women from 65 years to 62 years. The amendment also has provided that persons totally disabled shall be eligible for benefits at age 50 instead of 65. Furthermore, the act has been expanded so that it now includes an additional 10 million persons to come under its coverage in different activities.

More than seven and one-half million are receiving monthly payments under old-age and survivors insurance. Over 1,300,000 are receiving unemployment insurance payments. Five million are receiving public-assistance payments through the Federal-State programs of old-age assistance, aid to dependent children, aid to the totally disabled, and aid to the blind. Additional millions are receiving services pursuant to the maternal and child health and welfare provisions of the Social Security Act. In all, 14,000,000 persons are receiving money payments today under our Social Security Act programs.

As I have already said, I am of the opinion there are many changes yet to be made to make the act all that it should be. These relate to increased benefits and further reduction of age limitations for eligibility for benefits. Furthermore, the act should be expanded until all persons are brought within its provisions. There should be no business or other activity excluded. It is a national law and should give coverage to all who desire to participate in its benefits.

It seems to me there is a distinct duty and obligation upon a nation such as ours to make provision for its elderly citizens. This applies not only to social-security benefits, but also with respect to housing, hospital and medical care, nursing homes, and in other fields of welfare activities. There is nothing more disturbing nor the cause of greater worry than to approach old age with no assurance as to how it will be possible to meet the conditions of that time of life with only meager savings or maybe none at all.

If there should be any disposition upon the part of those who do not feel or face the condition I have just described and doubt the existence of such, then I can assure them that a day's experience in any congressional office will be sufficient to convince them of the fact that such a condition does exist. The letters that come into a Congressman's office and the personal appeals that are made to him, either by the aged themselves or by those who, with incomes insufficient to care for their own families, must assume the obligation to care for aged relatives, show this condition of need to be all too general. It is a pathetic problem, and we must find a remedy for it.

Investigations of every kind and character are authorized by Congress, and millions of dollars are spent in carrying them forward. I know of no investigation that is more necessary or more justifiable than an inquiry that will show the dire need of many thousands of aged persons who are faced with distress as they reach old age, and to this I pledge my support.

Leopold D. Silberstein

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EDWARD MARTIN
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. MARTIN of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to extend remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a statement prepared by me.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Americans are becoming better acquainted with the name of Leopold D. Silberstein, president of Pennsylvania's Penn-Texas Corp.

However, there is considerable significance in the fact that his name is being used, to the exclusion of 30 or 40 others, in reports on the works of a committee of Congress looking into the ownership of certain American industries.

This committee is doing a fine job, I am sure, and certainly a most important one.

It has been reported in the newspapers that 30 or 40 large business enterprises and businessmen are involved in the inquiry, but the stories always seem to mention only Mr. Silberstein by name, and refer to the others as "30 or 40 others."

This may or may not be a form of persecution for this man, but the evidence would seem to indicate that it is. It appears to me, in the interest of fair play, that if one of those being investigated is to be named then the others should be named.

When one man is singled out of 30 or 40, the question of individual persecution must arise, under our American way of thinking and the accepted rules of fair play.

While I do not know who is responsible for the situation, nor the reasons behind it, I do want to express the thought before my colleagues that if one name is to be used they should all be used.

This is an appropriate time further to bring Mr. Silberstein to the attention of Members of Congress because of his many accomplishments in the field of business enterprise, humanitarian causes, and membership in groups and organizations dedicated to the help of mankind.

He is an example of the energetic businessman who is never too busy to devote his talents to worthwhile causes and bring to them the same measure of success that has characterized his business enterprises.

We need more of these men in America today. Mr. Silberstein is president of the Pratt-Whitney Foundation, Inc., dedicated to philanthropic work; cochairman of the New York Daily Mirror youth program to combat juvenile delinquency; a member of the fund-raising committee of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, Inc., and a member of the 1956 campaign committee of the cerebral palsy drive.

Recently, the Advertising Club of Washington awarded a citation, entitled "Award for Achievement," to Mr. Silberstein.

In 6 years, starting with a Pennsylvania coal company in financial difficulty, Mr. Silberstein has erected an enormously successful and job-providing corporation with 16 subsidiaries throughout the United States.

The important point is that Mr. Silberstein came to this country only 8 years ago as a refugee—one who had been forced to flee for his life from Nazi persecution.

The citation stressed the fact that he has set new standards in business public relations based on the belief that the investing, working, and consuming public have the right to know how America's leading corporations operate.

Nowhere in all the world could this happen but in a great free society under our inspired system of government.

Mr. President, when William Penn founded the colony of Pennsylvania he did so in the concept of what he himself described as the "holy experiment."

This experiment, to be a beacon light to the founders of our Nation, made of Pennsylvania a sanctuary for the persecuted of all Europe.

Under the benevolence of William Penn, true principles of freedom, liberty of conscience, and love of one's fellowmen were founded in Pennsylvania. There were no barriers—there was no discrimination. There was neither creed, nor color, nor race.

Leopold Silberstein has given us new proof that our country is still the land of liberty and freedom and that our boundaries are limitless and our frontiers still unexplored.

My distinguished colleague the senior Senator from Oregon has previously mentioned Mr. Silberstein on this floor, as did former Senator Hunt, of Wyoming, who commented on Mr. Silberstein's speech over the Voice of America to foreign countries.

His success, starting with the rehabilitation of the Pennsylvania coal company and providing many, many jobs for our people, led to the creation of numerous other companies.

Mr. Silberstein founded the Penn-Texas Corp., which he heads, and met with even greater success. A builder of companies, I note that Time magazine once described him also as a "professor of sick companies." None of his companies is sick today. He makes them strong by modern, sound business enterprise.

We in Pennsylvania believe in free enterprise and we welcome those with the know-how to provide jobs and add to our Nation's economic growth and well-being.

Pledge and Performance—A Record of Magnificent Republican Accomplishment for America

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES A. HALLECK
OF INDIANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, no political organization has ever done more to keep its pledges to the people of this country than the Republican Party under the leadership of President Dwight D. Eisenhower.

The result is a record of magnificent accomplishment for America.

Less than 4 years ago the citizens of this Nation turned to President Eisenhower and the Republican Party because they wanted some changes made in the way the Federal Government was being run.

Small wonder.

Here are some of the things they were reading about in the newspapers:

New casualty lists from the stalemated war in Korea.

Prospects of a bigger Federal deficit with billions more added to the public debt in the year ahead.

Falling farm prices and mounting farm surpluses.

Scandal and corruption in government.

Communist subversion; new disclosures of Red sympathizers holding jobs on the Federal payrolls.

Inflation sending the price of consumer goods higher and higher.

Threats of new Government controls over an economy already in a straitjacket of regimentation.

Schemes to centralize more power in Washington at the price of State and local authority as well as individual freedom.

This was the sorry state of the Union after two decades of Democrat mismanagement, and the people of America were at long last wised up, fed up, and burned up with the record of a party that was long on promise and short on performance.

What a welcome contrast the stewardship of the Republican-Eisenhower administration has been.

The story of that stewardship—of achievement in the field of national security, domestic economy, and social progress—is on the books.

We have come far—farther than anyone believed we could come in such a short time—toward restoring sound, decent, far-sighted government.

In broadest outline, we have moved from war to peace and from a stagnating economy to a prosperity unsurpassed in the history of man.

Only the bitter partisan would insist the Nation's well-being today has all come about by accident.

Wars just do not end by themselves.

Our domestic economy is not run by perpetual motion.

Government plays a major role in the life of every citizen, and it is the individual himself who knows whether the government serving him is good or is bad.

Our people have had good government for the past 4 years and they know it.

They have never had better government.

The war in Korea—that frustrating, deliberately stalemated war—was ended by the new Republican-Eisenhower administration as the first order of business.

What is more important, there have been no new wars.

Under the experienced leadership of President Eisenhower, the Nation's defenses have been strengthened.

Americans are more secure today than ever before—safer from attack and from subversion.

A firm, consistent foreign policy has earned us world respect.

Our proposals for an enduring peace have bolstered the hopes of freedom-loving men and women everywhere and have confounded our potential enemies.

Thanks to competent administration of our defense buildup, we have made the taxpayer's dollar work harder, giving us greater armed might for less money.

We lead the world in the development of atomic weapons and we lead the world in a program for the peaceful use of nuclear power.

In 1950, Republicans adopted a Statement of Principles and Objectives, one of which held that "A strong American economy is a vital factor for our security."

The American economy has never been stronger than it is today.

Our economy is strong because of Republican policies which were put into practice by President Eisenhower and his administration, and supported by Republicans in the Congress of the United States.

What did we do to stimulate this record-breaking national prosperity? Many things.

Let me list a few:

We abolished artificial wage and price controls that were stifling economic growth.

We cut Government spending, eliminating waste and extravagance in the Federal household.

This operation involved reductions in the Federal payroll amounting to tens of thousands.

It involved more than a dozen reorganization plans adopted by the Republican 83d Congress on the recommendation of the administration.

It involved chopping out waste and luxuries in the Truman administration's budget by more than $10 billion in the first year of the Eisenhower administration.

With such savings it was possible for a Republican administration to make good on its pledge to cut taxes.

As a result, American taxpayers got the biggest break from the Republican 83d

Congress in the Nation's history—a $7.4 billion annual tax reduction program, with $2 out of every $3 staying in the pockets of individuals.

Beyond that, a monumental tax revision bill corrected scores of inequities which had grown up in our tax structure through the years, inequities that caused unreasonable hardship for many in lower income brackets who could least afford the burden.

A Republican administration and a Republican Congress moved rapidly and in harmony to get the Government out of competition with private industry where such competition was unjust and unnecessary.

A Small Business Administration was established, for the first time, to help the little operator solve his postwar problems and prosper as a vital part of our complex economic machine.

Recognizing agriculture's prime importance to the health of the Nation's economy, a Republican administration moved early to attack deep-rooted farm troubles with a sound and sensible program.

The new program, finally enacted after repeated Democrat attempts at sabotage, is now in operation and agriculture is moving ahead. The long downward trend of farm prices has been reversed and farm income is rising. Since 1954, nearly $3 billion worth of Government-owned surplus agricultural products have been disposed of, mostly by export.

Our goal is a fair share of the national income for the farmer without unwarranted regimentation by Government bureaucracy.

Republicans consider fiscal integrity a priceless ingredient of good government.

Careful handling of the people's money has been a hallmark of this Republican administration.

One of the major pledges of the Republican Party was to balance the Federal budget at the earliest possible time.

The budget has been balanced.

Moreover, the Federal Treasury has been able to announce a surplus of $1.7 billion to apply on the national debt.

These actions supplied the foundation for our present prosperity—a prosperity unprecedented in scope.

Here are the record-breaking aspects of our domestic economy today, an economy that is booming because our people have confidence in the policies and principles of this Republican-Eisenhower administration:

National income is at its highest level in history, surpassing by $33.5 billion the war-stimulated peak under a Democrat regime.

We have broken through the $400 billion mark on our gross national product.

Employment is beyond all previous expectations, with nearly 67 million Americans holding jobs.

What is more, hourly and weekly wages are running at an all-time high. Pay increases mean something today, in sharp contrast to cost-of-living wage hikes of past years which were always a step below a price level that kept going up and up.

Strike losses are at the lowest level since the long years of war and Government intervention in work stoppages.

Per capita disposable personal income is at a record high and so is production and consumer purchasing.

Far-reaching plans for the expansion of business and industry give assurance of even more and better job opportunities for young men and women now coming into the labor market.

Through the years, the Republican Party has always woven into the fabric of our social and economic orders the good that has developed generation by generation.

The surging progress of the last 4 years in the area of human well-being is without parallel in the past 20 years.

This short period has seen establishment of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

It has seen the country's social security system broadened and improved, with more than 10 million additional Americans brought into the program and benefits increased to the millions already participating.

Unemployment insurance coverage has been extended to millions of additional workers and railroad retirement benefits increased.

A program of hospital construction for the chronically ill is now in operation.

The dream of most American families—to own their own homes—has been realized by more households than during any other similar period in the Nation's history.

The record number of new homes—built by private industry under Government policies that have encouraged but not subsidized such activity—demonstrates that America can become a nation of homeowners without a vast public housing program.

The social progress we have made under Republican leadership has not been at the cost of individual self-reliance. It has not been accomplished through socialization of vast segments of our economy, but through well-ordered programs that have stimulated private initiative and free enterprise.

The Nation's long-neglected highway system, the network of roads so necessary to the orderly growth of America socially and economically, and to our very security, has come in for a full share of attention.

Never before has any nation embarked on a roadbuilding program so ambitious in its concept than the one put on the record books this year.

Blocked by a Democratic Congress for a year, the $33 billion program was finally enacted into law, thanks to the persistence of a Republican President and Republicans in the Congress, who put the national good above all other considerations.

It is this determination of a Republican President to serve all the people that has contributed so much to the success of the Republican program for a better America.

President Eisenhower has kept the faith.

He has restored the great prestige of the office of the Presidency by the example he has set.

The people of America believe in him because he has proved that he believes in them.

There is no favoritism in the White House today.

There is no petty bickering with the Congress, no ultimatums, no displays of spleen.

Citizens in all walks of life know that under Republican leadership they have been treated as Americans should be treated—fairly and with respect.

Small wonder President Eisenhower stands today as the most widely admired leader in the world.

Much remains to be done.

Under continued Republican leadership, it can and will be done.

We have come far along the road to an enduring peace, but problems and misunderstandings still beset mankind.

The prosperous times we presently enjoy can be but the prelude of an even better life for future generations of Americans if we hold to principles that have already made our Nation the envy of the world.

The Republican Party has demonstrated what sound leadership can do for America and for the world.

It is pledged to continue that kind of service in the years ahead.

Pay as You Go in Government Financing

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EDWARD MARTIN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. MARTIN of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD my speech to my comrades of the Spanish-American War at the 57th reunion of the old 10th Pennsylvania Infantry, which fought with the greatest distinction in the Philippines.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Spanish-American War was our last armed conflict in which every man was a volunteer. It was the first war in which our troops fought beyond the seas. It started the course of the United States toward leadership as a world power.

The pay of the Spanish War serviceman was $13 a month, paid in gold. He didn't get a $10,000 insurance policy, a bonus, separation pay, adjusted compensation, or a college education at Government expense.

No service pensions were provided for Spanish War veterans until 20 years after the war ended and no hospitalization was available until 24 years after the war.

The food of a soldier consisted of meat, beans, potatoes, and hardtack. It took a troop train 8 days and 8 nights to cross the continent, and soldiers were carried in second-rate day coaches. It required 30 days to go from San Francisco to the Philippine Islands.

In view of present day conditions it is interesting to look back to those days and consider the situation in the United States in 1898.

At that time there were 45 States in the Union. The population of the United States was a little under 76 million. It is now more than 166 million.

In the year, 1898, the national income was a little more than $15 billion a year and the money in circulation was less than $2 billion or about $24 a person. Now we have a national income in excess of $324 billion a year and the money in circulation amounts to $31 billion or $183 per person.

All taxes collected by the Federal Government preceding the Spanish-American War totaled less than $3 billion. Since that time the American people have paid more than $800 billion in Federal taxes.

In 1898 there were 200,000 Federal employees. Now we have 2¼ million.

At that time there were less than 1,000 automobiles in the world. There were dreamers who thought that someday we might travel in the air. There was no thought of radio or television.

There was not a single mile of paved road in the United States. Less than one-fourth of the homes of the country were equipped with plumbing. Practically every house had its own source of water supply.

There was practically no preventive medicine. Each year there was a heavy toll from fevers, pneumonia, measles, and diphtheria. Very little progress had been made toward modern sanitation.

Many people still lived in log and sod houses and miner's cabins. The greater number of our people still maintained themselves by work on the farm. There were few labor-saving devices.

Less than half of our young people had the opportunity to complete a high-school education, and only a few were able to go to college.

We are now the greatest power of all history. Our Capital City is the center of the world. While we possess only 7 percent of the world's population and area, yet we produce more than half of the world's goods.

What has brought this about? What great resources did we possess that made us, in less than 200 years, the strongest, the richest, and most productive Nation in the world?

We had freedom of the individual and an economy firmly established on the American system of free enterprise.

These precious assets will be the foundation of greater security, greater progress, and more expanding prosperity provided we keep our Government on a sound and strong financial footing.

To assure the safety and security of the United States and to perpetuate freedom of the individual the pay-as-you-go principle should be applied to Government financing at all levels.

Otherwise we face the dangers of high taxes and excessive debt which have destroyed more great nations than invading armies.

It is most important for Americans to consider that our national debt of $273 billion is more than the combined debt of 75 other nations of the world, including Soviet Russia.

The debt of State and local government is the highest in all history and they are continually reaching out for more taxes.

Individual indebtedness has climbed to the highest level in the history of the United States.

It should be a matter of deep concern to all of us that our public and private debt has reached the fantastic total of $658 billion.

The direct and hidden taxes paid by the American people for the support of Government are greater than the combined taxes of 75 other nations of the world, including Soviet Russia.

High taxes and burdensome debt are responsible for inflation and the severe hardships that result when the dollar is depreciated to half its value.

America must be awakened to these dangers. What can we do?

We must all take part in government. It is unfortunate that so many of our people fail to take an active interest in civic affairs.

We must all work for economy and sound fiscal policies at all levels of government, Federal, State, and local.

We must have a stable dollar, supported by a free economy, producing plenty of goods to buy with our earnings.

Every real American must be on guard against communism and all other subversive influences. We must all preach and practice patriotic Americanism.

Every man and woman must be ready and prepared to defend our freedom. It cannot be done with push button warfare.

We pray that we may never be forced into another war but in time of peril our Nation will again be defended by heroes in the mud, in the air, on the water, and in the jungles.

Our forefathers, in the development of this great country, carried with them into the wilderness the axe, the rifle, and the Holy Bible.

The axe is the symbol of work and self-reliance.

The rifle symbolizes the individual responsibility of every American to defend the way of life we are privileged to enjoy.

The Bible calls for faith in the greater power that rules the world and will protect those of courage, understanding, and righteousness.

The characteristics that have made America great are courage, freedom, justice, temperance, tolerance, faith, hope, and love of God. These characteristics, practiced by the individual, are the strength of our Nation.

Let us fill our knapsacks with those noble ideals and march forth, as you did and as have brave men of every generation, in the defense of our country.

Israel Should Have the Help of All Free Nations

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. CHARLES A. WOLVERTON

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, the plight of Israel is one that should have the sympathetic and favorable consideration of all who are in a position to be helpful.

The long and sacrificial period of years that preceded the establishment of the state of Israel is one of the most outstanding and praiseworthy efforts of any people to have freedom and a nation with its own flag. The courage that was displayed, the fearless determination, and the indomitable will to succeed merits whatever help is necessary from America and the other free nations of the world to establish and make certain its sovereignty and security.

Israel is surrounded by Arab nations with unfriendly feelings and designs calculated to destroy it and its people. This attitude on the part of the Arabs cannot be explained or justified upon any reasonable basis. Certainly the little nation of Israel is not in any sense strong enough to menace or be harmful to the Arab nations that surround it. Nor is there any intention or desire to do so. The people of Israel are peaceful. They have no desire for war nor conflict of any kind. They want to live peaceably with all men. They have opened their gates to all people, the Arabs included. They have shown no resentment or discrimination against any race, creed, or people of any national origin, including the Arabs themselves. The people of Israel have no desire to be other than helpful and friendly and enjoy their homeland.

There is a need in my opinion, for the United Nations Organization to stand up and boldly admonish the Arab nations that the sovereignty of Israel as a nation is to be respected and its people are not to be molested but are permitted to enjoy to the fullest extent all the rights and privileges of a free people. It should be made equally plain that it is the purpose and intent to stand by and support Israel in these and all other attributes of a full and free sovereignty.

And what is the duty of our own Nation under existing conditions? Let us answer this question by asking ourselves what would we desire under similar circumstances. The answer is not difficult to make. We would want and expect the support of all free nations. Is not Israel entitled to the same? Our Nation is the most outstanding exponent of liberty and freedom in all the world. Our boys have fought and died in World War I, World War II, and in the Korean conflict to establish the principles of liberty and freedom throughout the world. We cannot afford to be lukewarm in support of any nation that holds aloft the flag of freedom. Israel is in a strategic position in the Near East. It is likewise in a position of danger because of the enemies that surround it. As these enemy nations are supplied weapons of war by Soviet Russia and its satellites, why should Israel be denied weapons of defense by the free nations of the world?

The important question to be considered in determining whether a nation should be armed or not is, What is its intention? If it be to make war, then it would be dangerous to put weapons of war within its grasp. If, however, the intention is to prevent war or for defensive purposes, then to put such in the hands of a peacefully inclined nation cannot be otherwise than to promote peace. The advice of President Theodore Roosevelt given many years ago, "Speak softly and carry a big stick," still holds good. Israel, with peaceful intentions, is entitled to have the help of other nations with like desire.

The peaceful activities carried on by Israel in industry, agriculture, and education have already made a marvelous improvement in Israel. Likewise, that which has been done to improve the living conditions of its people indicate that in years ahead, as given the opportunity, the progress that can and will be made is indescribable. I have had the opportunity of seeing whereof I speak, as a result of my visit a few years ago, and, consequently, I am most optimistic as to the future of Israel and its people.

With a full understanding of the aims and purposes that actuate the leaders of Israel and the high ideals that motivate them in all their activities, I deem it a privilege and an obligation to be helpful in the future as in the past whenever and in whatever way may be within my power.

Summary of Legislation Considered by the House Committee on Banking and Currency, 84th Congress, 2d Session

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. BRENT SPENCE OF KENTUCKY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, there follows herewith a summary of the legislation considered by the Committee on Banking and Currency during the 2d session of the 84th Congress. For the benefit of the membership of the House each legislative act is preceded by a caption reference, together with the public law number, the House reports relating to the legislation, and the bill number of the legislation as considered in the House.

BANKING, CREDIT, AND FINANCE

Bank Holding Company Act

Public Law 511—House Report No. 609

H. R. 6227

This act authorizes the Federal Reserve Board to control the future expansion of bank holding companies, and requires that bank holding companies divest themselves of investments in nonbanking businesses. At the close of the 1st session of the 84th Congress, this legislation had passed the House but had not been acted upon by the Senate. During the second session, the Senate passed the House bill with amendments, and the House agreed to the Senate amendments. The measure became law on May 9, 1956.

The act defines a bank holding company as a company which controls 25 percent or more of the voting shares of 2 or more banks or of a bank holding company, or controls the election of a majority of the directors of 2 or more banks. Certain exemptions, however, are provided.

Bank holding companies are required under the act to obtain approval of the Federal Reserve Board before acquiring additional bank stocks or assets. Before acting on any application for such approval, the Board notifies the agency which chartered the bank or banks involved (Comptroller of the Currency for national banks and the State supervisory authority for State banks) and allows 30 days for submission of the views of the chartering agency. In determining whether to grant approval, the Board considers, among other factors, whether the proposed acquisition would be consistent with adequate and sound banking, the public interest, and the preservation of competition in the field of banking. The Federal Reserve Board cannot approve the acquisition by a bank holding company of the shares or assets of a bank outside the company's home State unless the law of the State in which the bank is located expressly authorizes such acquisitions.

The act prohibits bank holding companies from acquiring interests in nonbanking businesses, and requires them to divest themselves of any such interests which they now hold. Appropriate provisions are included with respect to tax treatment of forced divestments under the act. In addition, the act contains certain prohibitions against self-dealing between bank holding companies and their subsidiary banks.

This country has established a system of independent competing banks, in preference to the centrally controlled bank systems established by other countries. The holding company device has been used to bring many formerly independent local banks under the control of a few large corporations. The Bank Holding Company Act will provide a means of preserving the American system of independent competing banks and guard against monopolistic control of credit.

Purchase of Treasury obligations by Federal Reserve

Public Law 622—House Report No. 1843

H. R. 9285

This act extends until June 30, 1958, the authority of the Federal Reserve banks to purchase securities directly from the Treasury in amounts totaling not more than $5 billion outstanding at any one time.

Prior to 1935 Federal Reserve banks could purchase Government obligations either in the market or directly from the Treasury. The Banking Act of 1935, however, required that all purchases of Government securities by Federal Reserve banks be made in the open market. In 1942 the authority of the Federal Reserve banks to purchase securities directly from the Treasury was restored, but a limit of $5 billion was placed on the amount outstanding at any one time. The $5 billion authority was granted initially only through 1944, but the Congress has extended it from time to time so as to provide continuous limited direct borrowing authority ever since.

The primary purpose of this direct borrowing authority is to help the Treasury and the Federal Reserve System work together in minimizing the disturbing effects on the economy of short-run peaks in Treasury cash receipts and disbursements, particularly around the time of quarterly income-tax payments. This act was approved June 25, 1956.

Residence of national bank directors

Public Law 496—House Report No. 1815

S. 1736

This act, approved April 27, 1956, amended the law governing residence requirements for directors of national banks, in order to allow a somewhat wider range in the selection of such directors. Before this act was enacted, the law provided that at least three-fourths of the directors of a national bank must have resided in the State where the bank is located, or within 50 miles of the bank's office, for at least 1 year preceding their election, and must maintain such residence during their term of office. This act reduced the number of directors subject to this requirement from three-fourths to two-thirds, and increased the 50-mile limitation to a 100-mile limitation. Consequently, under the new law at least two-thirds of the directors must maintain a residence within the State or within 100 miles of the bank's office.

Examination of national banks

Public Law 502—House Report No. 1816

S. 1188

This act, approved April 30, 1956, makes three changes in the law governing examinations of national banks, in order that the Comptroller of the Currency may more effectively discharge his responsibilities with respect to such examinations.

The first change permits the Comptroller to waive 1 of the 2 examinations provided for each year, but this waiver cannot be exercised more than once in every 2 years. Such a waiver will result in 3 examinations in a 2-year period, instead of the previously required 4 examinations. The second change permits the Comptroller to assess all national banks on a yearly basis for examination services, regardless of whether 1 or 2 examinations are made. The third change relates to the charges made for examining the trust departments of national and District of Columbia banks. Under the new law these charges are based on the cost of making the examination, rather than on the amount of the trust assets, as was previously provided.

Revolving fund for purchases of coinage metals

Public Law 677—House Report No. 2121

H. R. 10230

Under this act, approved July 9, 1956, the minor coinage metal fund, which is a revolving fund used to purchase metals for coining pennies and nickels, was increased from $2 million to $3 million. The act also permits the silver profit fund, which is a revolving fund established from the gain arising from silver coinage, to be used to purchase alloy metal for dimes, quarters, and 50-cent pieces. The act established uniformity of practice in the purchase of all coinage metals in that all types are now purchased through established revolving funds.

Extension of Export-Import Bank Act

House Report No. 2620

H. R. 11261

The committee reported this bill on July 5, 1956, but the House did not act on it before adjournment. The bill would have extended the operating authority of the Export-Import Bank from its present expiration date of June 30, 1958, to June 30, 1963. The bank, which began operations in 1934, assists in financing and facilitating trade between the United States and foreign countries.

Cumulative voting in electing national bank directors

S. 256

The committee reported this bill on July 21, 1956, but the House did not act on it before adjournment. The law now provides that in the election of directors of national banks each shareholder may vote the number of shares owned by him for as many persons as there are directors to be elected, or he may cumulate such shares and give one candidate as many votes as the number of directors multiplied by the number of his shares shall equal, or distribute them on the same principle among as many candidates as he wishes. The bill would have eliminated this statutory requirement as to cumulative voting, but would have permitted the shareholders of each bank to establish cumulative voting if they wished to do so by providing for it in the articles of association.

HOUSING

Housing Act of 1956

Public Law 1020—House Reports Nos. 2363 and 2958

H. R. 11742

H. R. 11742, referred to as the Housing Act of 1956, contains six titles modifying existing law and providing for several new programs which are noted in more detail in the summary which follows.

Title I of the new act deals with FHA insurance programs.

Title II relates to an expanded secondary mortgage market program.

Title III expands and broadens the slum clearance and urban renewal program.

Title IV revises and extends the low-rent public housing program, including a new program for the elderly and provisions for the disposition of federally owned housing.

Title V amends the military housing program and provides that the military must in certain instances acquire Wherry Act housing.

Title VI continues the authority of certain programs including college housing, hospital construction, and farm housing, as well as providing a new research program, and revises provisions relating to public facility loans and loans made by Federal savings and loan associations.

FHA title I home repair loans

FHA's title I loan insurance program has long been a basic part of our economy. In very recent years, however, the volume of title I loans has declined sharply from the peak of 2,200,000 insured loans during 1953 to currently about 1 million loans a year. No one factor can be singled out as a cause for this sharp decline, but two important influences have been (1) the effect of the change of the 1954 act which denied eligibility for title I financing for newly constructed homes until they had been occupied for 6 months, and (2) a discernible trend in recent years on the part of some lenders to make home-improvement loans on an "own plan basis."

Under the provisions of the new act the maximum loan amounts for this title are increased from $2,500 to $3,500 for the improvement of existing single-family structures, from $3,000 to $3,500 for new structures, and from $10,000 to $15,000 ($2,500 average per family unit) for multifamily structures. The FHA Commissioner is given discretionary authority to increase the maximum loan term from 3 years and 32 days to 5 years and 32 days on loans for improvement of single-family structures "if he determines such increase to be in the public interest * * *." A sliding interest rate scale is provided, with an annual $5 discount on loans below $2,500 and a $4 discount on that portion of the loan which exceeds $2,500. The program is continued to September 30, 1959.

FHA title II insurance programs

FHA title II provides mortage insurance programs for sales and rental housing, cooperative housing, and relocation housing in connection with urban renewal programs.

Under the new act provisions added to section 203 removed the former statutory disadvantage of mortgage terms for existing homes by making the ratios of loan to value the same for both existing and new construction (95 percent of first $9,000 of value and 75 percent of the excess), except that existing homes not built under FHA inspection must be at least 1 year old to qualify for the more liberal terms. Under former law existing homes were limited to 90 percent of the first $9,000 of valuation.

The maximum insured loans under section 203 (h) available to persons whose homes are damaged or destroyed by disaster is increased from $7,000 to $12,000.

The insuring authority under section 207, which is designed to assist the construction of rental housing, is modified by increasing the permissible loan-to-value ratio from 80 percent to 90 percent. Loan ceilings are increased from $2,000 to $2,250 per room and from $2,400 to $2,700 per room for elevator-type structures. The act also authorizes the Commissioner to increase the dollar ceilings per room by not to exceed $1,000 per room in high-cost areas.

The act authorizes modifications of two FHA programs to furnish housing assistance to elderly families and elderly single persons. A provision was added which permits the downpayment on the purchase of a home financed by an FHA section 203 mortgage to be made by a corporation or person other than the mortgagor where the mortgagor is 60 years of age or older. Provisions were also added which liberalize section 207 FHA mortgage insurance for rental housing projects sponsored by nonprofit corporations and designed for the use and occupancy of elderly persons. Such mortgages cannot exceed $8,100 per family unit and 90 percent of estimated replacement cost of the project.

Under the new act the Housing Administrator is directed to establish an advisory committee on matters relating to housing for elderly persons.

Cooperative housing insurance

The cooperative housing insurance authority under section 213, which is designed to assist middle- and low-income families in acquiring adequate housing at moderate monthly costs, was modified in the new act by reducing from 65 to 50 percent the proportion of veterans required to qualify a cooperative for a 95-percent FHA section 213 mortgage loan and for higher room and unit mortgage amounts. World War I veterans can be counted in determining the percentage of veteran cooperators. The FHA Commissioner is also authorized to increase the mortgage amount on cooperative housing by $1,000 per room in high-cost areas.

The act provides for a new class of eligible mortgagors for management-type cooperatives. Any such mortgagor who has certified to the Commissioner he intends to sell the project upon its completion to a cooperative may receive a commitment of a loan up to 85 percent of replacement cost and proceed with construction before the prospective cooperative has been formed. Until he sells the project the sponsor-mortgagor will be regulated by FHA as to rents, capital structure, and rate of return. If the sponsor fails to sell to a cooperative, he may not use the special commitment insurance feature again.

The general mortgage insurance authorization of FHA is increased by $3 billion over the amount of insurance in force and commitments outstanding on July 1, 1956.

The insuring authority under section 220, which is designed to provide housing for slum clearance and urban renewal areas, is modified under the new act to give additional incentive to the production of multifamily rental housing in such areas. A profit and risk allowance of 10 percent of project cost (excluding land) for sponsors of housing projects is permitted, although the FHA Commissioner is authorized to prescribe a lesser percentage if he certifies that a 10 percent allowance is unreasonable. The Commissioner is authorized to increase dollar mortgage limitations by not to exceed $1,000 per room or per unit in any geographic area where he finds the cost levels so require. This increase applies to both garden-type and elevator-type apartments.

The insuring authority under section 221, designed to assist in relocating families displaced by slum clearance or redevelopment operations, is liberalized under the new act. The maximum dollar amount of mortgages is increased from $7,600 to $9,000 per dwelling unit or family unit and from $8,600 to $10,000 per dwelling or family unit in high-cost areas. The ratio of loan to value for single-family homes is increased from 95 percent to 100 percent of appraised value, but the mortgagor is required to make a payment of at least $200 in cash or its equivalent. The maximum maturity of section 221 mortgages is increased from 30 to 40 years.

The cost certification requirements of FHA (sec. 227) with respect to multifamily housing are modified (1) to provide that a cost certification, when approved by the FHA Commissioner, shall be final and incontestable except for fraud or material misrepresentation on the part of the mortgagor; (2) to permit an allocation of general overhead cost acceptable to the Commissioner to be included in total certified costs; and (3) to provide that if the insured mortgage is to assist the financing of repair or rehabilitation of housing already owned by the mortgagor, full credit will be given for actual renovation costs in determining the maximum amount of the loan where the owner has a sizable equity in the property.

Federal National Mortgage Association

Several of the operating provisions of the Federal National Mortgage Association are modified and a new program is added to the Association's operations by the new act. FHA's section 803 military housing mortgages and FHA or VA mortgages covering houses in Alaska, Guam, or Hawaii are exempted from the $15,000 per dwelling unit limit on the amount of the mortgage which can be purchased by FNMA under any of its operations. The former requirement that a person who sells a mortgage to FNMA must purchase stock in FNMA equal to 3 percent of the unpaid mortgage principle is modified so that he must now purchase stock amounting to only 2 percent of the mortgage. FNMA may vary such requirement upward or downward, but in no event may such requirement be less than 1 percent. The new act changes the price criterion for FNMA purchases from "at the market price" or "within the range of market prices." It also authorizes FNMA to make advance commitments to purchase mortgages under secondary market operations "at prices which are sufficient to facilitate advance planning of home construction, but which are sufficiently below the price then offered by the Association for immediate purchase to prevent excessive sales to the Association pursuant to such commitments." The new act requires FNMA, in purchasing special assistance mortgages, to pay not less than 99 percent of the unpaid principal amount for a period of 1 year. The $50 million revolving fund available for advance commitments for cooperative housing mortgages was modified to make the limit apply to both mortgages held and commitments outstanding. Provision is also made for the FNMA $5 million advance commitment limit per State for cooperative housing mortgages to operate on a revolving fund basis.

Slum clearance and urban renewal

Under the new act amendments are made to title I of the Housing Act of 1949 which provide authority to the Housing Administrator to (1) make urban renewal planning advances to a single local public body acting on behalf of the local public bodies having authority for making surveys and plans for an urban renewal project; (2) make loans or capital grants on the basis of a local plan covering an urban renewal area without requiring the local public agency to submit a separate plan for each redevelopment project within the area; (3) make advances for the preparation of long-term "general neighborhood renewal plans" for urban renewal areas of such scope that the urban renewal therein may have to be carried out in stages rather than as a single project, provided the local agency proposes to undertake promptly an urban renewal project embracing at least 10 percent of the area; and (4) make advances to local public agencies for surveys of urban areas to determine where the undertaking of urban renewal projects may be feasible.

The act would also amend the definition of an urban renewal project and permit the cost of public facilities financed through special assessment against real property in an urban renewal area to be counted as a local grant-in-aid contribution where the property against which the assessment is levied is within the project area but is not acquired by the local public body. The act would also authorize local public agencies that do not pay taxes on land held for urban renewal purposes to include an amount equal to such taxes in computing the gross project cost, and to consider such amount as a local grant-in-aid.

The act would increase from $70 million to $100 million the aggregate amount of capital grant contracts which may be entered into, without regard to the 10 percent limitation on the expenditure of funds in any one State, in States where more than two-thirds of the maximum capital grants permitted has been obligated.

New provisions were added by the act which authorize the Administrator to reimburse local public agencies for relocation payments made to individuals, families, and business concerns displaced by an urban renewal project respecting which a contract for Federal grant has been executed. These payments may be made by the local public agency involved to cover reasonable and necessary moving expenses and other losses of property (except goodwill or profit), for which compensation has not otherwise been made and which were incurred on or after the date of enactment. Such payments may not exceed $100 in the case of any individual or family, and $2,000 in the case of any business concern.

The new act provides that local grants-in-aid shall be required for each project but that such local grants-in-aid, together with local grants-in-aid of all other projects of the local public agency, shall not be required in excess of one-third of the aggregate net project costs of all projects of the local public agency.

The Housing Administrator is also authorized to extend urban renewal assistance to major disaster areas, under certain conditions, without regard to requirements that the community have a workable program for the prevention and elimination of slums, and that the urban renewal plan must conform to a general plan of the locality, and without regard to requirements of public hearings and certain requirements with respect to the predominantly residential character or blighted character of urban renewal areas. The FHA sections 220 and 221 urban renewal mortgage insurance programs are amended to permit temporary waiver of the present workable program requirement. Urban renewal planning grants would be permitted for a community affected by a major disaster without regard to the fact that the community's population is 25,000 or greater.

The new act also increases the urban planning grant authorization from $5 million to $10 million.

Low-rent public housing

The new act authorizes contracts for loans and annual contributions after July 31, 1956, for not more than 35,000 additional low-rent public housing units each year for 2 years. Any balance of the authorization of 45,000 units provided by the Housing Amendments of 1955 which is not utilized by July 31, 1956. is carried over to 1957; any balance remaining in the authorization for 1957 and 1958 may be carried over for 2 years. The act reinstates the workable program requirement which requires that the locality have a workable program approved by the Housing Administrator before new contracts for annual contributions for additional units can be entered into. The proviso in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act of 1953 which prohibits the Public Housing Administration from committing itself to authorize the commencement of construction in any one year of more than 35,000 units of low-rent public housing is repealed. The act also increases from 10 percent to 15 percent the maximum portion of annual contributions and grant funds for public housing which may be made in any one State.

Public housing for the elderly

In order to meet the pressing needs of elderly families and persons in the lowest income group, the act makes low-income elderly single persons 65 years of age or over eligible for admission to low-rent public housing. The Public Housing Administration is also authorized to assist in the construction ot new housing or the remodeling of existing housing in order to provide accommodations designed specifically for elderly families. Local public housing authorities are authorized to give a first preference in admission to elderly families in respect to any low-rent public housing units suitable to their needs. The local authorities are also authorized in the case of the elderly to waive the requirement that tenants admitted to public housing must come from substandard dwellings. The act also increases the maximum cost per room for dwellings designed specifically for elderly families from $1,750 to $2,250.

Farm labor camps

The new act directs the Public Housing Administration to transfer farm labor camps without monetary consideration to local public housing agencies whose areas of operation include such projects. Requests for such transfers must be made within 18 months after enactment of the act. The local public housing agency must give first occupancy preference to low-income farm families and second occupancy preference to other low-income families. In the case of farm labor camps in the State of Florida, any public housing agency acquiring such farm labor camps is required in the event of sale of such project to use the proceeds to construct new facilities for low-income farm families.

Disposition of defense housing

The new act provides for the transfer of 41 temporary defense housing projects and 2 Lanham Act war housing projects from the Housing Agency to the Department of Defense on September 1, 1956. The Department of Defense is authorized to use revenues from such property for its maintenance, operation, improvement, and liquidation, and for related administrative expenses.

The act also provides that any housing constructed or acquired under the provisions of title III of the Defense Housing and Community Facilities Services Act of 1951 which is not transferred to the Department of Defense shall be disposed of as expeditiously as possible, but not later than June 30, 1957.

The Housing Administrator is also directed to convey a Lanham Act project at Newport, R. I., to the Housing Authority of the City of Newport, and two Lanham Act projects at Philadelphia, Pa., to the Housing Authority of Philadelphia, Pa. Exception is made, however, so that it is possible to house military personnel in such projects without regard to their income, and for a period of 3 years a first preference is given to military personnel in respect to a specified number of dwelling units in each of these projects. The Lanham Act is amended by adding a new section 614, which provides for the accelerated disposition of those projects which must be sold for off-site use or as an entire project.

Provision is also made for the sale of the Chinquapin Village housing project to the city of Alexandria, or to the Alexandria Redevelopment and Housing Authority; for the sale of the Lakeshore Village housing project of the city of Euclid, Ohio; and for the sale of Techwood Dormitory, situated in Atlanta, Ga., to the Georgia Institute of Technology.

Payments in lieu of taxes

The Public Housing Commissioner is directed to approve payments in lieu of taxes in the amounts specified in the act for project fiscal years ending prior to April 1, 1956, by 11 local public housing agencies named in the act.

Military housing

The provisions of RHA title VIII military housing program are modified and liberalized in the act in the following respects:

First, FHA is permitted to insure mortgages covering military housing on Midway Island and the Canal Zone, in addition to the areas formerly covered.

Second, the program is continued to June 30, 1958.

Third, the insurance authorization is increased from $1,363,500,000 to $2,300,000,000. This will provide for a total program of military housing of approximately 150,000 units.

Fourth, the determinations of the Secretary of Defense as to the need for additional housing and the effect of such housing upon occupancy of existing housing are made subject to the approval of the FHA Commissioner. The act also requires the FHA Commissioner to report to the Committees on Banking and Currency of the Senate and the House of Representatives each instance in which he requires the Secretary of Defense to guarantee the armed services housing mortgage insurance fund from loss.

Fifth, an average cost of $16,500 per family unit per project is permitted, including the cost of ranges, refrigerators, shades, screens, and other fixtures.

Sixth, the total monthly payments that can be made by the Secretary of Defense to amortize military housing mortgages is increased from $9 million to $21 million.

Seventh, military housing plans developed after the date of the enactment of the Housing Act of 1956 must follow the principle of modular measure.

Eighth, the same net floor area limitations are applied to title VIII military housing as now apply to appropriated funds military housing.

The act also clarifies the intent of Congress with respect to local taxation of the lessee's interest in Wherry Act projects. This provision provides that such interest shall be subject to local taxes and assessments. However, such taxes or assessments (unless they were paid or encumbered the property prior to June 15, 1956) may not exceed the amount of taxes or assessments on other similar property of similar value, reduced by the amount the Secretary of Defense determines to be equal to (1) any payments made by the Federal Government to the local taxing or other public agencies involved with respect to such property, plus (2) appropriate amounts for expenditures made by the Federal Government or the lessee for the provision or maintenance of streets, sidewalks, etc., which are customarily provided by the State, city, or other local taxing authority with respect to such other similar property.

Acquisition of Wherry Act housing

Wherry Act housing, most of which is presently held by private sponsors, is located at or near military installations, and was built by mortgages insured by FHA under the provisions of title VIII of the National Housing Act as in effect prior to the Housing Amendments of 1955. Because of the probable impact of the construction of housing under the new FHA title VIII upon existing Wherry housing, the new act requires the Secretary of Defense to acquire any Wherry Act project which is located at or near an installation where a new title VIII project is programed. If the Wherry Act project is acquired through negotiation, the purchase price cannot exceed the FHA's estimate of the replacement cost of the housing and related property (excluding the value of improvements made with appropriated funds) as of the date of final endorsement for mortgage insurance, reduced by an allowance for physical depreciation determined by the Department of Defense with the advice of FHA. If the property is not acquired by negotiation, it must be acquired by condemnation.

The act provides further that housing acquired under this provision may be either assigned as public quarters to military personnel and their dependents or leased to military and civilian personnel. Amounts equal to such quarters allowance and allotments where housing is assigned as public quarters, and receipts realized from the rental of the housing, will be deposited in a revolving fund.

This revolving fund will be used to pay the purchase price of such housing, mortgage payments, and related expenses, and alteration and improvement costs. An appropriation to the revolving fund of $50 million is authorized. The Secretary of Defense is also authorized, with the approval of the President, to transfer, from unexpended balances of any appropriations of the military departments not carried to the surplus fund of the Treasury, such sums as may be necessary to provide adequate capital for the revolving fund.

College housing

The act increases the loan fund for college housing and other educational facilities from $500 million to $750 million outstanding at any one time.

Research

The Housing Administrator is directed to conduct a research program which will develop information on the Nation's housing inventory, mortgage market problems, availability of low-income and middle-income housing, housing for elderly persons, and other related subjects. The Administrator is authorized to enter into contracts with State agencies or local governments, and educational institutions and other nonprofit organizations, and into working agreements on a reimbursable basis with other Federal agencies. These contracts and working agreements may not exceed $500,000 during the fiscal year 1957. This limit will be increased by $1 million on July 1, 1957, and July 1, 1958.

Public facility loans

Title III of the Housing Amendments of 1955 is amended by the act to permit public facility loans to be made by the Housing Administrator in the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and the Territories and possessions of the United States.

Federal savings and loan associations

The act raises the limit from $2,500 to $3,500 on property alteration, repair, or improvement loans made by Federal savings and loan associations. The act also increases from 15 to 20 percent the proportion of their assets that may be loaned without regard to the loan limitation of $35,000 for any one property and without regard to a requirement that the property must be located within 50 miles of the association's home office.

Hospital construction

The act revives upon a limited basis and extends until June 30, 1958, the authority of the Housing Administrator to make loans and grants for hospital construction to public and nonprofit agencies. Only those agencies which applied for such assistance prior to June 30, 1953, and were denied solely because of the lack of funds would be eligible. Appropriations are authorized for this purpose in the amount of $5 million for each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1957, and June 30, 1958.

Farm housing

The act amends title V of the Housing Act of 1949 to authorize, for a 5-year period beginning July 1, 1956, and ending June 30, 1961, (1) $450 million for farm housing loans, (2) $10 million for contributions by the Secretary of Agriculture to prevent defaults in payments of loans for potentially adequate farms, and (3) $50 million for grants and loans for improvement and repair of certain farm structures.

VA direct home loans

The act provides for an extension of the Veterans' Administration direct home-loan program for 1 additional year.

FHA title I insured loans for repair of new homes damaged by major disasters

Public Law 405—House Report No. 1657

House Joint Resolution 471

Following the disastrous hurricanes and floods of last fall, one of the first actions taken by the committee in the 2d session of the 84th Congress was to report out this resolution permitting the FHA Commissioner to insure home repair loans on new homes damaged in major disasters without regard to the requirement that the home be completed and occupied for a period of at least 6 months. In some of the floods of last fall, subdivisions of new homes suffered severe damage and enactment of this legislation permitted the Commissioner to make the FHA title I program immediately available for use in financing the repair of damages incurred. The resolution became law on February 10, 1956.

Transfer of two war housing projects to the city of Euclid, Ohio

H. R. 12020

This bill directs the Housing Administrator to sell to the city of Euclid, Ohio, for a total price of $6,125,000, two Lanham Act war housing projects, containing 1,300 dwelling units, located in the city of Euclid. The purchase price, secured by a mortgage, will be payable in 20 equal annual installments with interest of 4½ percent on the unpaid balance. The purchase price, which is based on two independent fee appraisals, represents the full market value of the property. The city desires to use the property to facilitate the carrying out of redevelopment plans for the area.

The House did not take separate action on this bill as its provisions were incorporated in section 407 (c) of the Housing Act of 1956, which, as previously noted, became Public Law 1020, enacted August 7, 1956.

Sale of Government-owned housing project to the city of Hooks, Tex.

Public Law 367—House Report No. 1554

H. R. 7340

Although this bill providing for the sale of a 248-unit Government-owned housing project to the city of Hooks, Tex., was reported by the committee on July 28, 1955, action was not taken by the House until the second session when it was passed by the House on February 1, 1956. As passed the bill was amended to provide that the transfer would be made by the Administrator of the General Services Administration rather than by "the appropriate Government agency" as provided in the bill as it was reported by the committee. The act was approved June 4, 1956.

Transfer of war housing projects to the city of Moses Lake, Wash.

Public Law 407—House Report No. 1340

H. R. 6298

As noted in the committee's summary of legislation for the 1st session of the 84th Congress, this bill was reported by the committee and passed by the House in the 1st session of the 84th Congress but action was not completed in the Senate. The bill provides for the transfer of two war housing projects to the city of Moses Lake, Wash. These projects contain a total of 172 temporary family dwelling units. Action on the bill was completed by the Senate during the 2d session of the 84th Congress and the bill became law on February 15, 1956.

Extension of the time limit under Public Law 235 for the conveyance of certain property to the State of Louisiana

Public Law 437—House Report No. 1656

H. R. 7927

Public Law 235 of the 84th Congress, approved August 4, 1955, authorized the conveyance of dwelling projects containing 255 units to the State of Louisiana. These projects, which housed military personnel assigned to Alexandria Air Force Base during World War II, were designed in such a manner that they could be converted to eventual hospital use. The act provided for transfer of the projects to the State of Louisiana in consideration of the payment of $300,000 in 3 equal annual installments. The State was required to pay the first installment within the first 6 months after approval of the original act. Public Law 437, which was approved March 24, 1956, granted an additional 6 months to the period within which the State of Louisiana is required to make the first payment.

Housing for essential civilian employees of the Armed Forces

S. 3515

Before enactment of this legislation the FHA mortgage insurance program was limited in its application at armed services research or development installations because the research or development activities of the military provided a disproportionate part of the economic base of the community. Under the regular FHA mortgage insurance program the agency must find that the property meets a test of economic soundness geared to long-term normal development of the community. This act under appropriate safeguards waives the economic soundness test in order that adequate housing may be provided for essential civilian employees.

This act adds a new section 809 to title VIII of the National Housing Act, as amended, to provide mortgage insurance on homes to be owned by private individuals who are essential civilian employees of the armed services, or employees of contractors of the armed services, at research or development installations. Mortgage terms available under the bill are the same as those available under section 203 of the National Housing Act, the FHA's regular program of mortgage insurance for sales housing.

In order to qualify for insurance under the proposed new section, an individual is required to hold a certificate issued by the Secretary of Defense which certifies that (1) he requires housing; (2) he is, on the date of the certificate, a civilian employed at a research or development installation of one of the armed services of the United States, or an employee of a contractor of the armed services; and (3) he is considered by the armed services to be an essential, nontemporary employee at such date.

In addition to issuing the certificate attesting to the employment status of each essential civilian and his need for housing, the Secretary of Defense is required to certify to the Commissioner of FHA that housing is necessary for these civilian employees and that there is no present intention to substantially curtail the number of such civilian personnel assigned or to be assigned to such installations. The latter certificate will be conclusive evidence to the FHA Commissioner of the need for housing, but if the Commissioner should determine that mortgage insurance on such housing is not an acceptable risk he may require the Secretary of Defense to guarantee the armed services housing mortgage insurance fund from loss with respect to the mortgages in question.

Extension of Defense Production Act

Public Law 632—House Reports Nos. 1983 and 2486

H. R. 9852

This act, approved June 29, 1956, extends the Defense Production Act of 1950 for a period of 2 years to June 30, 1958. A corresponding 2-year extension is made in the contract authority to purchase strategic materials under section 303 of that act. In addition, two provisions were added to that act. Under one of these, the Secretary of Commerce is directed to make a special study of the production, allocation, distribution, use of nickel, of its resale as scrap, and the supply and marketing of nickel, with particular attention directed to the adequacy of the existing system of nickel allocation between defense and civilian users. An interim report of such study is to be made by August 15 and a final report made by December 31, 1956, containing such recommendations as the Secretary of Commerce deems advisable. The other provision added amends the Declaration of Policy of the Defense Production Act through providing it is a policy of the Congress to encourage geographical dispersal of the industrial facilities of the United States in the interest of the national defense.

The maintenance of a strong and flexible defense program requires that current military and atomic-energy programs proceed without interruption and that a broad and diversified mobilization base be established which will reflect new requirements resulting from changes in technology and strategy. The authorities provided in the Defense Production Act are essential to meet those objectives.

Federal Flood Insurance Act of 1956

S. 3722

The act provides for an experimental program to provide insurance and related forms of financial protection against flood losses.

The act authorizes the Housing and Home Finance Administrator (1) to issue Government insurance policies against property losses due to flood, (2) to reinsure flood loss policies issued by other insurers, and (3) to make contracts with private individuals and business concerns assuring them, in the event of any subsequent flood loss, of a line of credit to assist in restoring or replacing damaged or destroyed property.

The act authorized coverage of real and personal property against loss due to flood as defined in the act. The term "flood" is broadly defined to include the water component of any severe storm as well as rising waters and abnormally high tidal water, and the Administrator is authorized to assign such other specific meaning to the generic term "flood" as he may prescribe by regulation. Specifically, the act defines "flood" to include "any flood, tidal wave, wave wash or other abnormally high tidal water, deluge, or the water component of any hurricane or other severe storm, surface landslide due to excess moisture" and such other meaning as the Administrator may prescribe by regulation. The act authorizes insurance and loan contract coverage against flood damage for property located in the United States, its Territories, possessions, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

The Administrator will establish a schedule of estimated rates for insurance offered under the act. This schedule will be computed on the basis of the risks involved; the estimated rates will be uniform for similar risks within a given class of property; and estimated rates will be fixed at levels that would, in the Administrator's judgment, be adequate, if collected, to produce sufficient proceeds over a reasonable period of years to pay all claims for losses. The schedule of estimated rates is not to include any factor for payment of Federal administrative expenses; these are to be paid out of directly appropriated funds.

Once established, this schedule of estimated rates will be used by the Administrator as a ceiling from which to compute a schedule of fees the purchasers of flood-insurance policies will be required to pay. The testimony received by the committee indicates that a schedule of estimated rates based entirely on actuarial considerations will prove to be too high to serve as an adequate basis for providing flood-insurance protection to prospective purchasers. Therefore, the act provides that the Administrator shall establish a schedule of fees to be paid by purchasers of the insurance designed to provide insurance protection at reasonable costs and to achieve marketability of the insurance policies. No insurance policy, however, can be issued for a fee lower than 60 percent of the corresponding estimated rate for insurance provided by that policy. In effect, this difference between the estimated rate and the fee may be referred to as a subsidy.

The fees for reinsurance are to be established from time to time by the Administrator through a process of negotiation with insurance companies seeking reinsurance. These fees will contain no subsidy in the sense in which that term has been used above. The reinsurance fees are to be based on the consideration of the risks involved and are to be adequate, in the Administrator's judgment, to produce sufficient proceeds over a reasonable period of years to pay all claims for losses covered by the reinsurance agreements. The fees are not to include any loading for administrative expenses for the Federal Government under this act.

Perhaps the most perplexing problem in devising a workable flood insurance program is the difficulty of providing insurance in high-risk areas at rates which are not prohibitive. In view of this problem, a supplemental program of protection is provided which should operate at much lower rates than those which will be charged for direct insurance.

Basically, this supplemental program will give potential flood victims, for a reasonable fee, the contractual right to borrow money in the event of loss due to flood. A person who purchases this protection and subsequently loses his home or business in a flood will have an assured line of credit to restore his property, and will be given an extended period of time in which to absorb the shock of his initial loss.

This protection will be afforded to private individuals and business concerns through loan contracts with the Administrator. If a person who has purchased such a contract suffers a flood loss, he will be assisted in either of two ways. First, if he is able to obtain a loan elsewhere to repair his loss, the Government will guarantee the lender against loss on the loan. Second, if he is unable to obtain such a loan, the Government will make the loan directly. As noted above this program should operate at a lower schedule of fees than those charged under the insurance program inasmuch as the Government's ultimate exposure to loss is limited to credit losses on flood loans rather than to the actual flood losses themselves.

The face amount of insurance policies issued under the act cannot exceed $250,000 per person, and cannot exceed $10,000 for any dwelling unit, including any structures and personal property connected with it. The same limits are provided for loan contracts.

In an effort to reduce "nuisance" claims, keep the cost of administering the program low, and provide the insured an incentive to protect the insured property against flood damage, the act requires a minimum loss deductible clause in each insurance policy issued by the Administrator that will relieve the Government from any liability for paying the first $100 of a proved and approved claim of loss, plus 5 percent of the remainder of such claim. The act further authorizes the Administrator to increase either the amount or the percent, or both, upon the issuance of an insurance policy, taking into consideration the class of risk involved. A loss deductible clause in the amount of $500 is provided in the loan contract program.

The act provides that insurance and reinsurance policies outstanding under this program cannot exceed $3 billion (or $5 billion with the approval of the President), plus an amount equal to the fees collected for insurance or reinsurance under the act, less claims paid. In addition, a limit of $2 billion is placed on the face amount of loan contracts outstanding at any time; this limit may be increased, with the approval of the President, by $500 million in any fiscal year.

The face amount of insurance policies issued and reinsurance agreements entered into under this act should be many times greater than the amount of losses expected to be incurred, just as in other forms of property insurance written by private companies actual losses incurred are only a small fractional amount of the face amount of policies written and in force. Likewise with respect to the loan contract program, the loans made or guaranteed to cover flood losses actually incurred will be only a small fraction of the dollar amount of loan contracts issued and on such loans the only loss the Government will suffer will be that resulting from failure to repay such loans.

The act expressly provides that insurance, reinsurance, and loan contracts cannot be issued under the act covering risks against which insurance is available on reasonable terms from other public or private sources.

The act provides that after June 30, 1959, each State will be required to pay into the disaster insurance fund one-half the difference between the fees charged for policies issued after that date on property in that State and the estimated rates needed to cover losses on such properties.

Although the act contains no fixed termination date, it requires that the annual report of the Administrator for the year ending December 31, 1961, must contain his opinion, supported by pertinent findings, concerning the advisability of withdrawing, in whole or in part, Federal assistance in the flood-insurance field, keeping in mind the desirability of offering flood-insurance protection. In the event the Administrator's opinion recommends withdrawal of entire or partial Federal financial support for the flood-insurance program, it is to be accompanied by appropriate legislative recommendations. In the light of conditions then existing, the Congress can consider in the public interest the procedures to be adopted for terminating the Federal flood-insurance program. These provisions will assure that at the end of 1961 the Administrator must come to grips with the problem of determining whether it is necessary for the Federal Government to remain in the flood-insurance field either as a direct insurer or as a source of reinsurance. This act was approved August 7, 1956.

Amendment of the Small Business Act of 1953

Public Law 402—House Reports Nos. 1633 and 1685

H. R. 7871

Although the Small Business Act from inception has contained authority for the Administrator to make disaster loans it became evident as a result of last year's severe storms that early action would be needed in this session of the Congress to increase the authorization provided for the making of disaster loans. This act, which became law on February 2, 1956, increased the disaster loan authorization from $25 million to $125 million outstanding at any one time. The act further modified the disaster loan authority by providing such loans could be made with maturities up to 20 years (previous limit 10 years) and made clear that in cases where the Small Business Administration participates with a lending institution in making a disaster loan the interest rate on the Small Business Administration's portion of the loan cannot exceed 3 percent per annum, which is the same rate applicable to direct disaster loans made by the Administration.

Redevelopment of depressed industrial and rural areas

House Report No. 2543

H. R. 11811

This bill was reported by the Banking and Currency Committee on June 29, 1956, but was not acted on by the House before it adjourned on July 27, 1956.

H. R. 11811 contains seven major provisions.

First, the bill would create an Area Redevelopment Administration within the executive branch of the Government. It would be headed by an Administrator whose appointment would be subject to Senate confirmation.

Second, the bill would authorize the Administrator to designate two types of redevelopment areas—industrial and rural—in the United States. An area could be designated as an "industrial redevelopment area" if the Administrator determines that excessive unemployment has existed in the area for an extended period of time. Areas must be so designated where unemployment (a) is currently 8 percent or more and has been 8 percent for the major portion of each of the preceding 2 years, or (b) is currently 12 percent or more with no reasonable prospect for improvement in the immediate future, and has been at least 12 percent throughout the preceding 6 months. Those rural areas in the United States in which the Administrator determines that there exist an excessive number and percentage of low-income farm families, and a condition of substantial and prolonged underemployment, would be designated as "rural redevelopment areas."

Third, the bill would authorize the Administrator to make loans from a revolving fund of $150 million for constructing or rehabilitating industrial plants and similar facilities, and for purchasing or developing land for industrial usage, in redevelopment areas. Such loans could be made only if recommended by a local redevelopment committee.

Fourth, the bill would authorize the Administrator to make loans and grants for constructing or improving public facilities, or for purchasing or developing land for public-facility usage, in redevelopment areas. Such a loan or grant could be made only upon application from a redevelopment area. A revolving fund of $100 million would be established for loans, and appropriations of not more than $50 million a year would be authorized for grants.

Fifth, the bill would authorize the Administrator to provide technical assistance to redevelopment areas. It might be provided by use of the staff of the Administrator or by contract with individuals or institutions.

Sixth, the bill contains two sections which would enable the Housing and Home Finance Administrator to assist industrial redevelopment areas. Grants and loans for slum clearance could be made in these areas under title I of the Housing Act of 1949 without regard to certain existing requirements of that act. Planning advances authorized by the Housing Act of 1954 would be made available to all communities in industrial redevelopment areas without regard to the population limitation otherwise applicable.

Seventh, the bill would require the Secretary of Labor to provide suitable training for unemployed persons in redevelopment areas in need of training, retraining, or reemployment, or vocational education. The training would be provided through the existing facilities of Federal and State Governments by contracts on a reimbursable basis, or by contracts with private institutions. The bill provides that the Secretary of Labor shall enter into agreements with the States whereby the States as agents of the Federal Government would make weekly retraining payments to unemployed individuals not entitled to unemployment compensation who are certified by the Secretary to be undergoing training for a new job. Retraining payments could not be made for more than 13 weeks in amounts equal to the average weekly unemployment compensation payment in the State.

COMMODITIES

Commodity Credit Corporation

Public Law 864—House Reports Nos. 2211 and 2772

S. 3820

The committee reported a companion bill, H. R. 11132, the provisions of which were substituted for S. 3820 on the House floor. The conference substitute retained the Senate bill number.

This act increases the borrowing power of the Commodity Credit Corporation from $12 billion to $14.5 billion to enable the Corporation to carry out its farm crop price-support operations, and to provide initial financing for the new soil-bank program provided by the Agricultural Act of 1956. The act also amends the penal provisions of the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act to make it a Federal offense to willfully steal or convert property mortgaged or pledged to a private lending agency under a program of the Commodity Credit Corporation and to reduce from a felony to a misdemeanor certain offenses involving property of a value of $500 or less.

The Commodity Credit Corporation is a federally chartered corporation through which price support is extended on farm commodities through loans, purchase agreements, and purchases, in accordance with legislation passed by the Congress. While price-support operations constitute the major activity of the Corporation, it also conducts a storage facilities program, a supply and foreign purchase program, a commodity export program, and other activities as authorized or directed by Congress.

The Corporation, as required by its charter, utilizes private trade facilities, including banks, cooperatives, commercial warehouses, handlers, and others to the maximum extent practicable. This act was approved August 1, 1956.

Extension of Export Control Act of 1949

Public Law 631—House Reports Nos. 1998 and 2485

H. R. 9052

This act extends the Export Control Act of 1949 for a further period of 2 years to June 30, 1958. That act, which is administered by the Secretary of Commerce, authorizes the regulation of exports to the extent necessary (1) to protect the domestic economy from excessive drain of scarce commodities, (2) to safeguard the national security insofar as it might be adversely affected by exports of strategic commodities, and (3) to further our foreign policy. The need to control exports in the interest of national security will probably continue for the foreseeable future. It is clear that this country must continue to take special precautions to see that United States goods of strategic significance do not go unchecked to the troubled spots of the world.

One of the items in our export trade about which there has been considerable controversy recently as to the volume of permitted exports is iron and steel scrap. The extending legislation directs the Secretary of Commerce to make a survey of the iron and steel scrap available and potentially available and to file with the Congress an interim report within 3 months and a final report not later than January 31, 1957. This act was approved June 29, 1956.

Texas City tin smelter

Public Law 608—House Report No. 2159

House Joint Resolution 607

This act permits continued operation of the Government-owned tin smelter at Texas City, Tex., up to January 31, 1957. It also authorizes the Federal Facilities Corporation (successor to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in operation of the smelter) to dispose of the smelter and related assets by sale or lease before that date. In the event disposition is not made of part or all of the plant and related assets by January 31, 1957, then the property will be reported as excess property for transfer and disposal under the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949.

The Texas City tin smelter was constructed by a subsidiary of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in 1942. While the Government continued to purchase tin metal thereafter, the operation of the smelter was nevertheless an important part of the program through which the Government was able to supply essential needs for tin during the war period. The smelter was also helpful in meeting demands for tin in the reconversion period after World War II and more recently in meeting stockpile needs. Tin smelting capacity in other parts of the world has been restored and since stockpile objectives have been achieved, it is no longer necessary for the Government to continue operations of the smelter. From the beginning of operations up to June of last year the smelter had produced a total of 420,000 tons of tin metal. This act was approved June 22, 1956.

International Wheat Agreement

Public Law 945

S. 4221

This act amends the implementing legislation (the International Wheat Agreement Act of 1949) under which the United States, acting through the Commodity Credit Corporation, exercises its rights, obtains the benefits, and fulfills its obligations under the International Wheat Agreement, which has been extended to July 31, 1959. Under the agreement as now in force, 6 exporting countries (including the United States) have agreed to supply approximately 300 million bushels of wheat to some 40 importing countries, who in turn agreed to purchase this amount. Maximum and minimum prices are set at $2 and $1.50, respectively, for the basic grade of wheat at the basing point Fort William/Port Arthur, Canada. The Commodity Credit Corporation program, which is conducted pursuant to this legislation, enables commercial wheat exporters and millers to purchase wheat at domestic market prices and to sell the wheat or wheat-flour product to purchasers in International Wheat Agreement importing countries, at prices consistent with the price range contained in the agreement, in competition with other exporters in the world market. During the 7 years the wheat agreement has been in effect the United States wheat exports under it have approximated 1.3 billion bushels. This act was approved August 3, 1956.

MISCELLANEOUS

Justice Brandeis medal

Public Law 727—House Report No. 2678

H. R. 11000

This act, approved July 18, 1956, directs the Secretary of the Treasury to strike a medal in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the birth of the late United States Supreme Court Justice Louis Dembitz Brandeis. Three thousand of such medals will be furnished to the Brandeis University at Waltham, Mass., at the estimated cost of manufacture. The year 1956 marks the 100th anniversary of the birth of Justice Brandeis. He served with distinction on the United States Supreme Court for 23 years before retiring in 1939.

Use of surplus grains to prevent waterfowl depredations

Public Law 654—House Report No. 2210

H. R. 7641

This act authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to requisition from the Commodity Credit Corporation such wheat, corn, and other grains as the Corporation certifies to be available from its price-support inventories for the purpose of feeding migratory waterfowl such as ducks and geese. The Secretary of the Interior may make the grain available for the feeding of migratory waterfowl directly or through Federal, State, or local governmental bodies or officials or private persons or organizations. Feeding must be so accomplished as to lure waterfowl away from farmers' fields where they are causing crop damage, yet not expose the waterfowl to shooting.

The legislation offers a procedure that should be of material assistance in solving the problem of protecting agricultural crops in those areas where the impact of a large migratory waterfowl population creates a special problem. This act was approved July 3, 1956.

The Farm Price Support Program

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GRACIE PFOST
OF IDAHO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mrs. PFOST. Mr. Speaker, last April I was one of those who fought for the 90-percent-of-parity price support program which the Congress enacted and the President vetoed. This veto doomed the American farmers to the Republican sliding-down scale price support program which has tobogganed many small farmers into bankruptcy.

The speech I made to the Congress on April 11, when the Democratic farm bill was under consideration, and my other work in behalf of the farmers during my 4 years in Washington all tie in with the dramatic battle waged by the Democratic Party to maintain the high level farm prosperity of the Democratic years.

Voting Record of Representative James T. Patterson on Major Legislation of the 84th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JAMES T. PATTERSON
OF CONNECTICUT
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I should like to submit at this time my voting record on what I consider to be the 16 most important pieces of legislation which have come before the House of Representatives during the 84th Congress. It is my firm belief that every individual residing in the congressional district which I have the honor to represent has the right to know how I have stood on this important legislation, and I am proud to present it herewith:

Voting record of Representative JAMES T. PATTERSON, 5th District of Connecticut, on major legislation considered by the House of Representatives in the 84th Cong.

How I voted	The issue	Status

Highlights of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. DANIEL A. REED
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 enacted by the Republican 83d Congress was the most monumental legislative undertaking in the history of the Congress.

It represented the first comprehensive revision of the internal-revenue laws since before the turn of the century and the enactment of the income tax.

Approximately a half a million man-hours of work went into this gigantic achievement.

Over 3,000 changes in the revenue laws were contained in the tax-revision measure. In general, the purpose of these changes were to remove inequities, to end harassment of the taxpayer, and to reduce tax barriers to future expansion of production and employment.

The new law closed over 50 loopholes through which taxpayers were able to avoid paying their fair share of taxes.

The new law contained $827 million relief for individuals and $536 million relief for business. In addition, the new law extended the present 52 percent corporate income for 1 year which meant an additional $1.2 billion tax on business. This increased tax on business practically paid for all of the tax relief granted so that the net cost to the revenue was only $163 million.

The Republican Party is continuously charged with enacting tax legislation primarily for the benefit of big business. Just how ridiculous and unfounded this assertion is can be demonstrated by the fact that, after 4 years in office, the Republican administration has never proposed reducing this 52 percent corporation income tax rate. The Republican Party reduced the individual income tax, and it reduced excise taxes but it left the regular 52 percent corporation income tax alone.

Without attempting to give a technical interpretation, the following represents some of the highlights of the new tax law.

DEPENDENTS

First. A parent can claim a deduction of $600 for each child regardless of the child's earnings if the child is under 19 and the parent continues to furnish more than half the child's support.

Second. A parent can also claim the $600 dependency deduction for a child over 18 regardless of the child's earnings if the child is attending school or college, or receiving on-the-farm training, and the parent continues to furnish more than half the child's support.

Third. An aged parent or other dependent cared for by several members of a family can be claimed as a deduction by one of the members of the family.

Fourth. A taxpayer can claim a $600 dependency deduction for a foster child.

Fifth. A taxpayer can claim a $600 dependency deduction for a child awaiting adoption.

Sixth. A taxpayer can claim a $600 dependency deduction for any other person, regardless of relationship, if the taxpayer supports that person in his home.

Seventh. A taxpayer can claim a $600 dependency deduction for a cousin who is institutionalized because of physical or mental disability.

Savings to taxpayers, $85 million.

CHILD-CARE EXPENSES

First. Single working parents, such as a widow, are allowed a deduction up to $600 for the expense of child-care for children up to 12 years of age.

Second. The same deduction is allowed for a married woman who must work because her husband is incapacitated.

Third. The same deduction is allowed with respect to any dependent, regardless of age, who is mentally or physically incapable of caring for himself.

Fourth. A similar deduction is allowed a married woman if the combined income of her husband and herself does not exceed $5,100.

Savings to taxpayers, $130 million.

MEDICAL EXPENSES

First. Medical expenses can be deducted when they exceed 3 percent of income, instead of 5 percent as under present law.

Second. Example: A family with $3,000 gross income and medical expenses of $150 can deduct $60. The same family could deduct nothing prior to the 1954 law.

Third. The 1954 law doubled the maximum limit on the amount that can be deducted.

Savings to taxpayers, $80 million.

HEAD OF FAMILY

First. A single taxpayer who has a dependent son or daughter becomes entitled during the first 2 years after the death of his spouse to the same income-splitting privilege as is accorded married couples.

Second. A single individual can receive half the benefits of income splitting if he has a dependent parent and if the taxpayer maintains a household for the father or mother.

Savings to taxpayers, $11 million.

RETIREMENT INCOME CREDIT

All retired people 65 and over, including schoolteachers, firemen, policemen, and civil servants, are in effect exempt on all retirement income up to $1,200. This means a tax reduction for these retired people of up to $240 a year.

Example: A retired single individual over 65 who has a total retirement income of $3,000 paid about $300 in income tax prior to 1954. Under the new 1954 law, his tax is reduced to $60—a saving of $240.

The same exemption extends to individuals under 65 if they receive a pension from a public retirement system, such as do teachers.

Savings to taxpayers, $141 million.

CREDIT PURCHASES

The law allows a deduction for interest up to 6 percent on installment purchases.

Total saving to taxpayers, 10 million.

CHARITABLE CONTRIBUTIONS

The law increased from 20 to 30 percent the allowable deduction for charitable contributions to churches, hospitals, and educational institutions.

Total saving to taxpayers, $25 million. The gain to charity has been incalculable.

SOIL AND WATER CONSERVATION

First. Deductions up to 25 percent of farm income are allowed for soil and water conservation.

Savings to taxpayers, $10 million.

SICKNESS AND ACCIDENT PLANS

First. Premiums paid by employers to health and accident plans are not taxable to their employees.

Second. All accident and health benefits paid as reimbursement for actual medical expenses to employees, their wives, or children, are completely exempted from tax.

Third. Payments to employees for loss of wages due to injury or illness are exempted up to $100 a week.

Savings to taxpayers: No estimate possible.

DEATH BENEFITS

The new law exempts all death benefits up to $5,000 paid by an employer to the widow or other beneficiary of an employee.

Savings to taxpayers: No estimate possible.

PENSIONS AND ANNUITIES

In addition to the $1,200 exemption extended to retirement income, the law also provides a simpler method for the taxation of pensions and annuities, ends annual 3-percent tax paid on annuities and provides instead a method of computing tax on basis of cost divided by years of life expectancy.

Savings to taxpayers, $10 million.

DIVIDEND CREDIT

The law excludes the first $50 in dividends from taxation and provides a credit against tax equal to 4 percent of the balance.

Example: An individual with $50 or less in dividends from his savings is entirely exempt from tax on that amount.

Example: An individual with $250 in dividends from his savings excludes the first $50 entirely and then reduces his total tax by $8—4 percent of the balance of $200.

Savings to taxpayers, $204 million.

DEPRECIATION

The new law permits the more liberal writeoff of the cost of new equipment. For example, in the first year of life of new equipment, the taxpayer is able to write off twice the amount now allowed.

Savings to taxpayers, $375 million, of which $75 million represents savings to individuals such as farmers, shopkeepers, and salesmen. Of course, no permanent loss of revenue is involved because the provision simply shifts the timing of tax payments.

DECLARATIONS OF ESTIMATED TAX

The requirements are eased for filing declarations of estimated tax. Upward of a million taxpayers have been relieved of the requirement for filing.

FILING TAX RETURNS

Tax returns are due April 15 instead of March 15, giving taxpayers 1 additional month in which to prepare their final tax returns and make their final tax payments.

RESEARCH AND EXPERIMENTATION

The law grants taxpayers an option to either deduct as an expense or to amortize research and experimental expenditures.

The provision is designed to encourage business research with the objective of creating new products, new processes, and new jobs.

METHODS OF ACCOUNTING

The law has brought tax-accounting rules into harmony with business accounting, thereby eliminating to a great extent the necessity for taxpayers to maintain two set of books. It provides realistic computation of net income for tax purposes in conformity with sound business practices.

DEPLETION

The law increases the rate of percentage depletion on a variety of critical and strategic minerals in order to encourage the development of domestic sources of supply.

Savings to taxpayers, $34 million.

INVENTIONS

The law extends capital-gains treatment to proceeds realized by an inventor on the sale or exchange of a patent.

The new provision is designed to encourage invention and thereby promote a healthy economy and an improving standard of living.

NET OPERATING LOSS

The law extends the net operating loss carryback to 2 years and makes certain other adjustments.

Savings to taxpayers, $120 million.

LIFE INSURANCE

The law lessens the estate tax on the proceeds of certain life-insurance policies.

Savings to individual taxpayers, $25 million.

CONSOLIDATED RETURNS

The law removes the two percent penalty tax with respect to consolidated returns filed by regulated public utilities.

Savings to taxpayers, $35 million.

IMPROPER ACCUMULATIONS

The law eases the penalty tax on certain accumulated earnings in order that business, especially small businesses, may have greater freedom in retaining their funds for legitimate business purposes.

Savings to taxpayers, $10 million.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mrs. PFOST. Mr. Speaker, once again at the close of a congressional session I offer a report to the people of the First Congressional District on my activities in their behalf.

During the 4 years I have been in Congress there have been 550 quorum and roll calls in the House. I have been there to answer 97 percent of them. On the few rollcall votes where I could not be present, I arranged when I could to be paired with a Member of Congress whose views on a bill were opposed to mine, so the people would know where I stood.

For the past 2 years we have had a Democratic Congress and a Republican in the White House. The cold war of partisan politics as predicted by President Eisenhower did not materialize. On most vital issues, the Democrats cooperated more fully with the President than did members of his own party.

This was a Congress with a heart, which placed the security and welfare of the American people first. It was a hard-working Congress—it passed more bills than any other Congress in history. And, according to the conservative Washington Star, it was a Congress which wrote a "good, moderate, and productive" record.

NATIONAL SECURITY

In foreign affairs, we Democrats were nonpartisan. The President has been free to talk and act without harassment. Deterioration of American prestige abroad demands a reappraisal of foreign policies when the Congress reconvenes next year. The people of the United States did not know we were on the brink of war three times until Secretary Dulles revealed this shocking fact in a magazine article.

In the field of national defense, we Democrats took the initiative for a strengthened military posture. We gave the President $900 million more than he asked for airpower because of Russia's apparent superiority in the field of guided missiles and jet planes. Most of our best qualified military leaders agreed this increase in funds was prudent.

THE PEOPLE'S WELFARE

One of our most dramatic accomplishments was reducing from 65 to 62 the retirement age at which women can draw social-security benefits, and providing for the payment of benefits to the totally disabled at 50. These amendments were passed over the stiff opposition of the Republican administration. We were also successful in including many self-employed professional men and women under the social-security program.

We enacted a vast program of health and medical research which means hope for those who are ill—and those who may be stricken in the future.

We provided for an increase in old-age assistance payments of at least $5 a month for people in States which take advantage of the available increase in Federal funds.

We made home buying easier, and provided special housing aids for those over 65.

FARMERS

It was not our fault that the farmer had to take a second-best farm bill. The President vetoed the Democratic farm bill which would have quickly and substantially raised farm income. The watered-down bill which was finally enacted will give the farmer some help—but by no means enough. It does include long-range, though inadequate benefits from the soil-bank program.

Through legislation initiated by the Democrats, we also relieved the farmer from paying excise taxes on gasoline and oil used in farm machinery. We increased farm-loan funds and made credit easier to get.

THE WORKER AND THE SMALL-BUSINESS MAN

For the worker, we adopted a minimum-wage law. The President advocated 90 cents. We gave the laboring man a dollar an hour.

For the small-business man, we strengthened and improved the Small Business Administration, and increased the revolving fund from which he can borrow. The House passed legislation to stop price discrimination between chains and hometown merchants, but the Senate failed to act. Had the administration been more sympathetic, much stronger and more effective programs would have been enacted.

HIGHWAYS

We set in motion the greatest road-building program in the Nation's history. On the sound pay-as-you-go basis, sponsored by the Democrats, it will provide 41,000 miles of interstate highways to crisscross the Nation, and increase Federal contributions for all forms of roads—primary, secondary, and urban.

BENEFITS AND ANNUITIES

We increased benefits for veterans, qualified additional veterans' widows for pensions, and provided educational assistance for children of veterans who die of service-connected disabilities. Here again administration opposition blocked a more humane program.

We granted badly needed increases in retirement annuities for Federal and railroad workers.

TAXES

In the field of taxation, we repealed the so-called "Humphrey blooper"—named for the Secretary of the Treasury. This Republican tax law would have given corporations a billion dollars in windfall profits.

POSTAL RATES

We succeeded in blocking the bill sponsored by the Republicans to increase first-class and airmail postage rates. The 4-cent letter and 7-cent airmail bill passed the House, where I voted against it, but it was killed in the Senate.

SCHOOLS

A bill to provide desperately needed school buildings was killed in a shameful debacle because the Republicans refused to support the President. He opposed the Powell amendment, which barred funds to segregated schools, but 76 percent of House Republicans voted for it. This amendment made it impossible for many sincere southern supporters of Federal school construction aid to accept the bill. Sixty-one percent of House Republicans then joined the southerners and defeated the measure. The net effect of this cynical maneuver by the Republicans was to deny our children the new and suitable class rooms they need so badly.

IDAHO AND THE WEST

Idaho won a victory when the bill was passed giving domestic sugar producers a right to a greater share in our increased national sugar consumption. I was one of the sponsors of this bill which will pour millions of dollars into the Idaho sugar industry. The Sugar Act is one of the original New Deal aids which did so much for our farmers.

Idaho will also benefit by measures I sponsored to increase Government purchase programs for domestically mined, strategic ores; Federal assistance for a sewage disposal system for Sandpoint; new and improved contracts for the Riverside Irrigation District at Parma; and appropriation of $519,000 for the rehabilitation of the Hayden Lake Irrigation District.

Idaho and its people lost immeasurably when the Hells Canyon bill was defeated in the Senate. The pressure brought by the White House was clearly the decisive factor in the measure's defeat. Jobs, opportunities, and Idaho's expanding future went down with the bill. In my opinion, the Eisenhower administration put selfish interests ahead of the welfare of the people of Idaho and the Pacific Northwest.

The 84th Congress wrote a constructive record. It will make America a better place in which to live. President Eisenhower was the first President in a century to lose his own Congress in the first congressional election after taking office. He cannot honestly attack the record made by the Congress the people in their wisdom gave him.

Projects and Achievements for Benefit of First District of Florida

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM C. CRAMER

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. CRAMER. Mr. Speaker, the past 2 years have been productive and good for the First District of Florida. It has been a pleasure and privilege to participate in the many projects and achievements that have made these years so successful. The following outline of my activities which have been of prime interest to the people of the district has been made and, under unanimous consent, I include their program as a part of the RECORD:

Project and problem	For fiscal year	Amount	Action and results
Rivers and harbors:
1. Tampa Harbor ($11,000,000 project)	1956–57	$4,977,000	Work now underway.
2. St. Petersburg (Salt Creek and Bayboro)	1957	22,000	Completes harbor.
3. Anclote River (Tarpon Springs)	1957	68,000	Completes project.
4. Gulfport Harbor (channel survey)	1957	6,500	Study project.
5. Intracoastal Waterway	1956	12,000	To complete surveys.
Military public works:
1. MacDill Field:
Buildings, runways, etc.	1956	5,400,000
Housing, operations, etc.	1957	3,626,000
2. Air Reserve Squadron (Pinellas Airport)	1957	2,732,000	Authorized.
Civil public works:
1. Pinellas International Airport (new buildings)	1956–57	423,000	Will complete 1956.
2. Tampa International Airport (additional buildings)	1956–57	395,000	Additional facilities.
3. Bay Pines (laundry and dietetic)	1956–57	800,000	Construction underway.
4. Tampa Municipal Hospital (construction)	1957	162,500	Underway.
5. Reserve armories (St. Petersburg)	1956	225,000	Planned.
6. Reserve armory (Tampa)	1956	225,000	Do.
7. New post offices:
St. Petersburg	1956	1,500,000	Underway.
Tampa (mail handling)	1957	----------	Survey underway.
Dade City	1956	----------	Under construction.
Mango	1956	----------	Under study.
Safety Harbor	1956	----------	Completed.
Palma Ceia, West Tampa, New Port Richey, Ybor City.	1957	----------	Under study.
8. Tampa Federal Building	1957	----------	Survey started.
Research programs:
1. Red tide (3-year program)	1956	164,000	Research underway.
2. Sponge industry (Tarpon Springs)	1956	26,000	Grants and study.

SPECIAL PROBLEMS

1. Introduced bill for immigration of needed sponge divers.
2. Acquired conveyance to Pinellas County of 24 acres from GSA for two schools.
3. Requested of White House a reduction in tariffs on imported Havana leaf tobacco to offset reduction in tariff on Cuban cigars.
4. Acquired Federal aid in planning for mosquito problem (spray plane and trucks).
5. Worked for location of National Institute for Physically Handicapped in Hernando County.
6. Assisted in release of Henderson Field for Hillsborough County industry.
7. Introduced bill for 1,000 additional beds at Bay Pines.
8. Introduced bill for making Fort DeSoto a national Spanish-American War memorial.
9. Four hundred thousand dollar low-cost housing project for Plant City authorized.
10. Worked with Ybor City Redevelopment Committee to establish Latin center.
11. Acquired survey of Gulfport Harbor and Federal designation of channel by lower bay bridge.
12. Recommended action on interbay peninsula to mainland bridge causeway connection.

STATE AND NATIONAL PROBLEMS

1. Helped in acquiring $5 million Federal money for fruitfly fight.
2. Acquired 100 percent customs' inspection in fruitfly fight added money. Cooperated to get adequate Federal funds for spreading decline fight ($365,000 in 1957).
3. Worked for more funds to step up central and southern flood-control program.
4. Helped write $37 billion national highway program with roads to First District, including third bay bridge.
5. Helped write national water-pollution control and hyacinth-eradication programs.
6. Helped write beach-erosion control bill providing greater Federal participation.

The Republican Tax Program

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. DANIEL A. REED

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, the Republican 83d Congress in 1954 provided an overall tax reduction program of $7.4 billion. Of this amount, individuals received a total tax saving of $4.7 billion. This tax-reduction program surpassed any previous total in the history of Congress.

The tax program of the Republican Party in 1954 comprised the following:

(a) A 10-percent reduction in Federal income taxes which took effect January 1, 1954. This reduction saved individuals a total of $3 billion annually. This tax cut would not have been possible if the Congress and the Eisenhower administration had not cut the Truman budget for fiscal 1954 by $12 billion.

(b) A $2 billion tax savings represented by elimination of the wartime excess-profits tax.

(c) A comprehensive tax revision represented by the new Internal Revenue Code of 1954, providing tax savings of $1.4 billion. Of this amount, a total of $827 million was for the benefit of individuals, the balance of $536 million representing tax relief for business.

(d) A $1 billion excise tax, the largest excise reduction in history. Excises were reduced on a wide variety of items such as home appliances, ladies' handbags, telephone calls, movie admissions, travel, and so forth.

The corporation tax rate has remained at 52 percent without change during this Republican administration.

The excise reduction which I have described above primarily benefited individuals. This is because excises, even those which are paid in the first instance by businesses, are in fact universally passed on to the consumers of the country.

I would now like to examine how some of the other aspects of the Republican tax program have affected individuals.

Of the total tax reduction contained in the tax-revision bill, about 60 percent, or $827 million, went to individuals and only about 40 percent, or $536 million, went to corporations.

Now, let us see how the $827 million individual income-tax reduction in the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 was distributed between different income groups. It is estimated that approximately 40 percent of that relief was for the benefit of taxpayers with incomes below $5,000 and that about 60 percent of the relief went to individuals with incomes above that amount.

Perhaps there are some who will say that this proportion represents an improper and inequitable distribution of the tax relief. In that connection, let me point out this fact—taxpayers with incomes below $5,000 today bear about 29 percent of the total individual income-tax burden. Therefore, the tax-revision bill gave 40 percent of the individual income tax relief to those who bear 29 percent of the existing burden. On the other hand, the same bill provided 60 percent of the individual income tax relief to those who bear 71 percent of the burden. I would never for a moment deny that taxpayers of small incomes are hard pressed by present taxes. Those taxes must be reduced at the earliest possible time. But let us be fair in this matter. Let us not seek to create the false impression that people with incomes above $5,000 are somehow escaping taxation. Let us not be carried away by demagogery.

It is, of course, true, Mr. Speaker, that some of the particular relief provisions in the 1954 code were more to the benefit of one group than another. For example, I recognize that a substantial portion of the tax reduction on dividends is for the benefit of those with incomes above $5,000. On the other hand, almost the entire $130 million provided for working-mother child care is estimated to go to those with incomes below $5,000. In addition, approximately two-thirds of the tax relief for retired people goes to those below $5,000. These two provisions alone provided together about $50 million more tax relief for those with incomes below $5,000 than does the entire dividend provision provide with respect to those with incomes above $5,000.

Therefore, those who seek to create the impression that the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 provides little or no relief for small taxpayers are simply not telling the truth.

Let us turn now for a moment to the 10-percent reduction in individual income taxes which took effect January 1, 1954. The $3 billion tax reduction amounted to about 10 percent for those in the lower brackets and ranged down to a reduction of only about 1 percent in the upper brackets. That was no rich man's tax bill.

The total $3 billion individual income tax reduction of 1954 was distributed by income groups as follows: 31 percent of the relief went to individuals with incomes below $5,000 and 69 percent of the relief went to those above $5,000. Approximately 25 percent of the reduction went to those with incomes between $5,000 and $10,000. As a result, more than half of the relief went to those with incomes below $10,000. Again, I would like to point out that this distribution of the relief almost exactly paralleled the existing distribution of the total income-tax burden. Moreover, the 1954 tax reduction was distributed in almost exactly the same manner in which the 1951 tax increase had been distributed. Under the 1951 Revenue Act, almost 70 percent of the tax increase was imposed upon those with incomes above $5,000. It seemed only fair that we should reduce taxes in the same manner by which we had previously increased them.

It can properly be pointed out that the $3 billion tax reduction which took effect January 1, 1954, had been written into the law by a Democratic Congress. Of course, that reduction could never have been given reality had not the Republican Party succeeded in slashing at least $11 billion from the Democratic spending program. But, to be fair, the law was written by the Democrats. Now let me remind you that that tax cut, designed by the Democrats, gave only 31 percent of the relief to those with incomes below $5,000. The Republican tax-revision bill, on the other hand, gave 40 percent of the relief to this same group—almost half again as much.

Personally, I regret exceedingly this continued Democratic emphasis on income classes. I was brought up in the tradition that we did not have classes, as such, in this great country of ours. I was taught that every American stood as an equal among his fellow Americans. I still believe that this principle is basic to our way of life. I have demonstrated that the continued Democratic efforts to label the Republican tax program as a rich man's program and as discriminating against the little taxpayer are without any foundation in fact. Such political propaganda adopts the theory of class struggle which is foreign to everything for which America stands.

Mr. Speaker, recently the Department of Commerce reported that some 41 percent of American families have incomes of $5,000 a year or more. Fifty-five percent receive incomes of more than $4,000 a year. More and more, we are becoming a Nation of middle-income people. As a result, I have been shocked at the persistent campaign of slander and vilification directed at this great group of Americans. I do not think that it is even good politics. I believe that this propaganda will be repudiated by the great majority of independent-thinking citizens.

Mr. Speaker, I believe it is also timely to recall that prior to the advent of the New Deal in 1933, income-tax exemptions amounted to $2,500. The average person of small means paid no income taxes. Little by little, Democratic administrations and Democratic Congresses whittled away at the personal exemption until in 1948 it reached $500. The New Deal discovered that soaking the rich was not enough to support its extravagant programs. First, it had to soak the middle class and then finally it had to put the squeeze on even the lowest income groups.

The Republican 80th Congress reversed this trend and passed legislation increasing the level of the exemption to $600 and providing a double exemption for the blind and for those over age 65. President Truman vetoed that legislation but the Republican 80th Congress passed the law over his veto.

In light of some of the charges being made against the Republican tax program, it is useful to look at the record. It helps to keep these charges in their proper political perspective.

Regulation of Our Foreign Trade and National Economy and Its Effect on American Workingmen and Investors

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE W. MALONE
OF NEVADA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement by me on the effects on the national economy of the Geneva General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and the abdication by Congress of its constitutional responsibility to regulate our commerce with foreign nations.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President, the foreign trade and the national economy of this Nation are now being regulated in Geneva, Switzerland, by 35 nations, of which we are 1, each with 1 vote; in direct contravention of article I, section 8, of the Constitution, which places that responsibility directly in the Congress of the United States.

Our markets are being divided among them, through the simple expedient of multilateral trade agreements, lowering the duties or tariffs that this Nation had adjusted for a century and a half to equalize our wage-living standards with the European and Asiatic sweatshop labor costs, thus assuring American workingmen and investors equal access to American markets.

CONGRESS AUTHORIZED GATT AT GENEVA IN 1934

The Secretary of State has testified before the Senate Finance Committee that the 1934 Trade Agreements Act, as extended by Congress, not only transferred the Constitutional responsibility of Congress to regulate foreign trade and the national economy to the President, but by that same act authorized the President to set up the Geneva organization of the General Agreements on Tariffs and Trade, which he did in 1947.

ONE-HUNDRED-AND-FIFTY-YEAR PRINCIPLE ABANDONED

The 150-year principle of the regulation of foreign trade on the basis of fair and reasonable competition—adjusting the duty or tariff to take the profit out of the foreign sweatshop wages at the water's edge—was abandoned in 1934 along with the workingmen and investors of this Nation.

As a result, the textile, crockery, machine tool, precision instrument, mineral, wool, chemical, livestock, and several hundred other industries are continually threatened through cheap labor produced imports—while our economy is being steadied through a war expenditure of $40 billion per year.

CONVENTION RESOLUTION

Mr. President, the Nevada State Republican Convention in Winnemucca, Nev., May 18 and 19, 1956, passed the following resolution:

"The Republican Party urges the Congress of the United States to resume its constitutional responsibility of regulating foreign commerce through the adjustment of duties, imposts, and excises, through its agent, the Tariff Commission, and allow the so-called Reciprocal Trade Act, which transferred such responsibility to the President to expire in 1958."

If the Congress shall repeal the 1934 Trade Agreements Act, or not extend it in 1958, and revert to the Constitution, as the resolution sets out, then the Tariff Commission, an agent of Congress, would be guided by section 336 of the 1930 Tariff Act on principle which says that:

"If the Commission finds it shown by the investigation that the duties expressly fixed by statute do not equalize the difference in the costs of production of the domestic article and the like or similar foreign article when produced in the principal competing country, the Commission shall specify in its report such increases or decreases in rates of duty expressly fixed by statute (including any necessary change in classification) as it finds shown by the investigation to be necessary to equalize such differences."

SENATE DEBATE

Mr. President, on March 31, 1954, in the debate on the proposed extension of the 1934 Trade Agreements Act, I said on the Senate floor:

"Mr. President, the United States has the resources, the ability, and capital to maintain a strong, balanced economy. But, over a period of two decades there have been five approaches in an effort to destroy this Nation's living standards, built up over a period of 175 years, and to average them with the lower standards prevailing elsewhere in the world.

"First, the political approach, which has been identified as communism, did not start yesterday; it began in 1934, with the recognition of Communist Russia without any safeguards whatever.

"Second, there is the economic approach, beginning in 1934 with the passage of the Trade Agreements Act, when Congress transferred to the Executive its constitutional responsibility of regulating foreign trade, and of determining and adjusting duties, imposts, and excises.

"The third approach has been the continual whittling away of constitutional provisions and safeguards through the medium of Executive orders, executive agreements, and other types of agreements, which needed the approval of only a majority of each House of Congress, instead of a two-thirds vote of the Senate; and also by other means, including United Nations actions.

"Fourth, there has been the taxation approach, with the continual rise in income taxes, and the consequent inability of companies and individuals to build reserves with which to carry on through lean years, while at the same time they are taxed out of the international market.

"The fifth approach has been irredeemable currency. The gold standard was abolished in 1934, and the Government proceeded to print money and to go into debt.

"The American workingman and investor is entitled to a protection equal to the difference in wages and taxes paid in this Nation and those paid in the chief competing countries.

"The American taxpayer deserves relief from subsidizing foreign competitors reluctant to bear tax burdens necessary to support themselves.

"American industries and American workers deserve security from ruthless, unfair foreign competition subsidized by American aid in dollars, new equipment, and prodigal trade concessions.

"Give foreign nations equal access to American markets but no advantage."

REPUBLICAN PLATFORM

Mr. President, in 1860 Abraham Lincoln's platform stated that tariffs should be adjusted to "encourage the development of the industrial interest of the whole country." For almost a century following that statement the Republican Party held to that principle, supporting a flexible duty or tariff adjusted to at all times equal the difference in the effective wages and general cost of doing business here and in the chief competing country on each product.

Such flexible duty or tariff would be adjusted then as the wage-living standard in such foreign country improved, and when it equals our own, free trade would be the automatic and immediate result.

The 1956 Republican Party platform to be prepared at San Francisco should include the Nevada foreign trade plank which supports a return to the Constitution in the regulation of foreign commerce and the century-old Republican principle of adjusting duties or tariffs on the basis of fair and reasonable competition—a practical way of taking the profit out of cheap foreign labor at the water's edge and assuring American workingmen and investors of equal access to American markets.

As a matter of fact, if the profit is taken out of foreign cheap labor at the water's edge through an adjusted duty or tariff, the incentive to hold down foreign wages for profit is removed and such foreign nations might allow the workingmen's lot to improve and create a market of their own.

The subject at issue is the American system versus international socialism.

The Truth About Our Foreign Aid

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM LANGER
OF NORTH DAKOTA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, by virtue of the Mutual Security Act of 1956, we have voted away $3.7 billion of this country's money. This type of thoughtless extravagance is by no means new or unique. When Woodrow Wilson took office on March 3, 1913, our national debt was $1,195,684,244.

Then after World War I, through his Secretary of the Treasury, William Gibbs McAdoo, money was loaned in sums totaling $2,521,121,825.45. Now, how much of this money was repaid? Repayments totaled $14,361,173.38. The two figures do not match very well, do they?

I wish to insert at this point a table showing the amounts loaned and the amounts repaid. The little country of Finland was the only country repaying its loan.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Money loaned in the following amounts

Belgium	$177,434,467.89
Cuba	61,974,041.10
France	1,027,477,800.00
Great Britain	581,000,000.00
Greece	15,000,000.00
Italy	617,034,050.90
Liberia	26,000.00
Rumania	25,000,000.00
Yugoslavia	16,175,465.56

Money repaid in the following amounts

Belgium	$2,003,656.21
France	64,301,901.29
Great Britain	72,171,061.42
Italy	364,319.28
Rumania	1,798,632.02
Yugoslavia	720,600.16

Mr. LANGER. I call your attention to the fact that under the Republican administrations of Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover, these loans were not increased, that interest was demanded, and in some instances paid, although these countries, angry because Uncle Sam wanted his money back, called Uncle Sam, Uncle Shylock.

Instead of making more loans under the Republican Presidents, $3,108,000,000 was paid in the reduction of the national debt.

Our national debt today is $272,719,052,855.57—July 1, 1956.

At the end of World War II came the visit from Winston Churchill. We saw Great Britain receiving a loan of $3,750,000,000, under promises, not a single one of which was ever kept.

Then we find—leaving out the war and the billions of dollars we contributed to it—that since July 1, 1945, and through March 31, 1956, we have given $54,150,000,000 away for foreign aid.

I wish to insert at this point a table showing the amount of loans made to foreign countries since World War II, up to 1952.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Post World War II

Western Europe and dependent areas	$25,857,000,000
Austria	1,013,000,000
Belgium-Luxembourg	806,000,000
British Commonwealth	7,441,000,000
Denmark	291,000,000
Finland	128,000,000
France	5,070,000,000
Germany	3,891,000,000
Greece	1,209,000,000

Iceland	28,000,000
Ireland	147,000,000
Italy	2,647,000,000
Netherlands	1,243,000,000
Norway	$328,000,000
Portugal	47,000,000
Spain	41,000,000
Sweden	112,000,000
Trieste	46,000,000
Turkey	239,000,000
Yugoslavia	525,000,000
Unspecified Western Europe	605,000,000
Other Europe	1,160,000,000
Czechoslovakia	213,000,000
Poland	443,000,000
U. S. S. R.	465,000,000
Unspecified Other Europe	39,000,000
Near East and Africa	448,000,000
Egypt	19,000,000
Iran	42,000,000
Israel	218,000,000
Liberia	24,000,000
Saudi Arabia	21,000,000
Union of South Africa	28,000,000
Unspecified Near East and Africa	97,000,000
Asia and Pacific	5,600,000,000
Afghanistan	17,000,000
Australia-New Zealand	27,000,000
Burma	17,000,000
China	1,070,000,000
India	258,000,000
Indochina	37,000,000
Indonesia	208,000,000
Japan and Ryukyu Islands	2,414,000,000
Korea	717,000,000
Philippines	807,000,000
Thailand	17,000,000
Unspecified Asia and Pacific	11,000,000
American Republics	818,000,000
Canada	150,000,000
International and unspecified	928,000,000

Mr. LANGER. Apparently Uncle Sam had learned nothing from his experience of the giveaway program after World War I.

Although these World War I debts are still carried on the books of the Treasury as obligations owing the United States, we allowed ourselves to be bilked into loaning many times this amount following World War II.

In fact, this democratic administration went around begging countries to take money, and created such a scandal in foreign countries that Sweden refused to take $20 million, even as a gift.

Charity begins at home. Evidently this is an axiom that has not entirely penetrated the governmental mentality. After World War I we were the epitome of ludicrous laxity about collecting our accounts receivable on the international level. We see in this the incipient beginnings of the grotesque notion that friendship may be bought in the market place. Look at the treatment accorded our own farmers.

Did our Government, like Canada, cancel the seed and feed loans to them? It most certainly did not. Foreign governments which we had already aided to the limit, and in many cases beyond all reason, were accorded preferential treatment over productive citizens of our own country.

Time enough to worry about the economic plight of foreign nations when our own backyard is swept clean.

But this giveaway doctrine continued in 1953 when we donated $7,900,000,000. In 1954 when we donated $5,927,000,000. In 1955 when we gave away $3,676,000,000, and this year $3,766,570,000 was voted away for foreign aid.

The overwhelming percentage of this $3.7 billion is nothing more than an outright gift to our so-called allies, who are the same gentlemen who, after receiving billions of dollars from us in the Korean war, allowed 95 percent of the dying to be done by American boys and 95 percent of the paying to be done by the taxpayers of the United States.

The people of the United States are entitled to know the truth about this so-called foreign aid and giveaway program—how it began, how it was developed, and what it cost American people in the blood of their sons and daughters.

Mr. President, I have voted against every dollar of this giveaway program.

When I was back in North Dakota, some critics of these loans asked me why President Eisenhower, after being elected on the platform that the taxpayers thought would stop the making of these loans, continued to seemingly throw good money after bad.

The answer I was obliged to give was that the Democratic Presidents, Roosevelt and Truman, had made so many commitments that our Government was obliged to fulfill that the Republican President, Dwight D. Eisenhower, had to make these commitments good just like ordinary farmers and businessmen have to when they have made a commitment to the bank.

In order that you may know what a billion dollars is, in ascertaining what these figures are, I have a statement from the State Tax Commissioner of North Dakota, Mr. J. Arthur Engen, showing that in 1954 all the real and personal property in the State of North Dakota was assessed at $1,678,952,473. The public utility and railroad property was assessed at $182,352,363.

Last year the interest on the national debt was $6,791,000,000; just the interest, you understand. That is nearly $7 billion. This is enough to buy the entire State of North Dakota, lock, stock, and barrel, three and a half times over.

It is hard to understand why this spending to no purpose continues, why we constantly milk our own financial resources with no hope of any reasonable return on our investment. I leave you with a question. When will we, the Senators and Representatives of the United States of America, learn that among nations, even as among individuals, friendship is won, not bought?

Report of Activities of the Committee on House Administration

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. OMAR BURLESON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I submit herewith the report of activities of the Committee on House Administration, 84th Congress.

During the 84th Congress nearly 300 bills and resolutions were referred to the Committee on House Administration. Hearings were held by the Subcommittees on Accounts, Elections, Library, and Printing on proposed items of legislation, after which recommendations were submitted to the full committee for final consideration and subsequent action by the House.

Funds in the amount of $3,500,132.89 were approved for the following standing and select committees to conduct studies and investigations authorized by the House of Representatives:

Standing committee:	Amount authorized
Agriculture	$50,000.00
Armed Services	150,000.00
Banking and Currency	150,000.00
District of Columbia	2,000.00
Education and Labor	125,000.00
Foreign Affairs	75,000.00
Government Operations	995,000.00
House Administration	85,000.00
Interior and Insular Affairs	60,000.00
Interstate and Foreign Commerce	60,000.00
Judiciary	225,000.00
Merchant Marine and Fisheries	85,000.00
Post Office and Civil Service	75,000.00
Public Works	50,000.00
Un-American Activities	500,000.00
Veterans' Affairs	85,000.00
Ways and Means	330,000.00
	3,102,000.00
Special and select committees:
Baltic States (for 83d Cong.)	1,632.89
Campaign Expenditures	30,000.00
Small Business	330,000.00
Survivors' Benefits (Armed Service)	36,500.00
White County Bridge Commission	10,000.00
	408,132.89
Total	3,510,132.89

During the first session the committee held extensive hearings over a period of over 2½ months on a bill introduced by the chairman authorizing an adjustment and equalization of salaries in the House of Representatives, the first overall study of personnel, positions, and salaries which had been undertaken in the House for many years. The head of each department of the House was invited to make recommendations to the committee concerning his department. The committee recommended that many obsolete titles should be changed and salary adjustments made. It was later decided that the Committee on Appropriations should handle the bill. Some of the provisions were adopted in conference on the general legislative appropriations bill, H. R. 7117, and other recommendations have been approved by the House in separate resolutions from time to time during the second session.

The committee recommended changes in the law regulating the use of electrical and mechanical office equipment for Members and offices of the House of Representatives—Public Law 420—and also recommended an increase in the telephone and telegraph allowance for Members including for the first time an authorization for cablegrams in the amount of $2,000 per annum for each Member—Public Law 422.

After due consideration the committee recommended and secured the approval of 15 additional privates, Capitol Police force, for duty on the House side of the Capitol—House Resolution 448.

Seven bills and resolutions were referred to the Committee on House Administration which would provide additional supervision for House pages. Hearings were held on the various bills, all of which indicated the sincere interest of the sponsors of the legislation in the welfare of the pages, but no decision was reached by the committee.

During the first session the Committee on House Administration, after a thorough study and investigation of existing facilities, recommended an expansion and improvement of the facilities of the House restaurant—House Resolution 218 and House Resolution 219. The committee's recommendations resulted in action of both the House and Senate in authorizing completion of the east front of the Capitol in accordance with the architectural plans which had been approved years ago. When completed, this addition to the Capitol will include ample restaurant facilities for Members and employees of both House and Senate.

Upon recommendation of the subcommittee on elections, which conducted hearings on the various subjects, the committee reported legislation which would amend the Hatch Act—H. R. 3084. Also, the committee recommended legislation—Public Law 296—providing certain framework which would permit members of the armed services, their families, and other personnel to exercise their voting franchise while absent from their legal residences. The committee also reported legislation—House Concurrent Resolution 94—which was agreed to by the Senate, recommending certain changes in State election laws by waiving State residence requirements in voting for President and Vice President of the United States.

Over 30 bills and resolutions have been referred to the committee which would provide for memorials to outstanding individuals. Many of these bills were not considered because of the long-established policy of the committee of not recommending the expenditure of Federal funds for such purposes.

The committee recommended the acceptance of a gift from the Republic of Venezuela of a statue of the great South American liberator, Simon Bolivar—Public Law 109.

The committee recommended legislation—Public Law 107—which designated the former Arlington House as the Custis-Lee Mansion, which has been dedicated as a permanent memorial to Robert E. Lee.

Other memorials approved by the committee include the placing of a statue of the late Chief Justice Edward Douglas White in the United States Capitol with appropriate ceremonies of unveiling—Senate Concurrent Resolution 24; the establishment of a permanent committee for the Oliver Wendell Holmes Devise; the acceptance and erection of a memorial bell tower on the Capitol grounds as a memorial to the late Senator Robert A. Taft—Senate Concurrent Resolution 44; authorizing the American Battle Monuments Commission to prepare plans and estimates for the erection of a suitable memorial to Gen. John J. Pershing—Public Law 461; the establishment of a commission to formulate plans for a memorial to Franklin Delano Roosevelt—Public Law 372; the acceptance of a gift from the Ericsson Memorial Committee of the United States of a replica of a bronze statue of Leif Ericsson, the original of which had been presented to the people of Iceland by the United States Government as a gesture of good will on the 1,000th anniversary of Althing, the Icelandic Parliament—Senate Joint Resolution 93.

At various times the committee has approved and recommended the appointment of Members of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

The Committee on House Administration conducted hearings on 11 bills providing for the establishment of a National Library of Medicine to be located in Chicago, Ill. Action by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in reporting S. 3430 to the House removed any obligation of the House Administration Committee in recommending legislation.

Fifty-seven bills and resolutions were referred to the Committee on House Administration during the 84th Congress providing for the printing of certain documents. Each proposal was carefully examined, and the committee recommended passage of only such resolutions as it deemed necessary and in the public interest.

In addition to authorizing the printing of many committee reports, hearings, and documents, the following outstanding publications were approved and authorized to be printed:

The Capitol in Story and Pictures—House Document 232.

The Prayer Room—House Document 234.

How Our Laws Are Made—reprint of House Document 210, 83d Congress.

Our American Government, What Is It? How Does It Function?—House Document 465, 79th Congress, brought up to date.

Cannon's Procedure in the House of Representatives—revised edition; Public Law 230.

Prayers Offered by the Chaplain of the House of Representatives, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., at the opening of the daily sessions of the House during the 83d and 84th Congresses—House Resolution 439.

The Constitution of the United States, as Amended to February 27, 1951, Together With the Declaration of Independence, Printed With an Index—House Concurrent Resolution 243.

The Powers of the President as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States—House Resolution 549.

Printing of the song Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag—House Concurrent Resolution 161.

Preparation of a history of momentous scenes in Congress since the Revolutionary War—House Joint Resolution 689.

The subcommittee of the Committee on House Administration, authorized pursuant to House Resolution 262, 84th Congress, to study Federal printing and Government paperwork management, has made fine progress. Several elements of congressional printing have been examined to focus attention on those which warrant the greatest need for corrective action. In this connection, a resolution has been prepared to correct the present condition in the House folding room, resulting from unsatisfactory distribution practices. Need is indicated for further action to eliminate waste in congressional printing by making more effective distribution.

Through the efforts of this subcommittee, the issuance of the Digest of Public General Bills was put on a more current schedule, providing for four cumulative issues and biweekly supplements to the first three issues. Studies have been made, which, it is hoped, will bring about some worthwhile recommendations for the best method to handle jointly sponsored bills.

Hearings have been held with officials of Government agencies most closely related to the paperwork management phase of the study. The subcommittee has filed a report on forms management which comprises the first part of the full report, entitled "Paperwork Management and Printing Facilities in the United States Government." The printed hearings, in connection with part I, Forms Management, are now being made ready for public use.

Due to the fact that the Committee on House Administration has jurisdiction over administrative procedures in the House, much of the work of the committee is necessarily not reflected in legislation, but in administrative details assigned by the chairman to the clerk and committee staff. This includes the enrollment of bills and their delivery to the President of the United States for signature.

The Committee on House Administration feels that it has made a distinct contribution to the 84th Congress through its consideration and recommendation of legislation providing the tools which the committee believes are necessary for the efficient administration of a congressional office, such as additional clerk-hire allowances, additional telephone and telegraph allowances, broadening of the regulations governing electrical and mechanical office equipment, and the printing of pertinent committee hearings and reports which prove to be of value both to Members of the House and their constituents.

In addition, the committee has worked closely with the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress in determining the means by which the Library can be of the greatest service to Members and committees of the House of Representatives.

Benefits for Women Under the 1956 Amendments to the Social Security Law

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. DANIEL A. REED
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, some rather important social security changes affecting women were recently enacted. I believe it is important that these changes be clearly understood.

Beginning with November 1956, a woman worker, who has done enough work to be insured under the social security law, may, if she wishes, become entitled to social security payments as soon as she reaches 62 years of age instead of having to wait until she reaches 65.

If she chooses to take the payments before she reaches 65, the amount of the monthly payments will be reduced. The amount of the reduction depends on the number of months before she reaches 65 that she starts getting benefits. If she has her benefits start as soon as she reaches age 62, the amount of each month's payment will be 80 percent of what she would get if she were 65. If she waits until her 63d birthday, the amount of the payments will be 86⅔ percent of what she would receive if she were 65, and if she waits until she reaches 64, the amount will be 93⅓ percent.

The table below gives some examples of the benefits that will be paid at different ages:

Women workers' benefits

Average monthly earnings [1]	Amount of monthly benefit
	If claimed at 62d birthday	If claimed at 63d birthday	If claimed at 64th birthday	If claimed at 65th birthday or later
$45	$24.00	$26.00	$28.00	$30.00
$100	44.00	47.70	51.40	55.00
$150	54.80	59.40	64.00	68.50
$200	62.80	68.10	73.30	78.50
$250	70.80	76.70	92.60	88.50
$300	78.80	85.40	92.00	98.50
$350	86.80	94.10	101.30	108.50

[1] After 1950, and after drop-out of up to 5 years of lowest (or no) earnings.

If a woman chooses to take benefits in a reduced amount before she reaches 65, she will continue to get a reduced amount even after she becomes 65. However, if there are 3 or more months before she reaches 65 for which she does not receive benefits because she is working, her benefit will be automatically refigured when she reaches 65 to make allowance for the months in which she did not get a benefit.

PAYMENTS TO DEPENDENTS

Even if a woman chooses to take her benefits at a reduced rate, the payments to her dependents (her children or dependent husband or, in case of her death, her dependent children, widower, or dependent parents) will not be reduced. These dependents will receive their benefits at a rate based on the unreduced amount of her old-age insurance benefit.

AMOUNT OF WORK REQUIRED

The amount of work required to make payments possible on a woman's social-security account depends on the date she reaches age 62 or the date of her death. At least 1½ years of work are required but never more than 10 years. Two examples will give an idea of the requirements: For a workingwoman who died or reached 62 before July 1, 1954, no more than 1½ years of work is now needed; the woman who dies or reaches 62 in the first 6 months of 1958 will need no more than 3½ years.

Changing the retirement age from 65 to 62 makes payments possible for some women now over 65 who did not have enough work to qualify under the old law and for the survivors of some women who died after June 30, 1954, and were between 62 and 65 years of age at death.

THE WIFE OF A RETIRED WORKER

If a woman is the wife of a man who is entitled to old-age insurance benefits, she may become entitled to wife's insurance benefits at any time she chooses after she reaches 62 instead of having to wait until she is 65. If she takes the payments before she reaches 65, however, the amount of each monthly benefit will be reduced. The amount of the reduction depends on the number of months before she reaches 65 that she starts getting benefits.

If she chooses to start getting the payments as soon as she reaches 62, the amount of her payment each month will be only 75 percent as much as it will be if she waits until she is 65. If she waits until she reaches 63, she will get 83⅓ percent, and if she waits until she reaches 64, she will get 91⅔ percent of the amount she would get if she waits until she is 65.

The table below gives some examples of the benefits that will be paid at different ages:

Wife's benefits

Worker's benefit amount	Amount of monthly benefit
	If claimed at 62d birthday	If claimed at 63d birthday	If claimed at 64th birthday	If claimed at 65th birthday or later
$30.00	$11.30	$12.50	$13.80	$15.00
$55.00	20.70	23.00	25.30	27.50
$68.50	25.80	28.60	31.50	34.30
$78.50	29.50	32.80	36.10	39.30
$88.50	33.30	37.00	40.70	44.30
$98.50	37.00	41.10	45.20	49.30
$108.50	40.80	45.30	49.80	54.30

If a woman chooses to take benefits in a reduced amount before she reaches 65, she will continue to get a reduced amount even after she is 65. However, if there are 3 or more months before she reaches 65 for which she does not receive benefits because she or her husband work—or in which she gets a mother's unreduced benefit because she has in her care a child entitled to child's benefits—her benefit will be automatically refigured when she reaches 65 to make allowance for those months.

If her husband should die at any time after she has begun to receive her reduced benefits, she may receive a lump-sum death payment and the widow's unreduced monthly benefits.

Example: Mary Jackson decides to claim benefits at the same time her husband claims his. He is 65; she is 62. Her husband's monthly benefit is $88.50. She will draw $33.30—her wife's benefit reduced from $44.30 because of her age. After a year, Mary's husband dies. Mary will then receive an unreduced lump-sum death payment of $255 and widow's unreduced monthly benefits of $66.40.

APPLYING FOR BENEFITS

If a woman is now 62 or over—or when she becomes 62—and if she is a workingwoman insured under social security, or the wife of a beneficiary, or the widow of an insured worker, or the dependent mother of an insured worker who died leaving no widow, widower, or child eligible for benefits, she may apply at her social-security office for the benefits described above. The first checks to women who qualify under the new provisions will be for the month of November 1956. If she is eligible for a benefit for November 1956, she can get it even if she does not apply until the end of November 1957.

Of course, monthly payments will be withheld under certain circumstances if she continues to work or returns to work.

IF A WOMAN HAS A CHILD IN HER CARE

If a woman has a child in her care and the child is entitled to child's insurance benefits based on her husband's earnings, she may be entitled to unreduced monthly payments regardless of her age. Under the old law, only a child under 18 could be entitled to benefits. Under the amendments a child 18 or over may also receive benefits beginning with January 1957 if he has been disabled since before he reached 18. This makes it possible for the mother of the disabled child 18 or over also to get payments beginning with January 1957 regardless of her age.

Mr. Speaker, the following question is one which many women are asking about the new law:

Suppose I claim my benefit now, rather than waiting until I am 65. How long will I be ahead in total benefits paid?

The answer is that as a workingwoman, if you choose the reduced benefit at any age between 62 and 65, you will be ahead for the first 15 years. However, if you receive a retired worker's benefits at the reduced rate for more than 15 years, the total amount you receive will not be as large as if you had waited until age 65 for the higher benefit. As the wife of a retired beneficiary, if you choose the reduced benefit at any age between 62 and 65, you will be ahead for the first 12 years. However, if you receive wife's benefits at the reduced rate for more than 12 years, the total amount you receive will not be as large as if you had waited until age 65 for the higher benefit.

Of course, certain events can cause a change in the total amount you will receive. A workingwoman may lose some checks because of return to work. A wife's reduced benefit would be changed to a widow's unreduced benefit if her husband should die.

A woman must make her own decision on whether it is worth more to her to have the benefits now, at reduced rate, or to wait awhile and get a higher rate. The people in the social-security office will be glad to furnish information, but they cannot tell her what her decision should be.

TO SPEED HANDLING OF WOMEN'S CLAIMS

A woman's payments may be started sooner if she can bring the proofs indicated below to the social-security district office at the time her claim is made. What proofs are needed depends on what type of benefit is claimed.

WIDOWS

The marriage certificate, the worker's death certificate, and proof of the widow's age are needed. Proof of age may be a birth or baptismal certificate, insurance policy, record of age on marriage license, or other old documents which clearly show date of birth or age.

DEPENDENT MOTHERS OF DECEASED WORKERS

Proof of the mother's age, the worker's death certificate, and any documents which may establish the extent to which the wage earner was contributing to the support of the dependent mother are needed.

WIVES

Proof of the wife's age is needed. It will help to have her husband accompany her to the district office, since a form signed by him will also be required.

Madison and the Empire of Free Men

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS C. HENNINGS, JR.

OF MISSOURI

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HENNINGS. Mr. President, last September 11 the Bar Association of Madison County, Ill., held most impressive public ceremonies commemorating the creation of Madison County. But it was far more than just a civic occasion. It was, in fact, a program of rededication to the principles of constitutional government to which James Madison and other selfless patriots of his day devoted their lives. In the present climate, when the ideals and principles of free men stand in jeopardy, it is appropriate for all of us to recall and to rededicate ourselves to the political philosophy of that great American—the philosophy which found expression in our Constitution and which is embodied particularly in the Bill of Rights.

It is in this spirit, Mr. President, that I commend to the careful attention of my colleagues, and ask unanimous consent to insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the principal speech delivered on that occasion—an eloquent and provocative address entitled "Madison and the Empire of Free Men," by the former St. Louis newspaperman and distinguished historian, Mr. Irving Brant. Mr. Brant, as many Members of the Congress know, I am sure, has already published four volumes of a definitive study of the life of James Madison and that turbulent period in the growth of our Nation, and is now writing the fifth of what will be a six-volume history—a study which, I am confident, will prove of inestimable and abiding value to all students of American history, politics, and government.

I also ask unanimous consent to insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the remarks made on the occasion in question by Mr. Burton C. Bernard, of Granite City, Ill., on behalf of the Madison County Bar Association, in presenting a plaque commemorating James Madison, and the acceptance remarks by Mr. Irving Dilliard, editor of the editorial page of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, who is past president of the Illinois State Historical Society and director of the Madison County Historical Society.

In addition, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the messages sent for the occasion by the Honorable Adlai E. Stevenson; by the Governor of Illinois, William G. Stratton; by my colleagues in the Congress, Senator Paul H. Douglas and Representative Melvin Price; by the chief justice of the Supreme Court of Illinois, Harry B. Hershey; and my own message for this historic celebration.

There being no objection, the addresses and messages were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MADISON AND THE EMPIRE OF FREE MEN

(By Mr. Irving Brant)

Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen, during the first 70 years of our national history, naming counties after Presidents of the United States was a good American pastime. It was about as common as fiddling at a wedding. There are 20 Madison counties in the United States, scattered from New York to Idaho, from Canada to the Gulf of Mexico. In most of them the choice of a name meant only that James Madison was one of a quartet of Presidents, the others being Washington, Jefferson, and Jackson, who were thought to rate that treatment when the lines of the governmental checkerboard were being drawn. However, there was nothing so routine as this in the relationship of Madison County, Ill., to the fourth President of the United States.

I do not merely have in mind that Madison occupied the White House when the first government of Illinois Territory was being organized, in 1809, and that he appointed all of its early officers. It was likewise natural that when new counties were being established in the young territory, one of them should have been named for the President then in office. Such obvious facts do not illumine, they rather conceal, the real connection between Madison and Madison County, Ill.

Before going into that, let us consider what sort of man James Madison was. He is generally recognized as the foremost of American political philosophers, the leading architect of the Constitution and the draftsman of its Bill of Rights. All of his work in this field was performed in the first 17 years of his adult life. Thereafter he served 7 years in Congress, 8 years as Secretary of State, and 8 years as President—23 years of public life which most historians have dealt with by progressing from moderate to severe disparagement. The verdict upon him as President could easily be represented by the following syllogism:

A great political philosopher cannot be a great President.

Madison was a great political philosopher.

Therefore, Madison was not a great President.

Ask for tangible evidence to support that conclusion and you will be told: Why, Madison was a timid pacifist who was pushed into the War of 1812, against his will, by the congressional War Hawks. But that is not evidence: it is accusation. Is the accusation true? Read the dispatch written by French Minister Turreau on November 2, 1810, a year and a half before the outbreak of the war. On that day, 5 weeks before Congress assembled, President Madison issued a proclamation cutting off commercial relations with England. And on that same day, said Turreau, the President directed the Secretary of State to tell him (I quote) "that the measures he (Madison) will take in case England continues to interfere with our communications with Europe will necessarily lead to war."

The evidence, it seems, contradicts the chief count in the indictment. The same is true, I might add, right down the line. But when was a syllogism ever overthrown by facts? Aristotle laid down the rule, which went unchallenged for 2,000 years, that the velocity of a falling body depends upon its weight. That is, a 10-pound stone falls 10 times as fast as a 1-pound stone. Galileo dropped two such rocks from the Leaning Tower of Pisa and then repeated the experiment before an audience of Italian mathematicians. The scholars saw the big stone and the pebble strike the ground at exactly the same moment. Then they reread Aristotle and said that Galileo was wrong. So I guess you had better accept the verdict that Madison was not one of our great Presidents.

Having made that as clear as the Missouri River, let us glance at some intriguing facts connected with the appointment, by Madison, of those first officers of Illinois Territory. In general, they were chosen on the recommendations of a Kentucky admiration society consisting of Senators Pope and Thruston and Representative Howard, leagued with ex-Kentuckian Jesse Thomas, who was congressional delegate from Indiana Territory and later Senator from Illinois. Of course, these Kentucky colonels were not seeking or bestowing political patronage. Their State was the only one that touched the new territory. Illinois had no Federal officeholders of its own, to give disinterested nonpolitical advice to the President, so the Kentuckians took this way of manifesting a benevolent interest in their neighbors' welfare. It was a cold spring, however, for Congressman Matthew Lyon, of Kentucky, the black sheep of the Democratic flock. "I was opposed to the election of Mr. Madison," he explained apologetically to a disappointed aspirant, "this accounts for my not mentioning your name for governor."

Ninian Edwards, for whom Edwardsville was named, is commonly regarded as the first governor of Illinois Territory. Actually, he was the second. John Boyle of Kentucky was appointed to that post 2 days after Madison became President. Boyle performed only one act as governor, he drew 3 weeks' pay as governor, but he never left Kentucky. Instead, he resigned to become a judge of the Kentucky Court of Appeals; the duties of his Illinois office were carried on by the new territorial secretary, who was a brother of Kentucky's Senator Pope. In his letter to Madison explaining his resignation Governor Boyle wrote: "Permit me now, sir, to recommend Ninian Edwards as a proper person to fill the appointment of governor."

Since Edwards was then chief justice of the same court that Boyle was entering, this was in effect a plan to exchange jobs. Edwards also was endorsed for the Illinois governorship by his and Madison's close friend, William Wirt of Virginia, and by his own Kentucky relative, the ubiquitous Senator Pope. The latter, however, said be believed that Edwards would prefer the governorship of Mississippi Territory. Imagine the effect on American history if that suggestion had been carried out. In that case Ninian Wirt Edwards, who was 4 days old when Pope wrote his letter, might still have married Elizabeth Todd. But Abraham Lincoln never would have set eyes on Mary Todd. Without her, many students of history believe, Lincoln would not have become President. Without his leadership, could the Union have survived? Verily, in the choosing of a governor, what was good for Illinois Territory was good for the country.

Governor Edwards furnished the link in the special relationship, to which I referred, between President Madison and Madison County, Ill. That relationship was a thing of the spirit, a part of the American people's struggle for equal political rights, with Madison letting them know what rights they were entitled to.

What happened in Illinois Territory at the beginning of the 19th century is not part of the dead and buried past, to be exhumed for antiquarian display. The struggle that went on here in 1812 goes on today in the minds of men and women in every State, city, and hamlet of the American Union. In many States it is the theme of open controversy, and it is rising in acuteness in nearly every other part of the world. When you unveil a plaque to James Madison 143 years after his name was given to your county, you span the years with the principles he lived by, and make them a visible, vibrant part of the present and the future.

Illinois Territory, it is hardly necessary to say, was formed by splitting Indiana Territory in two along the Wabash River, with the line of division extending straight north from Post Vincennes to Canada. This vast area, including the present States of Illinois, Wisconsin, and much of Minnesota, was divided at first into only two counties. In September 1812 the Territory was divided into five counties, one of them Madison—not solely Madison County as we know it today, but reaching from the Mississippi River to Indiana, and up to Canada. Most of this county, in the language of the day, was a loathesome wilderness with the warriors of Tecumseh making it more so. This redivision into five counties was not a simple reflection of the growth of population. It was a political maneuver in a struggle for power between two groups in the community, between the haves and have-nots, between those who believed in the republican form of government as it was defined by James Madison, and those who sought to concentrate political control in a handful of privileged monopolists.

The act creating Illinois Territory, passed in the closing days of the Jefferson administration, gave it a government similar to that provided by earlier laws for more extensive territories. This meant, at the outset, government by Presidential appointees, without a legislature. However, the Illinois act required the Governor to call elections for a general assembly, whenever he was given satisfactory evidence that this was the wish of a majority of freeholders—a freeholder being defined as the owner of 50 acres of land.

In the spring of 1812, various freeholders began petitioning Governor Edwards to poll the qualified voters on the establishment of a legislature, and if a majority approved, to order the election of its members. On the surface this was a fair and natural move toward democratic self-government. At bottom it was the opposite.

Under a 1789 law which Congress made applicable to Illinois Territory, the right to vote was limited to adult males with a 50-acre freehold. To qualify for office, a citizen must own 200 acres. The expectation had been that with the Federal Government selling raw land at a dollar and a half per acre, practically every settler in the newly opened country would quickly become a freeholder. Suffrage would be practically universal.

In Illinois Territory, however, settlers streamed in before Congress established new land offices. The only freeholders were two or three hundred farmers and farmer-lawyers—my apologies to the bar association; I should say two or three hundred farmers and prospective candidates for office. These individuals had managed to secure Government land patents. The great mass of the people were unable to do so. They staked out claims, built homes, planted and harvested crops. But in law they were trespassers on the public land, and they could not vote.

When the freeholders began to petition for the election of a legislature, Governor Edwards saw what was up and wrote to his old friend Congressman Richard M. Johnson, of Kentucky. The census of 1810, Edwards said, gave Illinois Territory a population of 12,282. Among these he was able to count 220 freeholders. This handful of men, the Governor wrote, would have the exclusive right of determining whether a new form of government should be established. They would then have the exclusive right to vote for the members of the legislature. The Territorial house of representatives, consisting of only 7 members, would nominate a legislative council of 5 members, to hold office for 5 years. These 12 men would write the laws and in joint session they would elect a Delegate to Congress.

Thus, Governor Edwards pointed out, he was being forced to call an election which would enable 220 persons—better say a few more than half of that number—to fix the measures of the Territory for the next 5 years. These freeholders, he declared, were men having an interest distinct from that of the great body of the people. They were a handful with power to act in opposition to the interest and wishes of the rest of the population. And what did the disfranchised masses think about it? Said the Governor: "Even if the danger to be apprehended should be considered problematical, still such are the jealous and independent dispositions of freemen that they never will be satisfied to depend for the security of their rights upon the mere courtesy of others."

The situation was made worse, Governor Edwards went on, by the fact that there were only two counties in Illinois. He had power to create additional counties, but was deterred from doing so by the reported fact that in the entire area from the Kaskaskia River to the Ohio—an area containing one-third or more of the whole population of the Territory—there were only three or four persons who owned enough land to entitle them to vote and apparently not a single one with a large enough freehold to qualify him for public office.

Furthermore, if he established the new form of government while there were but two counties, these two would get the entire membership of the legislature. Once the legislature came into existence, it alone would have the power to create new counties. He was not sure that the two existing counties would relinquish their power.

Congress, Governor Edwards suggested, could speedily remedy this extraordinary situation. "Under these circumstances," he wrote to Congressman Johnson, "I am sure I do not miscalculate when I suppose your attachment to republican principles will lead you to wish to extend their salutary influence to the people of this Territory by endorsing the right of suffrage." If he received word that Congress was likely to act quickly, he would hold back the elections until the mass of the people were given the right to vote.

Petitions went to Congress from Illinois Territory. From William Rector and 13 others came this sturdy assertion of American rights, including the right of protest:

"We cannot but view with the aversion natural to free men, Republicans, and lovers of equal rights, every manifestation of a desire among our fellow citizens to limit the exercise of all the rights aforesaid to a few individuals, to the exclusion of the great body of the people."

The last signature on that petition was "Laurance McClosky his mark." That man deserves a plaque all to himself—an American who didn't have to know how to write in order to know his rights.

Then there was a petition from 146 residents of the region below the Kaskaskia, men with still sharper words for the little group that was trying to seize control of the Territory. "To all our privations hitherto," they wrote, "we have submitted with patience in consequence of their resulting from the peculiar form of government adopted for the Territory." They had felicitated themselves with the pleasing anticipation of "an enjoyment of the equal rights of free men." But now they were sorry to see a disposition in some of the present freeholders "to exclude us from an equal participation in the benefits of government and to monopolize the whole power in their own hands."

Fittingly enough, the only petition sent to Congress from the other side was anonymous. Since freeholders must pay the added expenses of the general assembly, these nameless gentlemen asked, "would it not be unjust that those who do not contribute to it, should have a voice in the representation?" Nearly half of the entire population of the Territory, they remarked, lived south of the Kaskaskia, and all but four or five of those people were lawbreakers—unlawful intruders, guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to punishment. Extension of suffrage to them would not only countenance their infraction of the law but "by giving them equal rights with other citizens render their situation much more eligible."

It might be contended, the anonymous petitioners went on, that these intruders would purchase their lands whenever a land office was opened. A few might, they conceded, but a look at the history of the West would show "that the first settlers (being intruders generally) are but mere birds of passage." A few ambitious men, the petitioners concluded, were trying to throw the Territory into ferment and confusion, if not anarchy.

Well, there was the issue, thrown into the laps of Congress and the President—rule by the self-anointed few, or rule by the great body of the people; a helping hand to those who struggled to make a living, or fostering care for those who sit on top of their pile. Similar questions have come up in our own time. Should the Government play footsie with corporation farmers, or help the sharecropper get a stake in the soil he lives by? In the field of civil rights, the issue is typified by the long struggle to abolish the poll tax as a qualification for voting, and by the disfranchisement of a half million secondclass citizens, including myself, who have the dubious privilege of living in the District of Columbia. Judging by the speed with which Congress has undertaken to correct these current departures from democratic principle, one might suppose that it would have taken 50 years at least to secure action on the appeal by Governor Edwards and the supporting petitions from the disfranchised people of Illinois Territory.

Well, Ninian Edwards wrote his letter on March 14, 1812. It should have reached Washington during the week that ended April 7. On April 9, Congressman Johnson moved the appointment of a committee to consider extending the right of suffrage in Illinois Territory. Just 5 weeks later, President Madison signed a bill fulfilling that objective. In 5 weeks, Illinois Territory was converted from an incipient aristocracy into a republic with something very close to universal manhood suffrage. Besides other democratic features, the 1812 law provided that as soon as the governor should divide Illinois Territory into five districts, the voters in each of them should elect one member of the legislative council. Governor Edwards proceeded to subdivide the territory into five counties, coinciding with the districts of the legislative council, and that is how Madison County, Ill., came into existence.

If you search the public records for President Madison's official connection with these developments, you will find only that he signed the bill passed by Congress. But if you turn to the published writings of James Madison, as they were then known to the country, you will find that he laid the groundwork 25 years earlier for these 1812 occurrences in Illinois and in Congress. Running through the letter of Governor Edwards to Congressman Johnson, running through the petitions for relief sent to Congress by residents of Illinois Territory, are the thoughts and principles voiced by Madison in The Federalist No. 39. These men of Illinois used the very words in which Madison defined the republican form of government, as established for the Nation in the Constitution of 1787, and as guaranteed by that Constitution to every individual State of the Union.

What, asked Madison in The Federalist, are the distinctive features of the republican form of government? Were an answer to be sought, he said, not by recurring to principles, but merely by noticing what countries were called republics, that question could never be answered satisfactorily. Holland, in which no particle of the supreme authority was derived from the people, was called a republic. "The same title (I am quoting) has been bestowed on Venice, where absolute power over the great body of the people is exercised, in the most absolute manner, by a small body of hereditary nobles." In contrast with these and other examples, Madison defined the republican form of government within the meaning of the new Constitution:

"If we resort for a criterion to the different principles on which different forms of government are established, we may define a republic to be, or at least may bestow that name on, a government which derives all its powers directly or indirectly from the great body of the people, and is administered by persons holding their office during pleasure, (or) for a limited period, or during good behavior."

He continued:

"It is essential to such a government that it be derived from the great body of the society, not from an inconsiderable proportion, or a favored class of it; otherwise a handful of tyrannical nobles, exercising their oppressions by a delegation of their powers, might aspire to the rank of republicans, and claim for their government the honorable title of republic."

Again and again in those few paragraphs, Madison emphasized that under the republican form of government, all power must be lodged in the great body of the people. Observe how his words were echoed by Governor Edwards and the Illinois petitioners to Congress. Power was sought in Illinois, said the Governor, by a handful of men who had "an interest distinct from that of the great body of the people." When Edwards appealed to Congressman Johnson on the basis of his "attachment to republican principles," he was not referring to their common allegiance to what was then called the Republican Party, and is now the Democratic Party—the party of Jefferson and Madison. On the contrary, this attachment to republican principles was to help "extend their salutary influence * * * by endorsing the right of suffrage." The right to vote, not the way men voted, was in the mind of Governor Edwards, as it had been in the mind of Madison when he laid down the guiding principle.

So too, the thoughts and words of James Madison were in the minds of those Illinois petitioners who protested against the limitation of political rights "to a few individuals, to the exclusion of the great body of the people." These men of Illinois Territory were talking about their rights as freemen, as citizens of a republic, as lovers of equal rights. They contrasted the republican form of government with the "peculiar form" then existing in the Territory—existing quite by accident—under which a minority was seeking to "monopolize the whole power in their own hands."

In the 143 years since that political crisis gave birth to Madison County, Ill., the American people have gone far ahead in their concern for the general welfare. Some human rights have been fortified, others jeopardized or weakened. Education has been recognized as a responsibility of government. The Constitution has been enshrined for public worship, without regard to its contents. But do we know as much about the republican form of government as that illiterate Illinois farmer did when he drew a cross—Laurance McClosky his mark—on that petition to Congress in 1812? Just a few years ago one of the great liberal newspapers of the country, not, I am glad to say, the great liberal newspaper, dealt with this subject in a discussion of the poll tax as a prerequisite to voting. Its editorial writer challenged the assertion that Congress had power to abolish the poll-tax requirement under article IV of section 4 of the Constitution, which guarantees to every State in this Union a republican form of government.

"But a republic," said the editorial rebuttal, "is a state in which the sovereign power resides in the electorate without reference to any basis of election."

In other words, nine-tenths of the people may be legally disfranchised, and, if the remaining one-tenth have sovereign power to elect officers, you still have the republican form of government. James Madison thought otherwise. So did Ninian Edwards. So did Laurance McClosky. So would anybody else who approached the subject with a knowledge of history and devotion to the principle of human equality under the law.

Madison's connection with Illinois Territory goes much farther back, and has a broader basis, than this contest over the electorate. He is universally known as the father of the Constitution. Few indeed are those who know that he might also be called the father of the public domain. And it has passed virtually unnoticed in American history that the public domain and the Constitution form an interwoven chain of cause and effect, each reacting on the other.

At the outbreak of the American Revolution, the State of Virginia claimed ownership, under her royal charters, of all vacant land running west and northwest from her Atlantic waterfront, as far as the Mississippi and up to Canada. Illinois was at one time regarded as part of Orange County, Va., whose modern residue contains Madison's lifetime home. It was also regarded as part of Massachusetts and Connecticut, whose westward extensions to the Mississippi were intersected by Virginia's extension to the northwest. And it was claimed by the State of New York, which bought it from Indians who did not own it. Quite a mess. Anyway that was what Maryland thought. Maryland stoutly averred that she would never ratify the Articles of Confederation unless these vacant western lands, secured from the British Crown by the blood and treasure of all, were to be considered as a common stock of the 13 States, to be parceled out by Congress into free and independent governments.

Madison did not like the attitude of Maryland, New Jersey, and other landless States, whose righteous outlook was tainted by the ambitions of big land speculators. But he recognized the justice of the demand they made, and the impossibility of disregarding it without imperiling the Union. So, as a Member of the Continental Congress, at the age of 29, he took the lead in a campaign of political persuasion and pressure, directed against the land claims of his own State, and finally brought about a cession of the western lands from Virginia to the Nation. Other States gave up their claims and the public domain came into existence—a Federal domain born in the birth pangs of the Nation.

Then, in the Constitutional Convention of 1787, eastern commercial interests attempted to deny political equality to the western Territories. They were to be kept as colonies or admitted to the Union in an inferior status. Otherwise, with the westward spread of population, the seaboard States might lose their control of the National Government. Madison led the fight for equality, and won it. New States were to be admitted to the Union on a par with the Original Thirteen.

In taking this stand, Madison was fortified by the fundamental article of his political faith—his confidence in a large Federal republic democratically organized and subject to checks and balances. The Constitution of 1787 was founded on the doctrine he laid down in convention, that when a republic of free men is federally organized—that is, when it consists of a union of states with a supreme federal government properly constructed—every enlargement of the republic makes it more stable and makes liberty more secure. That is true, he told the convention, because every enlargement of the country increases the diversity of economic and other interests. Federal organization leaves local matters to local control, while diversity of regional interests reduces the likelihood that any one interest or element will gain complete control of the General Government.

The framers of our Constitution were men of property, but they were not tories. Accepting Madison's thesis, they gave the United States a Constitution which, in the federal realm, entrusts the protection of property rights and human rights to the checks and balances of a democratic government. Inherent in Madison's concept of government was a unique incentive to territorial expansion, not of a colonial empire held together by tyrannical force or doomed to explosive disruption, but an empire of free men—the expansion of a self-governing federal republic which would grow at the same time in freedom and stability. It would be erroneous to say that recognition of this fact governed the westward expansion of the United States. Pressure of population, hunger for cheap land and a sense of destiny were enough to carry American sovereignty from sea to sea. But Madison's political prophecy proved true, and territorial expansion was aided to an extraordinary degree by the ease of political assimilation on a democratic basis.

Today, much of this is forgotten. Especially in the last 3 years, we have heard men saying that the United States should go back to first principles, that we should give up the Federal ownership of the public lands and turn them back to the States from which the Federal Government hungrily snatched them away. In other words, national forests and national parks, Federal grazing districts and watersheds, great river systems, tideland oil and uranium reserves, belong traditionally to the States (that is, to lumber companies, big stockmen, private power interests, oil, and mining companies) and are held in Federal ownership because of a lapse from pure and pristine State rights principles. The time of the lapse is left somewhat vague, but with an impression that Presidents Theodore and Franklin Roosevelt were the principal culprits.

That is quite a mental achievement, considering that the question was actually settled, in favor of Federal ownership, between 1776 and 1784. But, as I said, people are forgetful, and some of them began to forget long before they were aided by the modern art of brain washing.

In 1831, former Gov. Edward Coles, of the State of Illinois, wrote to Madison, whose private secretary he once had been, that an agitation was going on in some of the newer Western States for the transfer of the public lands from the Nation to the States. People were saying that State ownership was the traditional American policy. Governor Coles wanted Madison to give him an answer at length to this unfounded claim. Madison replied that age and infirmities—he was then 81—made it impossible to comply. However, he was willing to express his private view of the argument for State ownership:

"I have always considered the claim as so unfair and unjust; so contrary to the certain and notorious intentions of the parties to the case, and so directly in the teeth of the condition on which the lands were ceded to the Union, that if a technical title could be made out by the claimants it ought in conscience and in honor to be waived."

That certainly leaves no doubt that the father of the public domain looked on it as a Federal domain. However, one fact must be admitted which at the present moment may reduce the value of his testimony. Madison, alack and alas, was a creeping Socialist. Worse than that, he made Gov. Ninian Edwards his accomplice in a nefarious plot against the noble institution of free enterprise. Edwards had not yet moved to Illinois when Secretary of the Treasury Gallatin wrote him that President Madison was placing the public salt deposits of the Territory under his superintendence. The object of the Government, said Gallatin, was to reduce the price of salt. Under the old lease, he said, the Government had tried to achieve this by charging a very low rental and reserving a right to buy all salt at a fixed low price. Unfortunately, the contract price had been set so extremely low that the lessees felt no stimulus to supply the public demand, while the rental charged by the Government was so small that a low production would cover it. The result was that a shortage of salt sent the market price still higher, enabling the buyers of the Government salt to resell it at a huge profit. This infuriated the Illinois farmers who wanted cheap salt for curing their pork and beef.

Governor Edwards was directed to pursue a new policy, more practical, but alas, no less cruelly socialistic. He was to raise the rental of the salt springs, thus forcing the lessees into heavy production to pay for their lease. The contract price of salt was to be raised, both to encourage production and to prevent profiteering resales by the purchasers. Listen to the reasons given for this policy. Listen and weep:

"My reasons for proposing that it should still be fixed somewhat below the market price, are the prevention of monopoly, and the hope of a reduction of that market price, during the continuance of the lease."

Just think of that, outdealing the New Deal, offering competition to monopoly, way back in 1809. It would be possible to go on at length with the sad story of Madison as a creeping Socialist. One could tell how, in 1777, he signed a petition for compulsory limitation of tobacco acreage by the State of Virginia—regimenting the farmers, with (horror of horrors) an extra allowance for the poor. Then there was Madison's brazen advocacy of the welfare state.

This began with his assertion, in 1787, that protection of seamen was one of the recognized objects of tonnage taxes. He picked up that idea from England, whose ruler, George III, was already showing other symptoms of insanity. When this subject came before Congress, of which Madison was a member, in 1792, it was proposed to combine the tonnage tax, which fell solely on the shipowners, with a compulsory deduction from seamen's wages. A direct anticipation, you see, of the mixed contributory system of the Wagner Social Security Act. When the bill finally passed, early in the Presidency of John Adams, the tonnage tax was omitted. That threw the entire cost of sick relief, hospital construction and old-age support onto the payroll tax. It relieved the shipowners, except as wages went up to cover the tax, but left the country saddled with a maritime social security system and with socialized medicine.

Well, you can imagine what President Thomas Jefferson did to this socialistic scheme, when he entered office with the slogan, which, oddly enough, nobody has ever been able to locate in his writings, that the prime business of government is to do nothing about anything. Jefferson took care of it all right. He put a bill through Congress extending the payroll deduction system to the owners and crews of Mississippi River flatboats.

Then came the crowning touch by President Madison. In 1813 he approved a bill creating a Federal vaccination agent, a public officer whose duty was to procure and distribute the new Jenner smallpox vaccine throughout the United States. But enough of this. The American Medical Association has plenty to feel bad about without adding Presidents John Adams, Thomas Jefferson, and James Madison to its painfully long list of deviators from the true American spirit.

Let us, if we can, forgive and forget Madison's creeping socialism. We shall then see more clearly the link between his zeal for liberty and for westward expansion, a merger of turbulent ideas which stems more directly from his participation in the American Revolution than from his staid and proper private life. The United States has been throughout its history a disorderly country. It has been in general a free country. In the popular mind, disorder and freedom are closely linked and both of them are given a western locale. This doctrine of innocence by association can be carried too far. In the wild west movie, there is plenty of disorder, but nobody is really free except the bully, until the visiting cowboy plunks him and restores the reign of law. Nevertheless, even in the older Eastern States some of the most notable examples of disorder, in the early days, had justice and freedom as their motives. And with curious unanimity they originated in the western precincts of the States concerned.

Shays' rebellion—I don't suppose there's a representative of the Committee on Un-American Activities in this audience. * * * Still, I'll take no chances, Shays' rebellion, a wicked communistic revolt(!) against 40 percent interest on farm mortgages and imprisonment for debt, arose in the western part of Massachusetts.

Similarly, it was the mountaineers of western Pennsylvania who conducted our famous Whisky rebellion, an uprising against an excise tax and distillery charges which in combination (whisky being the only form of money in the community) were the equivalent of a $300 tax on a $600 corn crop.

To shift from spirits to spirituality, it was in the westerly portions of Virginia, which then included West Virginia and Kentucky, that the people rallied behind James Madison when he called on them to defeat the 1784 scheme for a State tax to support the teachers of religion.

Again, it was in the new State of Kentucky, and in the western counties of Virginia, that Jefferson and Madison found the majorities needed for their resolutions against the alien and sedition laws of 1798.

Madison's 1784 victory for freedom of religion was won within the orderly processes of legislation. Nevertheless, his famous memorial and remonstrance against the establishment of religion through taxation employed language which could only be called an incitement to forcible resistance if the tax should be imposed. The preservation of free government, he wrote, forbade any branch of it "to overleap the great barrier which defends the rights of the people. The rulers who are guilty of such an encroachment * * * are tyrants. The people who submit to it * * * are slaves." As if this were not enough, he piled up praise on the freemen of America who, not waiting for usurped power to strengthen itself by exercise, fought the War of the Revolution against a three-penny tax on tea. Prudent jealousy for the preservation of liberty, he told his readers, was the first duty of citizens.

As a believer in public order, Madison was no supporter of armed uprisings against a democratic government. But when the Federalists in Congress made the Whisky Rebellion an excuse to assail the political liberties of American citizens, he was in the forefront of their defense. In the House of Representatives, a resolution was offered to censure the new and Radical Democratic Societies as alleged abettors of the revolt. Madison offered to join in denouncing those who actually took part in the uprising. But, said he, the Democratic Societies took no part in it. Their members were not in the public service. This was a proposal to censure private citizens for their political opinions. It was a sound principle, said Madison (and I am quoting), "that an action innocent in the eyes of the law could not be made the object of censure to a legislative body. * * * Opinions are not the objects of legislation."

The holding of opinions, Madison asserted, was one of the reserved rights of the people—that is, one of the unspecified rights and powers reserved to the people by the 9th and 10th amendments. The right to express opinions was specifically guaranteed by the first amendment. Start invading the reserved rights, he warned, and the censure would soon extend to freedom of speech and of the press. Furthermore, what would this proposed congressional resolution do to the people condemned by it? I quote his next remark:

"It is in vain to say that this indiscriminate censure is no punishment. * * * Is not this proposition, if voted, a bill of attainder?"

No, ladies and gentlemen, those words were not uttered by some recklessly courageous Congressman, during the last 10 years of governmental witch hunts and character assassination. They were not put forth in some judicial argument against the unconstitutional bills of attainder that have been flowing of late in a steady stream from Congress, congressional committees, and the executive branch of government. They were spoken in the year 1794, by the author if the American Bill of Rights, and Madison followed them with this fundamental rule:

"If we advert to the nature of republican government, we shall find that the censorial power is in the people over the government, and not in the government over the people."

If that is an axiom of American Government, it is one which this country now honors only in the breach. How was it in 1794? Madison won his fight against that resolution of censure, but it would be too much to say that he won it by converting the repressive majority which then ruled Congress. Confronted with his statement of principle, a number of Federalists suddenly realized that they were censuring too many people back home who had the right to vote. So they joined with the opponents, first in limiting the censure to four counties in Pennsylvania, and then subjecting the remnant of the motion to overwhelming defeat.

A victory so won is not to be belittled. On the contrary, it gives point to one of Madison's cardinal beliefs, not fully put into words by him, but distinctly present in what he said and did. The best defense of civil liberties, he believed, lay in general safeguards against autocratic government. Ardently devoted to freedom of religion, speech, and press, he saw little chance of maintaining these liberties intact against laws passed during great gusts of popular passion. Yet by solemn written affirmation, he remarked in 1788, declarations of liberties would gradually become axioms of free government, with the independent courts as their special champions. That is, the courts would stand up for oppressed or threatened minorities. The majority of the people, as long as they chose their own rulers and kept their senses, could protect themselves against the arbitrary acts of government. Preservation of civil rights would preserve civil liberties, and be thereby preserved.

This attitude of mingled skepticism and faith goes far to explain why Madison made no effort to incorporate a bill of rights in the original Constitution, yet drafted one willingly—the first 10 amendments—in response to popular demand. That his skepticism was justified has been demonstrated in our two great American brainstorms—the one that produced the Alien and Sedition Acts of 1798, and the one that followed the Second World War.

In the first of these emotional upheavals, the French Revolution was equated with Jeffersonian democracy in a vain endeavor to perpetuate the rule of the Federalist Party. In the second, the menace of international communism swept us into panic, partly genuine, partly simulated, over the handful of impotent neurotics who make up the American Communist Party—a panic shrewdly utilized for political though not for strictly partisan advantage. Yet we are recovering, and we are recovering the more surely because our fundamental right as citizens—the right to choose our governors in fair and free elections—is embedded in the very fabric of government.

Civil liberties must be protected in the minds and hearts of men, as well as in constitutional guaranties. But the empire of free men can be sure of freedom only as long as the people control their governors.

When the citizens of Illinois Territory sent their appeal to Congress for genuine self-government, they were acting for future generations of Americans as well as for themselves. When the name of President Madison was given to Madison County, Ill., that action, as far as this area was concerned, amounted to a second ratification of the Constitution and all the rights and liberties embodied in it. The commemoration today, of that 1812 event, turns the lamp of liberty toward the future.

REMARKS OF BURTON C. BERNARD OF GRANITE CITY, ILL., ON BEHALF OF THE MADISON COUNTY BAR ASSOCIATION IN PRESENTING TO THE PEOPLE A PLAQUE COMMEMORATING JAMES MADISON, FATHER OF THE CONSTITUTION AND FOURTH PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, AT THE COURTHOUSE, EDWARDSVILLE, ILL., AT 3:30 P. M. SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1955

The Madison County Bar Association is happy and gratified to participate in this commemorating of James Madison on the occasion of the 143d anniversary of the creation of Madison County.

James Madison and his contemporaries faced community problems which were just as challenging to them as the problems of our own day are to us. We will profit by emulating the high purpose and dedication to the cause of liberty and good government which marked the lives of our early leaders.

The participation of the community in these ceremonies serves to counteract the influence of cynicism, defeatism, and apathy—those deadly enemies of liberty and good government. To recall now the faith of Madison in the ability of the people to govern themselves fairly and effectively; the struggle of Madison to improve the caliber of Government; and the unswerving dedication of Madison to the rights of the individual—these recollections will help to sustain our faith in and impel our implementation of the underlying principles of our Government. Our meeting here places in proper perspective those who may say that the people of Madison County, or of this Nation, no longer believe in those principles.

It is appropriate that we meet at our county courthouse to pay tribute to James Madison. Here, the people have continuous contact with their government; here, courts of justice function; and here, important county officials confront the responsibilities of their offices. And so, here, past our time, will remain the plaque which is now presented to the people of Madison County.

[Unveiling:] Engraved on the plaque under the likeness of James Madison are these words:

"James Madison. He was a member of the Virginia Legislature, Continental Congress, Federal Constitutional Convention, and the United States Congress. He later served as Secretary of State and fourth President of the United States.

"Forty years a public servant, he helped to lead the Nation through its formative years, and is known as the Father of the Constitution. He fought for religious liberty, the Bill of Rights and good government.

"He appointed as first Governor of the Illinois Territory, Ninian Edwards, of Kentucky, for whom Edwardsville is named. Madison County, named for President Madison, was created on September 14, 1812.

"Presented to the people by the lawyers of Madison County acting through the Madison County Bar Association.

"September 1955."

As we view this plaque, let us enshrine upon our minds and hearts these words of John Ruskin:

"Therefore, when we build let us think that we build forever. Let it not be for present delight nor for present use alone. Let it be such work as our descendants will thank us for and let us think as we lay stone on stone that a time will come when these stones will be held sacred because our hands have touched them and that men will say as they look upon the labor and the wrought substance of them, 'See, this our fathers did for us.'"

ACCEPTANCE REMARKS BY IRVING DILLIARD, COLLINSVILLE, PAST PRESIDENT, ILLINOIS STATE HISTORICAL SOCIETY, DIRECTOR OF MADISON COUNTY HISTORICAL SOCIETY, AND EDITOR OF THE EDITORIAL PAGE OF THE ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH

Mr. Brant, Mr. Monroe, Mr. Bernard, members of the Madison County Bar Association, the Madison County Historical Society, members of other civic and historical groups, fellow citizens, as one of the 200,000 residents of Madison County I humbly but proudly accept for the people of our county this memorial to James Madison, for permanent preservation and display at this seat of our intimate local government. I would have gladly come here as a spectator to see the presentation that the Madison County Bar Association has so wisely arranged and to congratulate its members upon it. I would have been content to listen to my friend over nearly a quarter century, Irving Brant, the one most appropriate speaker among the 160 million Americans for this occasion. In all the United States no one—and this does not exclude Dolley Madison—has ever lived from day to day with our fourth President as has the historian, and biographer, and student of government who so graciously has come out from Washington to be with us today in the county Illinois named for James Madison. To have heard from Irving Brant is almost to have heard from the Father of the Constitution himself.

The least each of us can be is appreciative of the lives and works of the great men who have built the Nation we enjoy. One of the very greatest of these builders was the Virginian who became Thomas Jefferson's Secretary of State in whose administration the vast Louisiana Territory was purchased fram France. Under this same Secretary of State Madison, two young captains, Lewis and Clark, set out into the danger-fraught wilderness of the Northwest and pushed on 150 years ago to the Pacific Ocean—all from a winter campsite and recruiting and provisioning ground on the bank of the Mississippi, in this very county, at the point where old Wood River joined the Father of Waters. Thanks to public-spirited citizens and officials, some of whom are with us here today, that historic spot will soon be commemorated in an Illinois State Park in Madison County opposite the wonder of the Missouri-Mississippi confluence which men have wanted to look upon since the great river valley was first inhabited.

But Madison did a far greater service to this country than to participate in the purchase of Louisiana Territory, epochal as that act of statesmanship was. He more than anyone else gave us the words of the first amendment to the Constitution—the first article of the Bill of Rights with its guaranties of freedom of religion, speech, press, and assembly. One way or another we, here at this gathering and at this very hour, are exercising all these liberties. Above all else Madison saw the necessity for keeping church and state separate. Indeed, he espoused the idea so firmly and so persuasively that it became known as Mr. Madison's Principle. If we are as wise as he and if we do our work a fraction as well as he did his, we will make sure that the wall of separation remains strong and high for the protection of members of whatever faiths. For only where no church enjoys special advantages can religion be wholly free and churches prosper as they have in the United States. Let us at this moment thank Madison and the other architects of our religious freedom that a Catholic priest could open this ceremony and that a Protestant clergyman soon will close it. Let us and our children and our children's children keep it ever thus in Madison County in the United States of America.

And now I ask that each and everyone present join in accepting this gift that makes Madison County richer, more understanding, more appreciative of its honored name and our priceless heritage.

JAMES O. MONROE, Jr.,
Madison County Bar Association, Collinsville, Ill.:

The purpose of this ceremony I heartily applaud, as must any person who cares at all deeply about the theory and practice of democracy. I think no man has made a greater, more permanent contribution to democratic theory than did James Madison; few have contributed more, through personal example, to the practice of democracy; and it is my sincere hope that the plaque you unveil there will stimulate many people to renew their acquaintance with James Madison's contribution to the Federalist Papers. The message of these papers to us of today is quite as urgent, and as wise, as it was in the late 18th century, for the problem it deals with—namely, the proper balance of freedom and authority in effective government—is, I suspect, a permanent one.

It gives me immense pleasure, therefore, to send to all of you assembled there my heartiest congratulations.

ADLAI E. STEVENSON.

JAMES MONROE, Jr.,
Collinsville, Ill.:

To have been named in honor of the father of the Constitution is a distinction that Madison County rightfully deserves. The free exercise of religion clause in the Constitution established him as an historic symbol of freedom-loving people everywhere. On behalf of the people of Illinois I want to congratulate the Madison County Bar Association for honoring its county's namesake on the 143d anniversary of its founding.

WILLIAM G. STRATTON,
Governor.

JAMES O. MONROE, Jr.,
Collinsville, Ill.:

I deeply regret that I cannot be with you in person for the ceremonies to honor James Madison, after whom your fine county was named, and to hear my friend, Irving Brant, deliver what I know will be a magnificent address. Madison has been a much-neglected figure in American history. More than any man, he drafted our Federal Constitution and was instrumental in getting it adopted by the States. Then he led the battle for the Bill of Rights and the first 10 amendments of the Constitution, the full meaning of which is not fully appreciated by some Americans even at this very day. He was a good Secretary of State and President; in all a splendid American, whose close association with Jefferson was one of the most fruitful partnerships in American history. All credit to you for seeing Madison's greatness and moving to honor it. Please give my best regards to the distinguished orator of the day, Irving Brant, the great authority on Madison.

PAUL H. DOUGLAS,
United States Senate.

JAMES MONROE, Jr.,
President Madison County Bar Association, Collinsville, Ill.:

Sorry that previous committee assignments prevent me from attending dedication ceremony commemorating creation of Madison County. I want to congratulate Madison County Bar Association in sponsoring this event, recognizing the historic dedication of the great county of Madison which provided most of the early leaders in the government of the old Territory and the State of Illinois.

MELVIN PRICE,
Member of Congress.

SUPREME COURT OF ILLINOIS,
Taylorville, Ill., September 8, 1955.

To the MADISON COUNTY BAR ASSOCIATION,
Care James O. Monroe, Jr.,
Collinsville, Ill.

GENTLEMEN: This is to acknowledge with thanks your kind invitation to attend the James Madison ceremonies this coming Sunday.

I regret very much that I will be unable to attend, because of my necessary presence in Springfield in preparation for the convening of the supreme court the following day.

Allow me, however, to congratulate the lawyers of the Madison County Bar for sponsoring this event. James Madison was in a large way responsible for the Bill of Rights, and the Bill of Rights is, without doubt, the crowning feature of American constitutional law.

Lawyers, above all, should keep these things in mind, and your association is a most appropriate group to lead any meeting commemorating Madison and the principles of constitutional freedom.

With best regards to your association and to my many friends among the lawyers of Madison County, I remain,

Sincerely,

HARRY B. HERSHEY,
Chief Justice.

JAMES O. MONROE, Jr.,
Collinsville, Ill.:

The Madison County Bar Association deserves the highest commendation and the wholehearted gratitude of all thoughtful citizens for this program of rededication to those principles to which James Madison dedicated the greater part of his life.

Madison lived in an era not dissimilar to ours—an era of wars and threats of war, of deprivation of liberty, of turbulence. He fought these evils; it is our duty now to protect the liberties we gained from this struggle against those who consciously or unconsciously under the guise of patriotism would undermine and destroy them.

We must go about this calmly, in a rational manner, in full possession of our best commonsense and good judgment. We must refrain from actions nurtured in emotion or hypothesis. Hysteria is our greatest enemy.

Only by proceeding in the typically American way, in an orderly fashion and with proper respect for the rights of all citizens can we succeed in this struggle to preserve our priceless heritage and remain true to the ideals of Madison and the other great men of his day to whom we owe our existence as a constitutional democracy.

THOMAS C. HENNINGS, Jr.,
United States Senate.

The Chairman's Progress Report on Activities of the Select Committee on Small Business of the House of Representatives

---

OF
HON. WRIGHT PATMAN
OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am presenting at this time the chairman's progress report on the activities of the Select Committee on Small Business of the House of Representatives. That committee was created in the 84th Congress by House Resolution 114, agreed to on January 27, 1955.

INTRODUCTION—ECONOMIC HEALTH OF SMALL BUSINESS

It is believed that this report on the activities of our committee will be more understandable when considered in the light of the facts regarding the present state of the economic health of small business. Therefore I shall introduce my report on our activities by pointing to a number of the indicators of the health of small business.

The past few years have seen unprecedented volumes of new investment in business enterprise. Furthermore, since a somewhat tentative business downturn in mid-1954, there has been a continuously increasing output of goods and services, and general business prosperity, with corporate profits and stock prices setting alltime records in the first half of the present year.

Perhaps the most remarkable feature of this business boom is that it has been accompanied by increasing rates of small business failures and by a general worsening of the economic position of the small-business sectors of the economy.

THE PACE OF ECONOMIC GROWTH

Measured in 1955 dollars, the gross national product—that is, the value of goods and services produced in the Nation—grew from $295.8 billion in 1948 to $357.5 billion in 1952, an average annual growth of 5.2 percent. By 1955, the economy was turning out $387.2 billion of total annual product, an average annual increase of 2.8 percent over 1952.

At the same time, the Nation's population has also been growing—from 147 million in 1948, our population had increased to 167 million by March of 1956.

With the growth in population and general business it would be normal to expect the number of businesses to grow in rough proportion. But this has been far from the case. The business birth rate has fallen off while the death rate has increased.

Omitting the rapid and abnormally large growth of the business population in the years immediately following World War II, we may note that from 1948 to 1952, there was an average net increase in operating firms of 54,700 firms a year. The total number of firms in operation at the end of 1952 was 4,167,000.

During the past 3 years, however, net growth slowed down to an average of 28,300 a year.

In the manufacturing field, the field in which there has been the greatest volume of new investment and business expansion, there was actually a net loss of 19,000 firms during the past 3 years.

SMALL BUSINESS FAILURES ON THE RISE

Dun & Bradstreet reported 11,000 business failures last year—the highest number in any year since the early years of World War II, when business mortality was abnormally high as a result of war shortages, drafting of operators and key personnel of firms not essential to the war effort, and so forth.

Furthermore, the rate of small business failures has continued to rise during the first 6 months of this year—the period when big business profits and stock prices set all-time records. Comparing the past 6-month period with the same period in the previous 2 years, the total number of failures reported by Dun & Bradstreet is as follows:

Year (first 6 months):	Number of failures
1954	5,778
1955	5,626
1956	6,496

Dun & Bradstreet's failure rate, which is the number of failures per each 10,000 firms in operation, has increased from a rate of 5 in 1946 to a rate of 49 in the first half of the present year. These rates are shown as follows:

Business failures per 10,000 reporting firms

Year:	Rate
1946	5
1947	14
1948	20
1949	34
1950	34
1951	31
1952	29
1953	33
1954	42
1955	42
1956 (first 6 months)	49

THE PROFIT POSITION OF SMALL BUSINESS

Although no data exists for comparing the profitability of different sizes of firms in all fields of business enterprise, such information is available for profits of corporations classified in the manufacturing field. This field includes most of the giant corporations; and while they are classified as "manufacturers", many also engage in distribution, trade, and service.

In 1952, the profit rate of the smallest size group of corporations—those with less than one-quarter million dollars of assets—was 9.3 percent after taxes. This rate dropped to 6.8 percent in 1953; to 3.2 percent in 1954; and then recovered somewhat—to a rate of 5.5 percent—in the boom year of 1955. In other words, in 1954, the profit rate of the smallest size group had dropped by 66 percent from 1952, and last year, 1955, the profit rate of these companies was 41 percent below 1952.

On the other side of the coin, the profit rate of the corporate giants—those with more than $100 million of assets—has shown a remarkable increase. In 1952, their profit rate, after taxes, was 11.8 percent. This increased to 12.1 percent in 1953 and 1954, and to 14.6 percent in 1955. In other words, the profit rate of the giant corporations as a group, last year, was 24 percent higher than in 1952.

When the profit rates are averaged for the period 1953–55, it is found that the smallest firms—those with assets of less than one-quarter million dollars—have been 44 percent less profitable in the past 3 years, than they were in 1952. In contrast, the giants with over $100 million of assets have been 9.3 percent more profitable over the past 3 years than they were in 1952.

Similar comparisons are made for each available corporate size class in the table below. In order to take account of changes in investment, and changes in the number of firms in each size class, profits after taxes have been stated as a percentage of stockholders' investment—which is the amount of capital paid into the firm plus all profits in previous years which were not paid out in dividends.

Rates of profits on stockholders' investment—after taxes in manufacturing corporation by size of corporations

Asset size of corporations (in millions)	1952	1953	1954	1955	Average, 1953–55

SMALL BUSINESS' SHARE OF PRODUCTIVE FACILITIES

Since 1952 the relative position of the smallest-sized firms—those with less than one-fourth million dollars of assets—has worsened most markedly. Their proportion of all the assets owned by manufacturing corporations has dropped from 3.6 percent to 2.4 percent.

At the end of 1952 the 500 or so largest corporations—those with assets over $100 million—owned 51.5 percent of all the assets of all the manufacturing corporations in the country. By the end of 1955 the share of this size group had increased to 57.1 percent. If concentration of assets continues at this rate, which amounts to 1.9 percentage points a year, our Nation's entire manufacturing capacity will be in the hands of a relatively few $100 million—and bigger—corporations in a matter of 22 years.

DEFENSE CONTRACTS AND SUBSIDIES

One of the most portentous developments of recent years, bearing upon the future of small business, is the prodigious rate at which the United States economy is spending for research and development work. According to estimates of the National Science Foundation, the funds spent during the past 5 years on scientific and industrial research and development of all kinds have equaled the total funds spent for such purposes during the previous 60 years, or substantially the full span of the Nation's industrial and scientific history.

According to estimates prepared by the Department of Defense, the Federal Government is now supplying more than half of the funds spent for research and development in the Nation—Department of Defense, Secretary for Research and Development, Resources Division. According to the Federal budget for 1957 the Federal Government will supply $2,557,000,000 for these purposes in the current fiscal year.

Our principal concern here is with Federal funds supplied to private business concerns for research and development work of an industrial nature. The Department of Defense, which is the principal source of such funds, is currently disbursing between $1 billion and $1.5 billion per year for research and development pursuits in almost all fields. Such funds are awarded not merely for development of specific military items in which the Armed Forces are interested, but for both process and product developments in basic industrial fields such as metallurgy, chemistry, electronics, and so forth. It has long been a truism that military production contracts tend to follow the grants of research funds—in that those firms which make the developments on items in which the Armed Forces are more directly interested usually have the inside tract for receiving the contracts for producing those items. But what is perhaps of greater importance, the firms gaining the know-how with new products and new production techniques having commercial applicability naturally forge ahead in the commercial race. Furthermore, inquiries made by your Small Business Committee last summer brought out that the usual conditions under which the Department of Defense grants research funds to a private firm allow the firm making a patentable invention through the use of these funds to acquire the patent, and this is without any requirement that others be licensed to use the patent for commercial purposes.

The allocation of such vast funds for industrial research and development by the Department of Defense seemed a matter of sufficient importance, to several members of your Small Business Committee, to warrant a requirement that the Department of Defense make some periodic report on the amount of such funds being spent, with a like indication of the proportion allocated to small business.

Consequently, when a bill for extending the life of the Small Business Act was under consideration by the House Banking and Currency Committee during the 1st session of the 84th Congress, I made, on behalf of these Members, a recommendation that the new law require the Department of Defense to make a monthly report to Congress on this subject. This recommendation was accepted; and the information is now available for the period beginning July 1, 1955.

From July 1, 1955, through May 31, 1956, the Department of Defense awarded contracts to private firms committing $1,728,372,000 of Federal funds for research and development uses. Of this total only 5.9 percent was committed to firms having less than 500 employees.

Since the significance of the Department of Defense's subsidy for industrial research has been pointed out, along with the fact that 95 percent of these funds are going to a relatively few big corporations, several Members of the House have expressed grave concern, and have requested that the Small Business Committee make a more detailed investigation and study to determine what feasible steps should be taken to allow small business to share in the research and development work. Your Small Business Committee has this matter under study, and has dispatched to the Department of Defense questionnaires which are designed to throw more light on the distribution problem.

Contracts for defense supplies and facilities continue to account for a substantial share of the manufacturing and construction activities of the country. In the fiscal year just ended the Department of Defense awarded contracts for supplies, services, and construction totaling between $14 and $15 billion. Of the total for the first 11 months of the fiscal year—$13.4 billion—83 percent was awarded to contractors selected on the basis of negotiation; or conversely, only 17 percent was awarded on the basis of advertised competitive bid.

It is manifest that an inequitable distribution of such a huge volume of business as between large and small competitors would have, or is having, a decided impact upon the competitive structure of American industry. Congress has long been keenly aware of the consequences of an inequitable distribution, as well as the tendency for the lion's share of this business to find its way to bigger competitors; in no less than three separate statutes Congress has declared the national policy to be that small business shall have a fair proportion of such business.

Administrative efforts to carry out this policy have for the most part consisted of a joint determination, or as it is more recently called, a joint set-aside program, whereby representatives of the SBA obtain the military procurement office's agreement to earmark certain specific contract procurements for award on the basis of competition limited to small firms. This program involves a somewhat novel approach to diffusion of administrative responsibility, the efficacy of which is yet to be demonstrated.

The controlling statutes would seem to place responsibility directly with the Department of Defense for carrying out the declared national policy that small business shall have a fair proportion of the defense contracts. But in the absence of both targets and systematic procedure for carrying out the policy, within the Department of Defense, the SBA maintains a representative in each of a large number of military procurement offices over the country, whose representative's job it is to screen proposed procurements and recommend to the military procurement officer in charge that certain ones be earmarked for small business. Small business is taken to be a firm with 500 employees or less without respect to what line of work it may be engaged in or what its competitive position within its industry may be.

In the past 3 fiscal years, since the set-aside program has been in operation, contracts earmarked for small business amounted to $1,042,520,489, or 2 percent of the value of all the military contracts awarded in the period. In the same period, the contracts earmarked for small business and actually awarded to small business amounted to $706,091,117, which was 1.4 percent of the military contracts awarded in this period.

It is not known what portion of the contracts earmarked for small business would inevitably have gone to small business anyway, as for example contracts for many types of garments or for blueprints, where there is no firm having as many as 500 employees. In any case, the contracts which went to small business as a result of the set-aside program amounted to only a small fraction of the contracts which small business managed to obtain with the set-aside assistance. In the 3 fiscal years mentioned small business received 22.4 percent of the value of all military contracts awarded, with or without set-aside assistance.

Despite the set-aside program and other efforts by SBA and the Department of Defense to give small business an equitable opportunity to compete, the lion's share of the defense contracts continues to be placed with a few giant corporations. Moreover, there is some evidence of a recent tendency for the defense business to become more concentrated.

From June 1950 through June 1953, 63.6 percent of the value of all the defense contracts awarded were placed with the 100 largest contract holders. During the subsequent 18 months—July 1953 through December 1954—the latest period for which a report is available, 68.8 percent of the value of the contracts went to the 100 largest contract holders.

Beyond an occasional report on the 100 largest contractors, the Department of Defense makes public no meaningful report on the question how its contracts are distributed as between small firms and large firms, and appears to have no such report for its own information.

The Small Business Act of 1953 seems clearly to contemplate that the national policy will be concerned about the small competitors in each of the various industries. But the Administrator's decision to define small business as a firm with less than 500 employees, irrespective of industry, makes the national policy one which in theory is concerned about the small competitors in some industries and not those in others. For example, the policy would not be concerned with how the defense contracts may be distributed within the motor-vehicle industry, since even the smallest truckmaker in this industry has well over 500 employees. In practice moreover, since the Department lumps its data for all industries indiscriminately, the 500-employee definition results in a national policy which is concerned about the smaller competitors in no industry.

The percentage of the value of a fiscal year's contracts going to small business has ranged from 17 percent to 25 percent during the past 5 fiscal years. Such year-to-year variation may indicate, in part, that a better or a poorer job is being done to bring small business into the picture. Moreover, the indications on this question may be completely obscured by the addition or subtraction of a few more or less huge long-term contracts awarded for such items as aircraft, tanks, or ships. Such additions or subtractions may materially change the small business percentage in any fisal year, irrespective of whether there is any real change in the small business share of such contracts as firms with less than 500 employees might actually perform.

The Department of Defense periodically treats the public to a statistic on what has been called the amount of contracts which are suitable for award to small business, but here again the statistics raise more questions than they answer. The suitable contracts consist, in the first instance, of contracts for items for which the contracting officer happens to know of a small business source but from these there are then subtracted, first, such suitable contracts which were awarded to big firms, in order to maintain such firms in the mobilization base; and, second, such suitable contracts which were awarded to big firms in an emergency situation requiring schedules that cannot be met by a small business firm. In Department of Defense procurement practices emergency situations are more the rule than the exception. For example, according to a recent study made by the House Armed Services Committee 94 percent of the value of the nonconstruction contracts has been awarded, not according to the general policy requiring advertising for competitive bids, but under an exceptional provision of the law applicable to a period of national emergency. Report to Hon. CARL VINSON, chairman, House Committee on Armed Services, from chairman, Subcommittee for Special Investigations, on use of section 2 (c) (1) through (17), Armed Services Procurement Act, 1947, period January 1, 1953, to June 30, 1955, United States House of Representatives, 84th Congress, 1st session, under the authority of House Resolution 112.

The most that can be said of the Department's statistics on contracts suitable for small business is that they show that certainly small business has not received more than 67.8 percent of its fair proportion during the past 3 years. In short, the contracts awarded small business in this period amounted to 67.8 percent of the amount which the Department reported to be suitable—or which it has more recently called the small business potential.

THE CREDIT SQUEEZE

In April of this year, the Federal Reserve Board announced a hike in the discount rate—the Board's fifth such action to squeeze commercial bank credit since April 1955. These credit restrictions, far from being general and undiscriminating, turned out to be highly selective and discriminatory against small borrowers.

Not only do small firms depend almost exclusively on commercial banks as a source of credit, having little practical access to the stock market, commercial paper, the insurance companies, and other sources available to big firms, but a general result of squeezing commercial bank credit is that the banks cut off their smaller borrowers and use their limited credit supply to serve their big borrowers.

The preferential treatment which big firms receive in bidding for a limited credit supply is of course no new phenomenon. As an indication of the extent to which small firms have recently been squeezed out of the credit picture, however, attention may be given to a report of the Standard Factors Corp. of New York, giving the results of its survey of some 127 banks and 727 manufacturing concerns in 33 industries.

This survey found that in April 1955, before the first boost in the discount rate, 89 percent of the companies surveyed were regular borrowers from the commercial banks. Just 1 year and 5 rate increases later, only 53 percent had bank lines of credit. Furthermore, it was the smaller firms that had been cut off, and the smaller the firms the greater the proportion among them that had been cut off.

For example, in the smallest size class of firms—those with a net worth between $5,000 and $25,000—53 percent of the firms had a line of credit with their local banks in March of 1955; but in March of 1956, only 18 percent of these firms had a line of credit. At the other end of the size scale—firms with a net worth of more than $2,500,000—the effects of the credit squeeze were not visible. In March 1955, 99 percent of the firms of this size had a line of bank credit; and in March of 1956, 99 percent still had a line of bank credit. The direct relationship between size of firm and ability to get bank credit is manifest in the table below:

Net worth of companies	Percent of companies with bank lines March—
	1955	1956
$5,000 to $25,000	53	18
$25,000 to $100,000	82	44
$100,000 to $500,000	94	79
$500,000 to $1,000,000	99	98
$1,000,000 to $2,500,000	99	98
Over $2,500,000	99	99

The results of the Standard Factors report are entirely in accord with the impressions which this Committee has gained from a flood of letters from small-business people—except that there are two additional features to the problem.

First, small firms need increased credit—not less credit—to carry inventories and work in process—as a result of the almost continuous increases in the prices of products and materials coming from the big-business sectors of the economy.

Second, small firms, like big firms, use their credit lines with commercial banks to discount bills, carry inventory for processing or for sale, or to cover payrolls and other current operating payments until payments are forthcoming from sales.

Such current, or short-term, working capital is, of course, all that commercial banks are theoretically intended to supply—and about all they are, in practice, suited to supply. But in truth, small firms normally must, and do, make use of commercial-bank credit for their longer-term plant and equipment capital—for the lack of adequate sources of genuine long-term credit.

When small borrowers turn to commercial finance companies to replace their lost bank credit, they find that the finance companies—which, by and large, depend on bank lines of credit—are themselves squeezed. Consequently, only the very large commercial finance companies, those which are independent of the banking system for credit, can even begin to meet the demand for funds.

CREDIT ROLE OF SBA

That the present banking system and organization of the capital markets leaves small-business credit starved has long been recognized. This recognition gives the Small Business Administration one of its principal reasons for being. It was created to make sound loans to small business wherever private sources proved inadequate to small-business needs.

The SBA has promulgated definitions of "small business," for loan purposes, which are quite narrow. Nevertheless, according to these definitions an estimated 3½ million firms are potentially eligible for small-business loans. These 3½ million firms account for somewhere between one-third and one-half of total volume of nonagricultural business done in the United States.

In June 1955, when the Small Business Committee of the House investigated, SBA had been receiving inquiries about loans from small-business people at the rate of 11,000 per month. Since that time small businesses' needs for loans have been greatly increased, as a result of price increases and the successive squeezes on commercial bank credit.

It has been SBA's policy, however, to discourage small-business people from filing formal applications. SBA instructs its field offices to discourage the filing of an application unless the field office thinks the loan is going to be approved. From past experience, moreover, the field offices have learned that only a few applications with gold-plated security will be approved.

In 3 fiscal years—1954 through 1956—SBA accepted only 9,688 applications. Of these 2,950 were approved, not counting some that were approved and subsequently canceled or withdrawn.

SBA has made disbursements on only 2,220 of these.

The applications approved were in the amount of $136 million, including amounts to be lent by the local banks in bank participation.

SBA's share of the total loan commitment was $113 million, including $39 million of contingent commitments on deferred participation loans. Deferred participation loans are those on which the bank makes the entire loan, but has the option of calling on SBA to make good a certain share of the loan.

In the 3 fiscal years, SBA had actually disbursed only $52.6 million, of which $10.5 million had been repaid.

Some perspective may be given to this $52.6 million lent to United States small business during the past 3 fiscal years, by considering the organization and operations of 3 other lending organizations in which the United States Government participates.

The Export-Import Bank, financed wholly by the United States Government, makes loans to private importers and exporters. Principally, it is for the benefit of United States big business, in financing their exports. The bank is authorized to have a capital stock of $1 billion and may borrow from the United States Treasury up to $5 billion at any time. The bank is authorized to have outstanding loans and guaranties up to $5 billion.

In the 3 fiscal years—1954 through 1956—the Export-Import Bank authorized 325 credits, totaling $1.3 billion. In this period it actually disbursed over $1 billion.

In other words, the Export-Import Bank disbursed in the 3 fiscal years approximately 20 times as much, principally to finance big business exports to foreign countries, as the SBA lent to small-business people in the United States.

The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, called the World Bank, finances the projects of foreign governments and projects guaranteed by foreign governments. The United States Government has subscribed $3.175 billion to the bank. Our large United States big business profits from the bank's operations. It is big businesses who construct these foreign projects, supply the machinery and equipment for the projects, and profit in export trade from the dollar exchange made available by the bank.

In the 3 fiscal years 1954 through 1956, the World Bank authorized 72 loans, in the total amount of $1.192 billion and it actually disbursed $860.4 million.

In other words, the World Bank disbursed to foreign governments and foreign companies more than 16 times as much as the Small Business Administration disbursed to small business firms in the United States.

In addition, we now have a new subsidiary of the World Bank known as the International Finance Corporation, which is for the purpose of making loans to foreign projects without the guaranties of foreign governments. This new organization was provided for in Public Law 350 (84th Cong., 1st sess., approved August 11, 1955). The IFC is authorized to have a loan limit of $100 million, of which the United States has put up $35 million. The IFC has just now been organized, and is ready to do business. Here again we have another organization to make loans abroad, principally for the benefit of foreign companies and for the benefit of big business in the United States who will supply most of the plants and equipment that are to be put up abroad.

PRICE DISCRIMINATIONS ARE DESTROYING SMALL BUSINESS

During October and November 1955, the House Small Business Committee held extensive hearings dealing with the practice of price discrimination, the Robinson-Patman Act, and related matters. Scores of witnesses appeared. The record of those hearings covers more than 1,000 printed pages. Representatives of large groups of small-business concerns appeared and testified. They complained that price discrimination practices of big business concerns were destroying small-business concerns wholesale. They appealed for a stronger law against price discrimination and asked that the Robinson-Patman Act be amended through the enactment of H. R. 11, which they had come to know as the "equality of opportunity bill."

Subsequently, during the period April 18–26, inclusive, 1956, the Antitrust Subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, House of Representatives, held extensive hearings dealing with the practice of price discrimination and the need for the amendment to the Robinson-Patman Act as was provided for in H. R. 11, the equality-of-opportunity bill. Again representatives of large groups of small-business concerns appeared and asked for the enactment of that bill. During the course of those hearings, Administrator Wendell Barnes of the Small Business Administration appeared and testified in opposition to H. R. 11. He did that despite the fact that representatives of small business had asked for its passage to provide them with additional protection against monopolistic and destructive price discrimination practices of big business.

In the statement of his reasons for his opposition, Mr. Barnes pointed to the fact that Mr. Weeks, the Secretary of Commerce, had opposed the bill, and that the Federal Trade Commission and the Department of Justice also had opposed the bill. He stated he was guided by the opinions of the representatives of those agencies. To that statement, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary responded:

I know, but we set up the Small Business Administration primarily to feel the pulse of small business all over the country, and the pulsation of small business all over the country might reflect entirely different views than the enforcement views of the Federal Trade Commission and/or the Department of Justice. (P. 258 of the record of the hearings before the Antitrust Subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary, April 20, 1956.)

When Mr. Barnes of the SBA persisted in his opposition to H. R. 11, he was questioned closely in an effort to ascertain whether he was reflecting views of small business concerns. The record on that point is quoted as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Did you get any correspondence or were any views presented to you from the small retail organizations which indicate a disposition to oppose H. R. 11?

Mr. BARNES. I do not think so.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an anomaly here that I sort of cannot understand.

Yours is a Small Business Administration, and all the small-business associations, from your own statement, have indicated that they want H. R. 11 passed.

Now isn't there an inconsistency there? You are supposed to represent small business, small business wants this bill, and you say there should not be such a bill. (Pp. 258–259 of the record of the hearings before the Antitrust Subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary, April 20, 1956.)

Although the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives and the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate reported favorably on the equality of opportunity bill and recommended its passage, the opposition to it persisted. It failed of passage when on the last day of the session in the Senate, Senator BRICKER, of Ohio, objected to the taking up of the bill for consideration in the Senate.

ACTIVITIES OF THE COMMITTEE, ITS SUBCOMMITTEES AND ITS STAFF—SERVICES RENDERED IN THE HANDLING OF INQUIRIES AND COMPLAINTS

Small business concerns without knowledge of the organization of the Federal Government direct their inquiries and complaints either to their Representatives in the Congress or directly to the House Small Business Committee. During the 84th Congress the staff of the House Small Business Committee has received and handled literally thousands of such inquiries and complaints from small business concerns.

When small-business people come to see or write to the Members of the House about problems that are especially knotty and take a lot of time and work to get straightened out, our committee usually gets those problems. Those are problems for the most part where the small-business firm is being mistreated or has gotten snarled up in some procedure of the executive agencies, such as when a defense contract has gone haywire or a loan application has fouled up in a backlash of redtape. All of these cases require a great deal of staff time in conferences as well as in the handling of the correspondence.

Since the beginning of the 84th Congress the committee has received 663 requests and cases from 202 Members of the House about problems of small business. In each of those instances a small-business man was involved and needed help. The Small Business Committee responded by assisting the Member and the small-business concern in getting the needed help. In a great many of such instances the staff participated in conferences and investigations regarding actions by the agencies of the Government and in getting reports thereon to the Members for their use in advising their constituents. That service has been rendered to the Members on both sides of the aisle. Our staff is devoted to the cause of assisting all Members in dealing with small-business problems. As I have said, the inquiries, requests, and complaints handled by the staff of the Small Business Committee during the 84th Congress have numbered in the thousands, including those which have been referred to us by the Members. The total of the inquiries, requests, and complaints which have been handled during the 84th Congress, up to and including July 31, 1956, amounted to more than 15,000.

STUDY AND ANALYSIS OF PROPOSALS FOR LEGISLATION

The staff of the House Small Business Committee has devoted a great deal of time and effort in studying and analyzing the need for new legislation to help small business. In some instances the result of that effort has reflected itself in bills I introduced and fought for during this term of the Congress. In other instances members of the staff have worked with and assisted representatives of the legislative and standing committees in studying and analyzing proposals for legislation and in the drafting of some proposals. One example is the pooling provision which was included in the Small Business Administration Act of 1955. That pooling provision I think is one of the greatest provisions of that act. It provides for a group of small business concerns to pool their resources in the formation of a corporation to buy or produce raw materials used in their respective businesses. Also provided is the opportunity for corporations thus formed to secure loans from the Small Business Administration. The top limit of such loan would be $250,000, multiplied by the number of small business concerns which pooled their resources in the forming of the corporation to produce materials for the needs of their respective business. That was for the purpose of enabling small business concerns to assure themselves of their needed supplies in times of critical shortages. Other examples of instances where members of our staff assisted representatives of the legislative and standing committees in providing information for use in the consideration of proposed legislation which would affect small business are those involving the disposition of synthetic rubber manufacturing facilities and H. R. 8710, a bill which was introduced by Chairman Vinson of the Armed Services Committee providing for more competitive bidding in the procurement of supplies for the armed services.

An indication of the amount of time and effort required to even keep up with and give some study to bills which were introduced during the 84th Congress relating to or affecting in some way some small business may be gathered from a listing of some of those legislative proposals. A description of some of those are as follows:

(a) Bills to amend the Robinson-Patman Act:

The bills in which small business showed the greatest interest during the 84th Congress were bills to amend the Robinson-Patman Act, to correct the weakening of that act which has resulted from several court decisions beginning with the Supreme Court's decision in Standard Oil of Indiana against Federal Trade Commission.

A number of bills were introduced to correct this weakness; principally among these are the following:

H. R. 11, and a number of companion bills, including H. R. 1840.

(b) Tax bills:

A number of bills were introduced in the 84th Congress which would accomplish the following purposes:

First: Make the corporate form of business more attractive to small firms now under the partnership form of organization, so that such small businesses could enjoy the same advantage in accumulating retained business earnings at corporation rates; and Second. To reduce taxes on smaller corporations and provide in place of the now substantially flat rate on corporate incomes, a graduated, or progressive, rate similar to that applicable to individual income tax.

In the Congress the principal bills introduced were:

First. H. R. 9067.
Second. H. R. 9851.
Third. H. R. 10081.
Fourth. S. 3128.
Fifth. S. 3129.

(c) Antitrust bills:

There were several bills which recognized problems growing out of the new structure of business which has been emerging for a number of years. This is an organization under which a few giant corporations control the raw materials, processing, and manufacturing segments of industry, which a large number of very small-business firms serve as retail distributors for these corporations. Retail gasoline dealers and automobile dealers to illustrate the problem.

At least two bills were introduced which would tend to restrict suppliers' freedom for canceling dealer's franchises without good cause, and particularly, to restrict suppliers' freedom to coerce dealers to follow policies, or to deal only in the brands of merchandise dictated by the suppliers. These are: H. R. 8395, S. 3879.

As a result of the great wave of corporate mergers which have been taking place, with obvious rapid deterioration of the competitive enterpise system, a number of bills have been introduced to strengthen the antimerger law. These include the following:

First. H. R. 6748.
Second. H. R. 5948.
Third. H. R. 7229.
Fourth. H. R. 8332.
Fifth. H. R. 9424.

The most important of the antitrust laws from the immediate standpoint of small business is the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act. Perhaps the two most important sections are that restricting illegal monopolistic price discriminations, and that which prohibits exclusive dealing contracts and tie-in sales of such a nature which tie up entire markets and foreclose opportunity to small firms.

The Federal Trade Commission enforces the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act. At present this law has a loophole in it. After the Federal Trade Commission proves a violation and issues a cease-and-desist order, there is no time limit within which the violator may file an appeal in a Federal court. If the Federal Trade Commission wishes to force compliance with its order must petition a Federal court, and it must moreover prove that its order is being violated. In other words, the FTC must prove two violations, and the violator gets one free violation.

H. R. 11454, introduced by Congressman ROOSEVELT, would correct this problem by making Clayton Act orders automatically final unless the company on which the order is issued fails to file an appeal within 60 days.

H. R. 3659, introduced by Congressman CELLER, increased the maximum fine for criminal violations of the Sherman Act from $5,000 to $50,000. This bill was passed and signed by the President.

Another bill, which became law, S. 2127, extended the life of the Small Business Administration, and increased the maximum loan which the Small Business Administration is authorized to make to small business firms.

(d) Government procurement:

H. R. 8710, introduced by Congressman CARL VINSON, was designed to assist small business in obtaining a fair proportion of Government contracts. It would tighten the requirement of awarding Government contracts on the basis of advertised competitive bids, so that small business would have a better opportunity—during the past 3 years the Department of Defense has been awarding approximately 95 percent of the value of all contracts on the basis of negotiations. It would also authorize the Department of Defense to negotiate contracts with small business, by reason of the fact that contracts in question are suitable for small business.

STUDY OF THE PROPOSALS FOR DISPOSAL OF GOVERNMENT-OWNED SYNTHETIC RUBBER FACILITIES

Early last year the staff of the House Small Business Committee analyzed the proposals for selling the Government-owned synthetic rubber plants. That study led to the conclusion that the proposals did not meet the standards laid down in the Rubber Disposal Act of 1953, in that it would not create a free and competitive industry and that the sales contracts provided for in the plan did not provide assurance that small rubber fabricators would receive a fair share of available rubber supplies. On March 21, 1955, the staff prepared a report on the facts concerning the plans for the disposal of the plants, and I directed that a copy of that report be made available to each Member of the House, before it was necessary for the House to consider and vote on the question of whether the proposals should be approved or disapproved.

During the debate in the House on the proposals and as a result of the findings made in the report submitted by the staff of the House Small Business Committee, the big rubber and oil companies purchasing the rubber plants gave Members of Congress firm assurances that the small and independent fabricators would not be mistreated and that the price of synthetic rubber would not be advanced, if Congress should approve the plans as proposed.

After the plants were sold the price of natural rubber continued to rise. The price averaged better than 42 cents per pound during the last 9 months of 1955 and the price of synthetic rubber could have been raised to that level, but during that period of time the new owners of the former Government synthetic rubber plants held the price at 21 cents per pound. If they had raised the price of synthetic rubber up to the going price of natural rubber it would have meant the doubling of the price. On that basis the 1.6 billion pounds which they sold in the last 9 months of 1955 would have cost the consumers at least $337 million more. Several Members of the House have therefore expressed the view that the factfinding set out in the staff report from the House Small Business Committee was instrumental in saving the consumers of rubber in this country $337 million. I would hesitate to accept full credit for effecting such a result, but I am inclined to think we were in part responsible for that result.

I am also happy to report that to date there have been very few complaints that small rubber fabricators are finding it difficult to get supplies of synthetic rubber.

IRON AND STEEL SCRAP INDUSTRY

The staff of our committee has spent much time and effort in studying complaints which were received from semi-integrated steel companies and steel and iron foundries that they had been caught in a squeeze due to shortages and rising prices of scrap. It was pointed out that many of them are dependent wholly upon scrap in order to carry on operations, and that in instances in shortages and high prices of scrap, they are therefore in a much more difficult position than the large fully integrated steel companies which own or have ready access to plentiful supplies of ore.

When the staff of the House Small Business Committee initiated its consideration of this problem the price of No. 1 heavy melting scrap at Pittsburgh was up to $55 a ton. That compared with only $58.55 a ton for new basic pig iron. Two years earlier No. 1 heavy melting scrap was $30 a ton and basic pig iron was $56 a ton.

As the study of the problem progressed with the members of the staff holding conferences with members of the different segments of the industry, the situation which had been faced by the small semi-integrated steel companies greatly improved from their standpoint. Prices of scrap dropped substantially. Despite that drop in the prices a greater supply of scrap appeared to be available to the small buyers than there had been earlier. In view of the changed circumstances, I did not order that hearings be held dealing with that problem. However, it has been noted that during the first week of August, 1956, the price of No. 1 heavy melting steel scrap rose sharply—$11 per ton at Cleveland to $56 to $57, $9 per ton at Pittsburgh to $55 to $56, and $10 per ton at Youngstown to $59 to $60. It appears that those matters will call for further study on the part of our staff.

HEARINGS ON PRICE DISCRIMINATION, THE ROBINSON-PATMAN ACT, AND RELATED MATTERS

During October and November 1955, the committee held hearings on price discrimination, the Robinson-Patman Act, and related matters. Many complaints had been made to the effect that price-discrimination practices were rampant, particularly in the food industry. It had been reported that the Federal Trade Commission and the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice, which are charged with the duty of enforcing the Robinson-Patman Act against price discriminations, were slowing down in their work in that respect. Representatives of those two agencies had served on the Attorney General's National Committee To Study the Antitrust Laws and had participated in writing a report which had ridiculed the Robinson-Patman Act and had advocated its emasculation. The purpose of our hearings was to record the facts about such matters.

Our committee held extensive hearings and heard testimony from more than 50 witnesses, covering more than 1,200 printed pages of record.

The record shows that the practice of price discrimination is practiced widely. Testimony of several witnesses from the manufacturing-baking industry was received. The testimony was to the effect that price discriminations are destroying the small and independent manufacturers of bakery products and that the situation is developing into one of a monopoly in the hands of a few chain bakers and a few chainstore operators.

What was said about price discrimination corroborated what we have learned about it each time we have studied that practice—that is, it is a weapon of sellers who have some degree of monopoly power and that it is effectively employed only by those who have such power.

Also, notwithstanding the wealth of factual information which heretofore has been gathered by the Congress regarding the unwholesome character of the practice of price discrimination, a lobby was formed to present and disseminate arguments in favor of price discrimination and against the laws designed to curb that practice.

It was discovered that the arguments in favor of price discrimination are part and parcel of the cleverest piece of propaganda ever conceived. That propaganda is one of the instruments of the high-powered lobby which has been working against small business and the Robinson-Patman Act. It has enveloped almost every office in Washington. It has influenced the thinking in the Federal Trade Commission and the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice and the position of those agencies regarding price discrimination and their attitude toward the Robinson-Patman Act.

Therefore, it did not come as a surprise when representatives of those agencies came before the Congress in March of 1956 and opposed the strengthening of the laws against the monopolistic practice of price discrimination. In 1955 the head of the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice and the person, who was at that time, serving as the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, were members of the Attorney General's National Committee To Study the Antitrust Laws. As I have said, the report published by that Committee in March 1955 ridiculed the Federal antitrust laws which were designed to curb the monopolistic practice of price discrimination.

STUDY OF THE ANTITRUST LAWS AND THEIR ENFORCEMENT

The staff of the committee is continuously reviewing the record of the work of the Federal agencies charged with the duty of enforcing the antitrust laws. Particular attention has been given to the enforcement of those laws which directly affect small business. Out of those studies developed a staff report dated October 31, 1955, entitled "Statistics on Federal Antitrust Activity." A second staff report dealing with that subject was published January 2, 1956, entitled "Volume of Federal Trade Commission Antitrust Complaints." The latter report covered the record of the Federal Trade Commission in the handling of cases arising under the Clayton Antitrust Act over the period of 5½ years ending December 31, 1955. That report shows that for the last half of that period the Federal Trade Commission issued 59 new complaints charging violations of the Clayton Antitrust Act. In the first half of that period—covering a period of 33 months—the Federal Trade Commission issued 56 such complaints. However, the number of complaints did not tell the full story. The 56 complaints issued in the first half of the period were against 66 companies, the assets of which averaged $256,200,000 per company, while the 59 complaints issued in the last half of the 5½-year period ran against 60 companies with average assets of only $32,500,000. It was also found that during the last half of that period one small company was charged with violating the Clayton Antitrust Act, whose total assets were only $16,000. The company in question reported to the Small Business Committee that its total income from the sale of citrus fruits during the year 1954 was only $460. The disclosure of those facts has given rise to the question as to whether or not our Federal agencies have turned their big antitrust guns on small business and away from big business.

STUDY OF SUPPLY VERSUS DEMAND FOR PORTLAND CEMENT

When our committee began investigating the cement shortage last year, it was plain that there was a demand for a substantial expansion of cement capacity. Cement was generally short throughout the United States, and in many sections of the country there were acute shortages. Small distributors could not get cement and small contractors could not get enough cement to finish projects they had underway. The prospects were that those situations would worsen upon the enactment by the Congress of legislation providing for a vastly increased highway building program.

I called attention to this matter and sent questionnaires to cement users which called attention to the cement companies of unsecured demand.

Here again it may be coincidental that after this investigation was underway, there was a rapid increase in the cement companies' expansion programs. I suspect we may have helped make these companies aware of the need for expansion. At least several of the companies wrote to the committee telling us of their decisions to expand even before they announced it publicly.

THE STAFF HELD ROUNDTABLE CONFERENCES REGARDING PROBLEMS OF PARTICULAR INDUSTRIES

In certain instances when members of an industry brought to the staff of the committee a problem that needed consideration and when time and resources were not available to make an investigation, resort was made to the device of the roundtable conference. That was done in the hope that by bringing together persons who had responsibility for dealing with the problem, we would be able to discuss it with those directly concerned and, through an exchange of views, perhaps reach a conclusion that would facilitate an appropriate disposition of the matter. Some examples of such instances are those involving the manufacturing-baking industry, the importation of watch cases, the leasing of aircraft, and the importation of peanuts.

INVESTIGATIONS, STUDIES, AND OTHER ACTIVITIES OF THE VARIOUS SUBCOMMITTEES

A. Subcommittee No. 1, regulatory agencies:

Subcommittee No. 1 is composed of the Honorable JOE L. EVINS, of Tennessee, chairman, and the Honorable SIDNEY R. YATES, of Illinois, and the Honorable WILLIAM M. MCCULLOCH, of Ohio.

Earlier reports regarding the activities of this subcommittee pointed out that its goal is a careful study and investigation of the organization and procedures of the several independent Federal regulatory agencies. The duties of the agencies include the enforcement of trade and monopoly laws directly and vitally affecting small business. One allegation that the subcommittee has been looking into is that these regulatory agencies have lost their independence and have fallen under the influence and control of the executive branch and of the interests they are supposed to be regulating.

Extensive hearings, therefore, were held covering the organization, procedures, and operations of the Federal Trade Commission, the Federal Power Commission, the Federal Communications Commission, the Civil Aeronautics Board, and the Securities and Exchange Commission. Many witnesses have testified and the records of the printed hearings approximate 1,000 pages. The hearings were concluded on July 20, 1956, and a report dealing with those hearings of this subcommittee is being prepared.

B. Subcommittee No. 2, Small Business Administration and problems related to procurement, loans, and disposal:

This subcommittee is composed of the Honorable ABRAHAM J. MULTER, of New York, as chairman, and the Honorable JOE L. EVINS, of Tennessee, and the Honorable R. WALTER RIEHLMAN, of New York.

The Small Business Act of 1953 expired June 30, 1955. Therefore, when this subcommittee was established in January 1955, its first order of business was to appraise the operations of the Small Business Administration and to determine whether there was a substantial need for continuing this agency. Consequently, during the first few months of its existence the subcommittee devoted a substantial amount of time commencing during March 1955 in holding hearings, studying, and reporting upon the activities of the Small Business Administration.

The subcommittee's report on the Small Business Administration, House Report No. 1045, and the record of the hearings held by the subcommittee were considered by the members of the House Banking and Currency Committee before the enactment of Public Law 268, which reestablished and provided for the continuation of the Small Business Administration until June 30, 1957.

The report of the subcommittee found that there was a substantial need for continuing a Federal small-business agency to carry out the functions which the Small Business Administration had been authorized to perform. The committee, however, also found that SBA's performance had fallen considerably short of the success that had been hoped for.

Subsequent to its hearings and report on the Small Business Administration, the subcommittee held formal and informal hearings on related subjects within its jurisdiction. Those included the following:

First. Urban renewal projects and slum clearance.

Second. Problems of small business doing business with the Government.

Third. The exclusion of small business from the disposal of surplus products and the difficulties encountered by small business in participating in the stockpile program.

Fourth. The definition of small business.

Fifth. The subcommittee continued its activities in overseeing the operations and procedures of the Small Business Administration, the agency in the Government which was created by Congress to aid and assist small business.

Numerous complaints were received by the subcommittee that small business was being treated inequitably in the dislocation and upheaval caused by urban renewal and slum-clearance projects. The situation appeared to be prevalent throughout the country. It was because of the great number of complaints received that this problem was recognized as extremely serious and difficult and that small-business concerns were being treated inequitably in the dislocation caused by the urban renewal development projects.

The subcommittee held public hearings on May 3, 1956. The committee heard complaints from witnesses from Chicago, Ill., Baltimore, Md., Washington, D. C., and New York City. Testimony was also taken from officials of the various Government agencies involved and participating in the urban renewal and slum clearance projects. The subcommittee's report, House Report No. 2303, was filed with the Clerk of the House on June 11, 1956. This report confirmed the findings of the subcommittee in its report which was filed in the 1st session of the 84th Congress, House Report No. 1588, which was based upon public hearings held by the subcommittee on April 19, 1955. The witnesses who participated and testified at this hearing were officials of the Government agencies involved and small-business men affected by the dislocation caused by the urban renewal project. The subcommittee found that small business concerns who find themselves on a site which is being taken over for an urban renewal project are in double jeopardy, first, with the closing of their business, and second, the financial problem of the displacement of the small business concern in weathering the long period of transition, whether it be to a new place of business in a new area or a place of business in the old area when reconstruction has been completed. The report pointed out that the law, as then in effect, made no mention whatsoever of aid to small-business men and the subcommittee felt that this was a grave oversight.

The committee found that attention was given to families who lose their residences because of such dislocation and suggested that similar provisions should be enacted to safeguard the business segments of the community. Such aid should go beyond the clearinghouse provisions utilized to replace families in living quarters because moving a business entails a great deal more than the moving of a family. Costs are often higher and in some cases suitable markets are left and new markets are yet to be obtained. It was unanimously recommended by the subcommittee that the Federal Government should alleviate these problems wherever possible, both through direct financial aid and expert guidance.

The subcommittee therefore concluded that, first, direct financial grants be awarded to small business concerns dislocated by urban renewal developments; and, second, a new loan program be created to aid dislocated small business concerns in the relocation and reestablishment of their businesses. Pursuant to the conclusions and recommendations submitted by this committee, action was taken by the legislative committees of the Congress and it should be noted that the Housing Act, as amended by the 84th Congress, carries a provision for compensation to small business concerns dislocated by urban renewal and slum-clearance projects.

The Small Business Administration was directed by the Small Business Act of 1953 to establish and publish a definition for small business on an industry-by-industry basis. To date, no such definition has been established for procurement purposes by the Small Business Administration. It was not until July 1956 that a proposed definition for procurement purposes as prepared by an Interagency Task Force, created by the SBA, was submitted to this subcommittee for prior opinion and advice. Upon examination of the proposed definition, the subcommittee concluded that it was necessary to hold hearings on the proposed definition. Such hearings were held on July 5, 1956. The witnesses who appeared at these hearings were the Administrator and Deputy Administrator of SBA and the members of the Interagency Task Force. It is interesting to note however, that the Interagency Task Force was only created by the Small Business Administration subsequent to the issuance of House Report No. 1045 by this committee filed with the clerk of the House on July 1, 1955. The report found that the SBA had not acted expeditiously on a revised definition applicable to Government procurement. The Interagency Task Force was established only after this subcommittee indicated that the 500-employee rule was arbitrary and failed to follow the intent of Congress.

After 18 months the Interagency Task Force finally submitted the proposed definition and it then became apparent to the committee that the intent of Congress had again been thwarted. This new proposed definition again fails to follow the will of Congress in that it does not establish a definition on an industry-by-industry basis. It is evident that the 500-employee rule is not a sufficient definition, and Congress has time and again stated that the only definition which would be suitable is one which would be flexible and adaptable, and one that would be based on an industry-by-industry criterion.

A report is now being prepared by the subcommittee for submission to the House on the hearings on the definition of small business.

The subcommittee received a large number of complaints from small business concerns alleging that they were not being treated fairly and equitably in the awarding of contracts by the Government. Furthermore, such concerns were afraid to testify before the committee because of the fear of reprisal. However, the committee was able, through executive and private sessions with officials of such small business concerns, to ascertain the basis for their complaints. It also became quite apparent to the committee that unless it went to the small business concerns and gave them an opportunity to be heard, the small business concerns would not have an opportunity to voice their complaints to Congress. Therefore the subcommittee conducted a series of field investigations and hearings in Atlanta, Ga., and Jacksonville and Miami, Fla., in April 1956. The evidence adduced at these informal hearings established that small business is not receiving its fair share of Government procurement and is not being treated fairly and equitably in doing business with the Government.

The subcommittee found that the procurement practices of the Government in relation to small business concerns are unrealistic. The practice by the procurement agencies of utilizing change orders after the opening of bids and the awarding of contracts, specification requirements of crash programs, and the emergency deliveries on short-supply items or items stocked and warehoused only by big business and the delay of payment and the refusal of progress payments to small business, all worked to the detriment of small business.

The committee continued to watch and work for improvements in the operations and activities of the Small Business Administration. In this connection, the SBA sought out the opinion and advice of the subcommittee and the subcommittee gave informal advice and opinions to the SBA. In this connection, the Small Business Administration requested an opinion of the subcommittee as to the intent of Congress regarding certain amendments to the Small Business Act of 1953, as contained in Public Law 268 of the 84th Congress.

On September 14, 1955, a letter was directed to the Administrator of the Small Business Administration in which the subcommittee indicated what, in their opinion, was the intent of Congress in the enactment of Public Law 268. The chairman of the subcommittee stated that it was the intent of Congress to expand and strengthen the duties and responsibilities of SBA. The letter from the chairman of the subcommittee stated further that nothing in the new act can or should be otherwise construed. The SBA is authorized, first, to determine whether business concerns of a particular size in a given industry are in fact small business concerns, and such determination is binding on all other Federal departments and agencies; second, to insure that a fair proportion of all Government contracts, including those for research and development, is awarded to small business; and, third, to participate in a joint determination program with procurement officers to insure that contracts go to small business in the interest of maintaining as well as mobilizing the Nation's full productive capacity.

In the late summer of 1955, the New England area was devastated by floods incident to heavy rains causing extensive damage to small businesses in this area. The chairman of the subcommittee immediately toured the area to determine the extent of the damage, its effect upon the small business concerns located therein, and what help, if any, would be needed to assist these small business concerns. The chairman of the subcommittee conferred with State and local officials, as well as Members of Congress whose districts had been affected by this catastrophe. In September of 1955, because of the urgency and emergency created by the floods in the New England States and the request for disaster loans, based upon complaints received by the subcommittee, the chairman of the subcommittee directed a letter to the Administrator of SBA, dated September 29, 1955, in which it interpreted section 207 (b) (1) of the act which deals with disaster loans, specifically in connection with the requirement of collateral for such loans. And again in this same connection, the SBA requested aid and advice from the subcommittee on how to deal with the disaster loan program in view of the fact that it did not have sufficient funds to meet this dire emergency. On September 30, 1955, the chairman of the subcommittee directed a letter to the Administrator of SBA and gave its opinion and advice on this subject.

The committee received numerous complaints from small business concerns that they had been discriminated against and, because of the stringent regulations by the Government agencies, were unable to participate in the disposal of surplus products by the Commodity Credit Corporation, particularly in its barter program for the stockpile of strategic and nonstrategic items. Formal hearings were therefore held on July 11, 12, and 17, 1956, on this problem. Witnesses were heard from the various Government agencies and the small and large concerns involved in the barter program of the Commodity Credit Corporation, General Services Administration, and Office of Defense Mobilization.

The hearings have been adjourned subject to the call of the chair and the staff of the committee is presently studying the voluminous amount of material submitted at the hearings in preparation for further hearings on this most important subject.

On February 23, 1955, the chairman of this subcommittee in announcing the program of the subcommittee stated:

> The procedures and practices surrounding the Government's transactions with private firms are vastly complex. It was largely for this reason that the programs of the Small Business Administration were established. In instituting these programs, Congress created an agent to stay on the job constantly, to work continuously at finding ways to carry out our public policy on safeguarding small business in these procurement and disposal matters—

In order to build up the Nation's economic strength, the chairman of this subcommittee introduced an amendment to the highway bill which was adopted by the House and in commenting on this statement, the chairman of the subcommittee stated that the adoption of the amendment by the House is another clear indication of the clear intent of Congress to aid and assist small business, since small business is the backbone of the American economy and extremely vital to our competitive enterprise system.

C. Subcommittee No. 3, minerals and raw materials:

Subcommittee No. 3 is composed of the Honorable SIDNEY R. YATES, of Illinois, chairman, and the Honorable ABRAHAM J. MULTER, of New York, and the Honorable TIMOTHY P. SHEEHAN, of Illinois.

As reported earlier, this subcommittee had undertaken an investigation and study of recurring shortages of certain raw materials. In that connection it was pointed out that a vast number of small businesses depend upon adequate production and ready availability of certain basic minerals and production materials, and that where recurring shortages of such minerals and materials are acute, small businesses cannot survive unless steps are taken to see that they get a fair share of whatever supplies are available.

Because complaints were received at the beginning of the 84th Congress from the nonintegrated aluminum fabricators, that industry received the attention and consideration of this subcommittee. Hearings were undertaken in an effort to help alleviate the shortages. During the course of those hearings scores of witnesses testified and the record of their testimony covers 1,144 printed pages. The report on that investigation and study, consisting of 150 printed pages, was submitted to the House on July 26, 1956, as House Report No. 2954. It stated in its summary and recommendations that the most significant question in the aluminum industry today appears to be that, absent a reversal of present trends, whether the position of small business will fail to improve and expand in keeping with the growth of the industry as a whole. This is particularly true of the segment of the industry dependent upon a fluid supply of primary metal.

The committee found that in this highly concentrated industry with only three prime producers that the two competitors to Alcoa, Kaiser, and Reynolds, had made substantial amounts of primary aluminum available to the trade. However, both Kaiser and Reynolds have already instituted and financed expansion programs for new fabricating plants which will mean relatively less primary metal for sale on the open market.

The committee recommended that the Office of Defense Mobilization study the problem of the small nonintegrated aluminum fabricators to determine whether the suggestions and recommendations of the committee to establish a buying corporation of these nonintegrated fabricators pursuant to the Small Business Act of 1953, is proper and within the law, or whether additional legislation would be needed to enable such buying corporation to enter into buying contracts.

In addition, the subcommittee recommended that the Federal Trade Commission and the Department of Justice undertake studies and investigations of the aluminum industry with respect to those factors which may hinder the growth of small business in the aluminum industry.

The committee pointed out that some of these factors are, first, the prices of aluminum pig, ingot, and billet and its effect upon smelters and foundries; second, the effect of scrap acquisitions by the primary producers upon smelters and foundries; third, the complaints of nonintegrated users that they are subjected to price squeezes by the primary producers of certain alloys; fourth, the extent to which metal made available to nonintegrated users is taken by large concerns and not small business; and fifth, the reasonableness of the price spread between aluminum pig, ingot, billet, and semifabricated products.

D. Subcommittee No. 4, aircraft industry:

Subcommittee No. 4 is composed of the Honorable TOM STEED, of Oklahoma, chairman, and the Honorable JAMES ROOSEVELT, of California, and the Honorable HORACE SEELY-BROWN, JR., of Connecticut.

This subcommittee held public hearings in Los Angeles, Calif., on May 21 and 22, 1956, and in Washington, D. C., on June 27, 28, and 29, 1956, on the problems of small business in the aircraft industry. The hearings included testimony from 15 witnesses and cover 350 printed pages. These hearings were necessitated because of the numerous complaints received by the subcommittee that small business was not receiving its fair and equitable share of contracts in the aircraft industry. The committee pointed out that with the defense budget of close to $34 billion, the impact on the economy of such tremendous defense procurement necessitated a guarantee to small business that it would receive its fair share. Unless this tremendous expenditure by the Defense Department is permitted to enter into the small-business community it will endanger the free-enterprise economy of our country.

The committee in its study established that the aircraft industry is the largest employing industry in the country. It employs 797,000 men and women directly and hundreds of thousands more indirectly, in the form of subcontractors and suppliers. Such an impact of employment and dollars spent in the aircraft industry necessitated the examination of the problems in the aircraft industry to determine whether the policy of Congress to aid small business is being complied with.

The committee, upon conclusion of its hearings, determined that this important segment of small business must continue to have the careful scrutiny and examination of the Small Business Committee to insure that a fair share of Government contracts in the aircraft industry is placed with small business.

E. Subcommittee No. 5, distribution problems:

This subcommittee is composed of the Honorable JAMES ROOSEVELT, of California, chairman, and the Honorable TOM STEED, of Oklahoma, and the Honorable TIMOTHY P. SHEEHAN, of Illinois.

The title of this subcommittee indicated the broad sweep of its jurisdiction and foretold to some extent that the problems it would tackle would make it one of the most active investigating units of the 84th Congress. Indeed it has become one of the most active investigating subcommittees in the history of the Congress. It has held public hearings in many States covering a period of many days. It has heard a total of 152 witnesses, whose testimony covers more than 1,800 printed pages. There have been submitted to the House of Representatives two reports dealing with the activities of this subcommittee:

First. House Report No. 1423: This report dealt with the subcommittee's investigation and hearings on alleged coercive and discriminatory practices of the major oil-company suppliers. That report summarized the record of testimony to the effect that major oil companies were coercing their lessee dealers into handling a full line of products sold by the lessor oil companies to the exclusion of competing products. The report also dealt with the testimony of witnesses to the effect that the major oil companies were engaging in the practice of price discrimination destructive of small-business enterprises.

Second. House Report No. 2895: This report summarized testimony which had been received by the subcommittee regarding problems faced by small-business concerns due to air pollution.

The subcommittee also studied the antitrust consent decree in the A. T. & T. case, and the record of its hearings on that matter is said to reflect a failure on the part of the Department of Justice to protect adequately small-business concerns in its agreement with the A. T. & T. in the settlement of that case.

The subcommittee studied the problems involved in a consent decree for settling the antitrust case against the United Fruit Co. A number of complaints had been received from importers and other traders, who had been handling bananas and who feared that the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice would settle the case through an agreement with the United Fruit Co. which would not protect adequately the interest of small business. Before the hearings on that matter were concluded the head of the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice announced that it did not appear that the United Fruit case would be settled by an agreement, although he admitted, before this subcommittee had undertaken hearings, that representatives of the Department of Justice and the United Fruit Co. had held conferences in an effort to reach a disposition of the case.

The Workingman Deserves To Know

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. JAMES T. PATTERSON

OF CONNECTICUT
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, as we approach another national election and the climax of the first Republican administration to hold office in over 20 years, the great workingmen of America deserve to know how their economic status has changed, if any, during the past 3½ years.

As congressional Representative of one of the greatest and most important industrial areas in the United States, it is only natural that I am strongly concerned with the welfare of workingmen of the Naugatuck Valley and only proper that I continue to work unceasingly in Congress for their economic interests, as I have during my nearly 10 years as their Representative in Congress.

In this report it gives me great satisfaction to review the record of the past 3½ years and cite the tremendous advancements that have been made on behalf of labor during that period. In this connection, one of the most significant statements made thus far came from an outstanding leader in the American labor movement, Mr. George Meany, president of the AFL–CIO, who declared that "right now we never had it so good."

Why did Mr. Meany make this statement, and upon what did he base his remarks? The answer is simple and not hard to find. Today wages are higher than ever, and more people are enjoying the fruits of employment than ever before. These facts are reflected by accurate statistics taken from both Government sources and private industry. For example, in January of this year the Department of Labor announced that weekly earnings had risen to the record peak of $71.92 for workers with 3 dependents, and to $64.59 for workers with no dependents. This unprecedented spiral of prosperity is further indicated by record-breaking sales of consumer goods in department stores—and this is of vital importance to industrial workers of the Naugatuck Valley, since they manufacture many consumer products.

In my judgment, however, one of the most significant facts is that there is no indication whatsoever that the present spiral of economic prosperity will come to a halt. And I feel that if we in Congress continue to pursue certain labor policies of the past 3½ years, the prosperity that we now enjoy will continue, and the great American workingmen will remain in the best status that they have ever enjoyed.

Another aspect of major importance is the fact that the present prosperous conditions of American workingmen have been built in an era of peace. In early 1953, certain prophets of doom declared that an economic recession and possibly a depression would set in after President Eisenhower brought the Korean war to a close. How wrong they were. In sharp contrast, wages increased and continued to increase, individual purchasing power continued to rise, consumer goods continued to sell at record-breaking levels, and as a result the American workingman was elevated to an unprecedented peak of prosperity.

As your Representative in Congress, I intend to vigorously support any policy in the future that will advance the interests of American workingmen, just as I have in the past. As you may recall, I was one of the very first Members of Congress to openly advocate and call for a minimum wage law of $1.35 per hour. And as you read this report, you may wonder why I am so strongly pro-labor. There are several reasons. One reason is that I was born and raised among the industrial workers of the Naugatuck Valley and am therefore entirely familiar with conditions of American workingmen and aware that we in Congress must constantly work to improve their economic welfare. Another reason is that the economic welfare of the entire Naugatuck Valley is dependent upon the individual welfare of its thousands of workingmen who turn the wheels, run the machines, and produce some of our Nation's most important products.

Toward the advancement of their interests I shall always work as long as I am honored with the privilege of serving and representing them in the Congress of the United States.

Foreign Aid Bill Is Not the Same as Defense Bill in Spite of CIO

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. CHARLES B. BROWNSON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. BROWNSON. Mr. Speaker, on July 11 the Members of the House of Representatives debated and voted on the mutual security appropriations bill of 1957, commonly referred to as the foreign aid bill. I joined 119 of my colleagues in voting against the bill, because I am convinced the spending of the taxpayers' money in this way is neither as effective, efficient, nor economical as is consistent with sound government and our national interest. While I am sure that the majority of my constituents agree with me in my opposition to this present foreign aid bill, I recognize that there are some, perhaps significant numbers, in my district who still favor foreign aid. I have no quarrel with their position or their right to hold to that position, but I can no longer cast my one congressional vote in favor of the continuation of the present scheme for large-scale foreign assistance.

Misrepresentation of facts is, however, another question entirely. The Indiana CIO Council publishes, from time to time, a bulletin known as the CIO Fact Sheet which is mailed as matter from a nonprofit organization at Evansville. The CIO Fact Sheet is apparently edited by the CIO Council on Education and Research and sent to CIO members throughout the State. The pamphlet has an attractive format, is usually printed in two colors, and presents quite effectively the propaganda prescribed by the CIO leaders for consumption by the rank and file.

In spite of the name CIO Fact Sheet, this publication has been known to print and to reprint material which is not exactly factual—in fact, material which is distorted, twisted, and sometimes bluntly untrue. On one recent occasion I called to the attention of the editor of this Fact Sheet one definite misstatement of fact in an article quoted from the New York Post. The editors of the New York Post admitted the error, but I have never heard from the editors of the CIO Fact Sheet nor seen a correction of the erroneous statistics to which I called their attention. Evidently, the CIO Council on Education and Research believes that labeling an untruth as a fact settles the matter for all time—truth, proof, and right to the contrary.

Mr. Speaker, I have here in my hand volume 5, No. 14, of the CIO Fact Sheet for Tuesday, July 17, 1956. On page 5 of this issue, right at the top of the page, there is a very short article entitled "From the 'Hoss's Mouth'." So that this gem of misstatement may be shared by all present here today and by all who read the RECORD, under unanimous consent I ask, after I read this short item, that it may be included in the RECORD exactly as I have read it. I hope the Government Printing Office will preserve, if at all possible, the underlining, liberal use of punctuation marks and the underlining of the original so that this extract will appear exactly as it is in the copy which I read from today:

FROM THE "HOSS'S MOUTH"

On July 11, during the debate in the House on Ike's defense bill, Indiana Republican Congressman CHARLES A. HALLECK was fighting hard to save Ike's defense program from being torn to shreds by his own Republican colleagues in Congress.

In the course of the debate, Mr. HALLECK said that all those who voted against funds to provide defense against Communist Russia would be "friends" of the Reds. Now, let's see who from our Indiana Congressmen are "friends of the Reds."

"Friends of the Reds": 3d District, CRUMPACKER, Republican; 4th District, ADAIR, Republican; 5th District, BEAMER, Republican; 7th District, BRAY, Republican; 9th District, WILSON, Republican; 10th District, HARVEY, Republican; 11th District, BROWNSON, Republican.

"Friends of Uncle Sam": 1st District, MADDEN, Democrat (paired for); 2d District, HALLECK, Republican; 6th District, HARDEN, Republican; 8th District, DENTON, Democrat.

He (HALLECK) remarked further, that the debate on the bill was a "spectacle" and called "shame on you for your conduct here today." We think Congressman HALLECK, after being around for a long time, should know whereof he speaks. Thanks, Charlie, for enlightening us on your colleagues; we sort of suspected it all along.

Mr. Speaker, I recognize that the editorial staff of the CIO Fact Sheet have a perfect right to operate as a propaganda arm of the Democratic State committee, if that is their desire. My only contention is that they do have an obligation to present as facts material which is factually correct. May I, line by line, point out the absolute errors in fact contained in just these short paragraphs.

CIO ERROR NO. 1 AND CORRECTION

On July 11 the debate in the House concerned the mutual security appropriations bill for 1957, not "Ike's defense bill." Page 11180 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, House, gives to the debate this exact title I have just mentioned. The major appropriation bill for the Department of Defense for 1957 which would be "Ike's defense bill" was H. R. 10986. This bill was voted on in the House on May 10, 1956, and passed 377 to 0 with only 1 vote of present. In other words, the CIO is discussing what is commonly known as the foreign aid bill. Could it be that because the CIO knows that foreign aid is an unpopular subject among many of its own members in Indiana, it deliberately chose to list this debate under the title of "Ike's defense bill" to create the impression that it authorized funds for our own Army, Navy, and Air Force?

It does not. In fact, of the $5.7 billion originally requested in this bill, H. R. 12130, only $3.1 billion was for military assistance to our allies and so-called allies. One billion one hundred million dollars was for defense support or installations somewhat connected with military assistance. One hundred and fifty-seven million dollars was for nonmilitary technical cooperation or point 4 aid. Other programs accounted for $401 million. It is significant that, in a Democrat-controlled Congress, a committee with a Democrat chairman and a majority of members from the Democrat Party cut the administration's request of $3 billion for military assistance by $1.2 billion for a total of $1.7 billion recommended for 1957. It is also significant that the actual defense bill did not receive one vote of opposition—of course not, you would never find 120 Members of the House voting to leave this Nation without arms as the CIO infers we did.

CIO ERROR NO. 2 AND CORRECTION

The CIO Fact Sheet goes on:

On July 11, during the debate in the House on Ike's defense bill, Indiana Republican Congressman CHARLES A. HALLECK was fighting hard to save Ike's defense program from being torn to shreds by his own Republican colleagues in Congress.

This just is not true. The distinguished gentleman from Indiana spoke twice on July 11. His remarks were not directed primarily at his own colleagues, but rather represented an attempt to restore $550 million, cut in the Democrat-controlled committee which brought the appropriation level that much below the total authorized for foreign aid, or mutual security for 1957.

The speech of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] is printed on page 11205 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for June 11. It is in the form of an exchange of remarks between Mr. HALLECK and the gentleman from New York, the Democratic chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. ROONEY]. A little earlier in the debate, as recorded on page 11203, Mr. ROONEY interjected in his discussion of the history of mutual defense a dispatch which he said he had just read on the AP wire that morning.

I am for Eisenhower—

Said Malik.

The people of Europe know him. They like him and trust him. We can do business with President Eisenhower.

Mr. HALLECK'S speech was in answer to Mr. ROONEY. His attack is directed toward Mr. ROONEY'S reading of the AP dispatch in connection with the debate on the mutual-security bill and against the action of the Democratic controlled Appropriations Committee in drastically cutting below the total amount authorized. The exact interchange follows, taken from page 11205 of the RECORD:

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, a little while ago the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROONEY], for whom I have the highest regard, read something that he said was on the teletype. I do not know whether it was or not. But what he read was the Soviet Ambassador Jacob Malik said, "I am for Eisenhower." He said, and I refer to Ambassador Malik, "the people of Europe know him; they like him and trust him. We can do business with President Eisenhower."

Now, I do not know for sure just what the gentleman's purpose was in reading that, but I would like to remind some of my friends on the right that a few days ago the policy committee of my party in the other body issued a staff report, and they said in that statement, "that some convicted Communist in this country wanted the Democratic Party to win." I never heard such an outcry in my life from the people of your party as a result. Why, you said, that is associating us with communism, you are accusing us of being soft on communism, and we resent it.

I want to say to all of you and to the gentleman from New York, again may I say I respect and admire him, to use whatever Malik said for what seemed to be an obvious purpose hits something of new low, and I think the people of this country will resent it.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ROONEY. Does the gentleman understand that I merely read verbatim what appeared in the Speaker's lobby as an AP dispatch? And I should like to inquire what interpretation does the gentleman place on Mr. Malik's remarks, assuming they are correct?

Mr. HALLECK. I would not know what interpretation to put on his remarks, but the very fact that the gentleman saw fit to bring that press report in here and read it, in my opinion, is susceptible to but one interpretation, because the gentleman speaks too well and too brilliantly to be up here for exercise only.

There is another thing I would like to point out to my friends on the right. As far as action here today is concerned and the action yesterday, in the Appropriations Committee as it has now been disclosed, who would be the friend of the Russians? Would it be the people who voted to provide the requested military assistance to develop our offshore strength to counter the threat of the Russians or the Communists, or do you find the people who oppose it in the corner with the Russians and their threat to us?

Mr. HALLECK is fighting hard, that much is true. He is fighting hard against the same Democrats on the Appropriations Committee who slashed the mutual-security program the day before and who are now debating the issue by dragging in partisan innuendo. From the viewpoint of those who favor foreign aid, the program has been torn to shreds already by the Democratic-controlled committee. The context of the speech clearly identifies the CIO Fact Sheet error.

CIO ERROR NO. 3 AND CORRECTION

The Fact Sheet continues:

In the course of the debate, Mr. HALLECK said that all those who voted against funds to provide defense against Communist Russia would be "friends" of the Reds. Now let's see who from our Indiana Congressmen are "friends of the Reds."

Mr. HALLECK just did not say this, at all. It is a paraphrase by the CIO editors for specific and rather tawdry political purposes. What Mr. HALLECK did say is clearly stated in my exact quotation from page 11205. He answered Mr. ROONEY's accusation based on Malik's remarks by pointing out that his friends on the right, the Democrats sit to the Speaker's right in the Halls of the United States House of Representatives, were in no position to throw the Malik statement in the Republicans' faces since the Russians undoubtedly would like the cuts made by the Democrats the day before in committee. Evidently, the CIO is so used to considering the "right" as identical in meaning to the GOP that the editors forgot the term can also indicate a simple spatial relationship.

CIO ERROR NO. 4 AND CORRECTION

The Fact Sheet continues:

He [HALLECK] remarked further that the debate on the bill was a "spectacle" and called "shame on your for your conduct here today." We think Congressman HALLECK, after being around for a long time, should know whereof he speaks. Thanks, Charlie, for enlightening us on your colleagues; we sort of suspected it all long.

Let us look at the RECORD. Mr. HALLECK never made the quotation attributed to him. What he did say is clearly printed in the paragraph of his remarks on page 11205 which follows the previous quotation I made from the RECORD. May I read it to the Members? Please note that the term "friends on the right" is again used to identify the Democrats, as represented by their spokesman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROONEY]:

I deeply regret that this matter has taken such a turn. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD] was correct when he pointed out this sort of legislation should not be the subject of politics. But I would like to remind my friends on the right that when we look in the RECORD to see what happened in the past, we find that I was majority leader of a Republican 80th Congress. The President was of your party and his name was Harry S. Truman. Communist aggression and infiltration threatened the world. I could make quite a speech, as I did when the Marshall plan was here on the floor, as to why something had to be done at that time. But may I say, as I said then, mistakes of the past many times must be forgotten and what we must do is to provide for the present. Your President asked the Republican 80th Congress to provide interim aid to France and Italy and to give aid to Greece and Turkey. Why? To meet Communist aggression. Yes, and he asked us for the Marshall plan.

I would like to remind you that it was the Republican 80th Congress, under Republican leadership acting out in front, that responded to the request of your President to meet the Communist threat. In the light of such history, it seems to me your conduct here today comes with poor grace, to say the least.

That is the story of four mistakes in fact in the CIO Fact Sheet. To answer the vicious insinuation that seven Republican Congressmen who did not happen to vote as the CIO wanted are "Friends of the Reds" is beneath the note of an elected official. It is interesting to see the depths of smear, innuendo, and emotionalism the vaunted protectors of civil liberties sing to when they think it will help the Democrats toward victory. It makes some of the CIO's protestations over the loyalty program, their professed indignation over the speeches of the Vice President and the aroused criticism of the actions of congressional committees sound a little hypocritical. Apparently, freedom from abuse is to be extended only to Democrats or those with 100 percent pro-CIO voting records. Friendly cooperation with local unions and local labor officials apparently does not count for much when the top level labor politicians move in just before election time.

The Rights of Disabled People Under the Social Security Law

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. DANIEL A. REED
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, Over a period of nearly 20 years, old-age and survivors insurance under the social-security law has become well known to most Americans. Now there is social-security protection against a third risk—the risk of being unable to work because of severe disability.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that it will be useful to explain carefully exactly what this new law provides.

If an individual is so severely disabled that he is unable to work, he may have rights under one or more of these three parts of the social-security law:

First, if he is disabled and is 50 years of age or older, he may be eligible for disability insurance payments after June 1957.

Second, if he is disabled and his disability began while he was under 18 years of age, he may be eligible after 1956 to receive child's insurance benefits even after reaching age 18 if either his father or his mother is receiving old-age insurance payments or if he has lost the support of a parent through death.

Third, if he is disabled and has not yet reached 50 years of age, he may be eligible to have his social-security earnings record "frozen" to protect his own and his family's rights to future benefit payments because of old age, disability, or death.

HOW MUCH WORK IS REQUIRED?

In order to qualify for disability insurance payments at age 50 or to have his earnings record frozen while he is disabled, he must have social security credit for:

(a) Five years of work in the 10 years before the established beginning date of his disability; and

(b) One and one-half years of work in the 3 years before that date.

The amount of work required for him to get disability insurance payments is always at least as much as would be required for old-age insurance payments.

Active military service at any time after September 15, 1940, and work in the railroad industry after 1936 may count toward the disability freeze but can count toward disability insurance payments only under more limited conditions.

HOW DISABLED DOES HE HAVE TO BE?

An individual can meet the requirements of these provisions of the social security law only

(a) If he is so severely disabled that he is not able to engage in any substantial work; and

(b) If his disability is expected to continue indefinitely.

If he is temporarily disabled, or if he is only partly disabled, he is not eligible.

The disability may be either mental or physical, but he must submit medical evidence to show what his condition is and how long it may be expected to continue. To have his earnings record frozen or to get disability insurance payments, he must have been disabled for at least 6 months.

The determination whether he is so severely disabled as to qualify under these provisions is made in accordance with the social security law. The fact that he may be receiving payments for "total disability" from another agency does not necessarily mean that he will be considered disabled under the provisions of the social security law.

WHEN DID THIS DISABILITY BEGIN?

The evidence in the individual's own case will show when he actually became disabled. If he met all the requirements at that time, the date he became disabled will be used by the Social Security Administration as the official beginning date of his disability.

If he did not meet all the requirements at the time he became disabled but does meet them at a later date, this later date will be established as the official beginning date of his disability.

DISABILITY BENEFITS AT AGE 50

If an individual is between 50 and 65 years of age and meets the work and disability requirements previously explained, he may be entitled to monthly disability insurance payments under the social security law.

The amount of the disability benefit depends on his average earnings it is the same as the amount of the old-age insurance benefit for which he would be eligible if he were 65.

Disability insurance benefits are not paid in addition to old-age or survivors insurance benefits. If an individual is eligible for more than one benefit at the same time, he will ordinarily receive an amount equal to the largest.

The first month for which disability insurance payments can be made is July 1957. No application can be accepted before October 1956.

Dependents do not get social security benefits based on an individual's social security account until he applies for retirement benefits.

His dependents may be eligible for survivors insurance benefits if he dies while he is receiving disability insurance benefits.

WHAT AN INDIVIDUAL SHOULD DO IF HE BELIEVES HE IS ELIGIBLE FOR DISABILITY INSURANCE PAYMENTS

If an individual has received notice that his application for a disability freeze has been approved, and he is between 50 and 65 years of age, he may file an application for benefits on or after October 1, 1956. However, it is not necessary that he apply during October. He should make his application at some time between October 1, 1956, and July 1957. His social security office will let him know what proofs are required when he applies.

If he has applied for a disability freeze but has not yet been notified of the decision, he must wait until he receives his official notice. His social security office needs to know what decision was made on his freeze application in order to take the appropriate action on his claim. However, if he has not received official notice of the decision before June 1957, he should get in touch with his social security office and make his application.

If an individual's application for a disability freeze is denied, he probably does not meet the requirements for disability insurance benefits. However, if he believes that he now meets the requirements, he should get in touch with his local social security office.

If an individual believes that he is eligible for disability insurance benefits or a disability freeze, he should make an application for a disability freeze at once, if he has not already done so.

NO PAYMENTS AFTER 1957

If an individual meets all the requirements for disability insurance payments in July 1957 and makes his application for the payments no later than December 1957, he will get payments beginning with July.

If his application for disability insurance payments is made after December 1957, no payments can be made for any month before the application was made.

DISABLED CHILD'S BENEFITS

An individual may receive child's insurance benefits after he reaches age 18 if—

(a) He has been disabled since before he reached 18,

(b) He is unmarried, and

(c) He is dependent on a parent, stepparent, or adopting parent who is entitled to old-age insurance benefits under social security, or he was dependent on a parent who died after 1939 and was insured for survivors benefits at the time of his or her death.

It is not necessary that an individual himself have any record of work under the social-security law to get payments as a disabled child.

Two examples will help to show how this part of the law works:

Jim Hawkins was disabled at the age of 15 when his father was 50, and has been disabled ever since. His father is now 65 and is receiving old-age insurance payments under the social-security law. Jim may get child's insurance benefits after 1956 even though he is now 30 years of age.

Joe Burton became severely disabled 4 years ago when he was almost 13. His mother was working, but she died this year, and Joe was eligible for child's insurance benefits based on her social-security account. Under the old law his payments would have stopped in the month before he reached 18. Even though Joe will reach 18 next year, his social-security payments will now continue as long as he is disabled.

WHAT AN INDIVIDUAL SHOULD DO IF HE BELIEVES HE MAY BE ELIGIBLE FOR BENEFITS AS A DISABLED CHILD

If an individual believes that he may be eligible for social-security benefits as a disabled child, he or someone in his family should get in touch with his social-security office after September 1956.

If he is now receiving child's insurance benefits under the social-security law and he is disabled, he or the person who receives the payments in his behalf should get in touch with the social-security office a few months before he reaches 18.

The first payments possible under this part of the law will be for the month of January 1957. An individual will not lose any of the payments due in 1957 if his application is made before the end of January 1958.

THE DISABILITY FREEZE

If an individual is disabled but not eligible for disability insurance payments, he may be eligible to have his social-security earnings record frozen. Unless his earnings record is frozen, the period while he is disabled and has little or no earnings can reduce the amount of his own and his family's future benefits.

To be entitled to a disability freeze he must meet the work and disability requirements explained previously.

WHAT AN INDIVIDUAL SHOULD DO IF HE BELIEVES HE IS ENTITLED TO A DISABILITY FREEZE

If an individual believes that he is entitled to a disability freeze, he should get in touch with his local social-security office right away and make his application for it. He should not delay, because his earnings record cannot be frozen until he has filed an application.

If he was disabled in 1956 or earlier, he should be sure to apply to have his earnings record frozen by June 30, 1957. If he has already applied to have his record frozen, he does not need to make another application.

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION

If an individual applies for disability insurance benefits, the disability freeze, or disabled child's benefits, his name will be referred to the vocational rehabilitation agency in your State. That agency may be able to provide him with rehabilitation services that will help him return to work.

Benefits will be withheld if he refuses without good cause to accept rehabilitation services offered by the State rehabilitation agency.

Mr. Speaker, it is truly remarkable what can and is being done today in the field of vocational rehabilitation. Thousands of individuals are being returned annually as useful and productive members of their community. The dollars and cents saving to the economy is enormous. The gain in terms of increased human dignity and self-respect is incalculable. I am proud to have been one of the early fighters for this program.

REDUCTION BECAUSE OF OTHER DISABILITY BENEFITS

The amount of any social-security benefit based on disability is reduced by the amount of any other Federal benefit an individual receives based on disability, and by the amount of any State or Federal workmen's compensation benefit he receives.

FINANCING DISABILITY INSURANCE

To meet the costs of the benefits for disabled workers, an increase in the social-security tax will go into effect January 1, 1957. The amount of the increase is one-fourth of 1 percent each for employee and employer and three-eighths of 1 percent for self-employed people on the first $4,200 of earnings in a year.

THE LOCAL SOCIAL-SECURITY OFFICE

If an individual wishes to apply for disability benefits or for the disability freeze, he should get in touch with his social-security district office.

If he is unable to visit the social-security office, he may telephone or write or someone else may make the call for him.

He can get the address of his social-security office from the post office or from the telephone directory under "United States Government, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, Social Security Administration."

Warning to Those Who Would Put the Atom in Politics

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. W. STERLING COLE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. COLE. Mr. Speaker, during the coming months, the American people will hear a great deal of oratory, overstatement, oversimplification, and just plain nonsense about foreign relations, the farm program, the budget, taxes, and so on. In the great political tradition of this Nation the policies and programs of the party in power will be attacked vigorously by the party out of power, and with equal vigor defended by the party in power. Now, within the bounds of honesty and good taste, this will be a good thing, for in the course of public debate the truth usually emerges, though oftimes dim and cloudy, and the people of this Nation are thereby aided in their exercise of the sovereign right to choose their leaders and through that choice to indicate their approval or disapproval of past actions.

I shall do my part in this coming debate to tell the people of the solid, substantial programs of this administration, for I believe never has this country risen to such heights of technical excellence, economic and political freedom, prosperity, and well being as it has in the past 4 years under the enlightened and progressive leadership of President Eisenhower. I shall fight for the continuing leadership of this Government by the great Republican Party, but there is one area of national interest over which I beg for an absence of political debate and campaign oratory.

I do not here wish to deliver a political speech. Quite the contrary. I wish to make a nonpartisan plea that, at least in this one area of national interest and activity, prudence prevail over pique, progress over partisanship, perspective over personalities, and patience over petulance to the end that our Nation's development of atomic energy for the good of mankind everywhere shall proceed expeditiously and not become bogged down in the quagmire of partisan politics and personal venom.

Atomic energy is far too important to our Nation to be used as cat's-paw for some selfish political advantage, or to be sidetracked by insistence on controversial programs such as placing the Federal Government in the electric business and socializing this great new atomic-energy industry.

The Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, of which I have been a member since its creation 10 years ago, and of which I was chairman during the 83d Congress, has traditionally approached its responsibilities in the field of development, use, or control of atomic energy in a truly nonpartisan manner. For 10 years that has been the policy and practice of the Joint Committee, but, alas, that admirable record has been marred and deeply scarred in the 84th Congress by some Members. So meticulously was this policy respected during my chairmanship that I refused to make a political speech on any subject lest I be charged with political bias and the work of the Joint Committee be thereby impaired.

Regretfully, I have observed a growing tendency by some in the present majority party in the Congress to attempt to use atomic energy for political advantage, and to use the powerful position given them by fact of majority control to work petty vengeance upon devoted and talented civil servants and officials whose viewpoints have differed from theirs. The recent and shameful action of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee comes to mind. So scurrilous and unsubstantiated was his attack upon the Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission that the vicious report he drafted was rejected by his own committee and redrafted, but not before he had distributed it to the press, resulting in libelous news articles. And this nefarious attack was made under the cover, under the pious purpose, of accelerating the Nation's atomic-energy program. It was made by the same man who last year, until reversed by action of this House, refused to include in the AEC appropriations bill any funds whatsoever for building plants and facilities needed in the AEC civilian power development program. I say with pride that the members of the Joint Committee, Republican and Democrat alike, successfully fought side by side on the floor of this House to restore those funds.

Now, I do not believe that the cause of moderation, of temperate action, of nonpartisan consideration that I am here pleading will be furthered by a recitation by me of all the events that have given rise to my concern. I shall not, in hoping to cure the situation, aggravate it instead, although many instances of deliberate political depredations on the atomic program could be cited and partisan purposes be established.

Rather would I seal my lips on some of the regrettable instances of political assault and instead call upon my friends of the Democratic Party to join with me in a concerted effort to keep the atom out of politics. The atom should be and must be above partisan politics—our national interest, security, and prestige require no less. If we do not, our national position will gravely suffer and we shall fail in our solemn obligation to bring the blessings of atomic energy to our fellow man throughout the world at the earliest possible time.

Let me cite, however, a recent example to illustrate my concern. The House had before it a bill written by the Joint Committee and reported without adverse vote by that committee, which had as its stated purpose the acceleration of the development of peacetime atomic power. I for one was not satisfied with the bill as it came from the Joint Committee and, therefore, offered a series of amendments in the course of debate in the House to remove its objectionable features. My amendments remove the last vestige of resemblance between the bill before the House and the original so-called Gore-Holifield bills which were an admitted attempt to place the Federal Government in the electric business and to socialize the atomic industry.

In the course of a lengthy debate, it became apparent that the vast majority of Members of the House were suspicious of the real purposes and intent of the measure. They were unwilling to take a chance on its subsequent perversion even though the amendments adopted made the bill more palatable. Therefore, the House killed the bill by sending it back to the Joint Committee.

Let me say that the defeat of that bill was the direct result of an attempt to use atomic energy as a vote getter in the public power areas and, under the cloak of a laudable purpose, to attract the votes of people everywhere who are eager to advance the atomic program.

I said that the stated purpose of the bill was to accelerate the development of peacetime atomic power. My great and good friend, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DURHAM] underlined in his remarks on the floor that the bill was not a public power bill. So too, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY] reiterated that the purpose of the bill was in no way connected with the issue of public power. My amendments, among other things, made this clear; but, if the bill was intended solely to do what its title stated to be its sole purpose, it is most difficult to understand why those amendments were called "crippling" by one of the authors of the discredited public power bill I referred to previously.

The reason is simply this: Those amendments strengthened and accelerated the development of peacetime atomic power in accordance with our American philosophy of free and competitive enterprise. But they also removed the hidden avenues to Federal entry into the electric business of generating and selling electricity produced, not from falling water as in connection with flood control, reclamation or navigation, but from atomic energy. Those amendments exposed the original Gore-Holifield bills as the "Trojan horse" of the atomic industry.

If the bill as reported from the Joint Committee was solely what it was stated to be, why did the gentleman from California describe the amendments I proposed and which were adopted by the House as "crippling"? The only explanation is that the amendments were indeed needed to keep the bill in accord with its stated purpose and that the suspicions of the great majority of Members of this House who believe the Federal Government should not become involved in the electric business were well founded.

The situation facing the House on the motion to recommit was this: The bill, as presented, was clearly shown to have hidden features which place the Federal Government in the business of generating and eventually selling electricity produced from atomic energy. It had passed the Senate without the amendments written in by the House to correct this weakness. As pointed out by the assistant minority leader, it was very likely that the bill, if passed by the House, would come back from conference in a form that would not be acceptable to the majority of Members of the House in that the necessary changes made in the House would not be accepted by the conferees.

The defeat of the bill was caused by the doubt and misunderstanding generated directly as a result of the efforts of a few dyed-in-the-wool proponents of socialized power production and distribution, aided and abetted by the repugnance the gentlemen of the House felt to the politically motivated and slanderous attack upon the Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission by one of the recent, but I am afraid insincere, converts to a strong atomic development program.

Fortunately, the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 already contains all the authority needed to proceed with any atomic power reactors needed to speed the development of atomic power. The Gore-Holifield bills were not needed to accelerate the atomic program. The Atomic Energy Commission has undertaken to appraise the entire field by a panel of eminent scientists and the Chairman has committed himself to push ahead on all fronts with the aid and assistance of private companies or cooperatives and, in the event no such participation is forthcoming, solely with Federal funds. That is the proper, the wholesome, the natural, and American way to progress.

Defeat of the Gore bill does no harm whatever to our national atomic program. In fact, the rejection of a Federal socialized power development program has given private industry new courage and hope. After the objectionable features of the bill were removed by adoption of my amendments, I voted against recommittal because I shall never vote against passage of any bill which, although not necessary, is directed solely at speeding atomic progress.

The action of the House in recommitting this bill is a warning to those who would put the atom in politics. It is a warning we should all heed lest, by mixing the atom in controversial matters such as the generation and sale of electricity by the Federal Government, we shall so cast suspicion upon any proposed action as to make its acceptance by a majority of the Congress doubtful, if not impossible.

The atom must not be socialized. Its tremendous force and power will not accept the straitjacket of Government monopoly.

I previously referred to pique and petulance. Pique over failure of the Gore bill to pass was apparently the basis for the refusal of the Democratic leadership of the House and Senate to consider and pass the measure which the atomic industry has been awaiting and without which real progress will be seriously hindered. I refer to the measure which would delineate the public liability of an owner and operator of an atomic reactor. For 2 years, the joint committee struggled to prepare an acceptable proposal which was adopted by the committee with but one dissenting vote. It was of such importance to the peacetime atomic program that President Eisenhower personally wrote to Vice President NIXON and Speaker RAYBURN urging enactment before adjournment.

The President's plea fell on deaf and unyielding ears. The consequence of petulance in the Democratic leadership deplorably and needlessly hinders our free, competitive atomic program.

Mr. Speaker, in closing I repeat my opening plea. The atom has no nationality, it has no religion—and, above all, it has no politics. It is neither Republican nor Democratic. But neither is it static; it will not await the machinations and manipulations of maneuvering politicians. It demands attention and action with a minimum of governmental restraint and regulation. If America does not give the atom the green light of go-ahead, it will find its proper place in foreign lands where its benign power is not only appreciated but will be realized.

Again, I beg that the atom be kept off the platform of political acrimony and out of the arena of partisan competition.

Statistics on Accomplishments of the 84th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN W. McCORMACK
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the almost 19,000 bills and resolutions put into the legislative hoppers of the 84th Congress was the largest number in 20 years. The combined figure was 18,989—11,914 in the first session and 7,025 in the second. Not since the 74th Congress of 1935–36 has the number reached such heights. Of the total, in the biennial period, 14,104 were introduced in the House and 4,835 in the Senate.

The 18,939 of the 84th Congress exceeded the 16,385 of the 83d, the 14,164 of the 82d, the 16,670 of the 81st, and the 12,090 of the 80th.

During the past 20 years the totals have ranged between 9,536 and 17,245. In the 74th Congress the total was 19,745.

Measures reported totaled 5,751—2,954 in the first session, and 2,797 in the second. Figures for the House and Senate were 2,698 and 3,053, respectively. The total compares with 5,263 for the 83d Congress, 4,601 for the 82d, 5,880 for the 81st, and 4,272 for the 80th.

Measures passed totaled 5,713—2,922 in the first session and 2,791 in the second. Figures for the House and Senate were 2,833 and 2,880, respectively. The total compares with 5,201 in the 83d, 4,593 in the 82d, 5,764 in the 81st, and 4,132 in the 80th.

Laws enacted reached the number of 1,028 for public laws and 893 for private laws, making an aggregate of 1,921 measures enacted during the Congress. The first session accounted for 390 public laws and 490 private laws; the second session for 638 public, and 403 private. By comparison, the 83d Congress enacted 781 public laws; the 82d, 594; the 81st, 921; and the 80th Congress, 906.

Measures vetoed totaled 34 for both sessions, 11 in the first and 23 in the second. Among those vetoed were the 10 percent increase in postal salaries—S. 1, continuation of purchase of domestic minerals—H. R. 3373, agricultural price supports—H. R. 12, the natural gas bill—H. R. 6645, and the $1.6 billion rivers and harbors bill—H. R. 12080.

The Senate confirmed 82,694 executive nominations. This was considerably in excess of the 68,563 confirmed during the 83d Congress, the first during the Eisenhower administration.

Schedule of Meetings in the 11th Congressional District of Indiana

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES B. BROWNSON
OF INDIANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. BROWNSON. Mr. Speaker, for the past 6 years I have had the privilege of representing Marion County, known as the 11th District of Indiana, in the United States Congress. My district totals approximately 610,888 persons, which is well over half again the population of the average congressional district. I maintain a congressional office in downtown Indianapolis the year round, where a secretary is available to assist callers and to help them with requests for aid in dealing with the Federal Government, so that I can be of every proper assistance to them.

During the official congressional recess this year, I am scheduling meetings in the post offices throughout the county so every citizen of Marion County can have the opportunity of a personal conference with me. Special appointments are not necessary. I sincerely urge individuals or groups to meet with me on the date and at the place most convenient to them. The knowledge obtained through these meetings will help me to render better service, both legislative and personal, to all of the people of Marion County.

The schedule is as follows:

Monday, October 1: Post office, West Newton, 9: 30 a. m.; post office, Camby, 10 a. m.; post office, Bridgeport, 10: 30 a. m.; post office, Speedway, 11: 15 a. m.

Tuesday, October 2: Post office, New Augusta, 2 p. m.; post office, Clermont, 4 p. m.; post office, Speedway, 4:45 p. m.

Wednesday, October 3: Post office, Southport, 2 p. m.; post office, Acton, 3 p. m.; post office, Wanamaker, 4 p. m.

Thursday, October 4: Post office, Beech Grove, 11 a. m.

Monday, October 8: Post office, Castleton, 9:30 a. m.; post office, Oaklandon, 10: 30 a. m.; post office, Lawrence, 11: 15 a. m.

Tuesday, October 9: Post office, Cumberland, 2 p. m.

The Adoption of the Reed-Dirksen Amendment Would Save Income-Tax Payers $10 Billion a Year

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. RALPH W. GWINN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. GWINN. Mr. Speaker, during the two sessions of the 84th Congress proposals were introduced for constitutional amendments limiting the Federal power to tax incomes except in time of war or great national emergencies and requiring the President to submit to Congress each year proposals for a balanced budget. The so-called Reed-Dirksen joint resolutions—Senate Joint Resolution 23 and House Joint Resolution 182—proposed the repeal of the 16th article of amendment to the Constitution, and enacting in its stead a new amendment limiting the taxing power of the Federal Government on incomes to a maximum top rate of 25 percent and also eliminating taxes upon inheritances and gifts.

The so-called Byrd-Bridges joint resolution calls for a constitutional amendment requiring that "on or before the 15th day after the beginning of each regular session of the Congress, the President shall transmit to the Congress a budget which shall set forth his estimates of the receipts of the Government, other than trust funds, during the ensuing fiscal year under the laws then existing and his recommendations with respect to expenditures to be made from funds other than trust funds during such ensuing fiscal year, which shall not exceed such estimate of receipts."

Mr. Speaker, both of these worthy objectives now rest in the hands of the next Congress for their revival. I have taken time today to point out a few of the possible savings to the taxpayers that could come through the adoption of the proposed Reed-Dirksen amendment to our Constitution. The table which follows shows the difference between the taxes on incomes under the Internal Revenue Act of 1954, as amended, and the savings under the 25 percent maximum possible under the Reed-Dirksen joint resolution:

Income level	Taxes under 1954 Revenue Act	Taxes proposed under Reed-Dirksen [1]
$0 to $1,000	20 percent of net taxable	1 percent of net taxable.
$1,000 to $2,000	20 percent income	$10 plus income 2 percent.
$2,000 to $4,000	$400 plus 22 percent over $2,000	$30 plus 3 percent over $2,000.
$4,000 to $6,000	$840 plus 26 percent over $4,000	$90 plus 4 percent over $4,000.
$10,000 to $12,000	$2,640 plus 38 percent over $10,000	$390 plus 7 percent over $10,000.
$12,000 to $14,000	$3,400 plus 43 percent over $12,000	$530 plus 8 percent over $12,000.
$14,000 to $16,000	$4,250 plus 47 percent over $14,000	$690 plus 9 percent over $14,000.
$16,000 to $18,000	$5,200 plus 50 percent over $16,000	$870 plus 10 percent over $16,000.
$18,000 to $20,000	$6,200 plus 53 percent over $18,000	$1,070 plus 11 percent over $18,000.
$20,000 to $22,000	$7,260 plus 56 percent over $20,000	$1,290 plus 12 percent over $20,000.
$22,000 to $26,000	$8,380 plus 59 percent over $22,000	$1,530 plus 13 percent over $22,000.
$26,000 to $32,000	$10,740 plus 62 percent over $26,000	$2,050 plus 14 percent over $26,000.
$32,000 to $38,000	$14,460 plus 65 percent over $32,000	$2,890 plus 15 percent over $32,000.
$38,000 to $44,000	$18,360 plus 69 percent over $38,000	$3,790 plus 16 percent over $38,000.
$44,000 to $50,000	$22,500 plus 72 percent over $44,000	$4,750 plus 17 percent over $44,000.
$50,000 to $60,000	$26,820 plus 75 percent over $50,000	$5,770 plus 18 percent over $50,000.
$60,000 to $70,000	$34,320 plus 78 percent over $60,000	$7,570 plus 19 percent over $60,000.
$70,000 to $80,000	$42,120 plus 81 percent over $70,000	$9,470 plus 20 percent over $70,000.
$80,000 to $90,000	$50,220 plus 84 percent over $80,000	$11,470 plus 21 percent over $80,000.
$90,000 to $100,000	$58,620 plus 87 percent over $90,000	$13,576 plus 22 percent over $90,000.
$100,000 to $150,000	$67,320 plus 89 percent over $100,000	$15,770 plus 23 percent over $100,000.
$150,000 to $200,000	$111,820 plus 90 percent over $150,000	$27,270 plus 24 percent over $150,000.
$200,000 and over	$156,820 plus 91 percent over $200,000	$39,270 plus 25 percent over $200,000.

[1] Comparison prepared by Roger J. Moure, Arlington, Va.

Mr. Speaker, the adoption of the proposed Reed-Dirksen amendment would help every segment of our economy. It would relieve the strain upon family budgets, on small and independent business and upon the American farmers as well.

The savings to the American taxpayers are estimated at not less than $10 billion a year in income taxes alone. Now you will ask how can we offset these savings to the taxpayers and still carry on the necessary and normal functions of Government?

The answer is right at hand and needs only congressional action.

Mr. Speaker, on June 30, 1955, the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government, created by Public Law 108, 83d Congress, wound up its work and submitted a report to Congress in which recommended savings of not less than $8,565,100,000 a year for the next 4 fiscal years were listed: These savings would be effected through detailed reorganizations as follows:

Budget and accounting	$4,000,000,000
Depot utilization (defense forces)	253,000,000
Federal medical services	290,000,000
Lending, guaranteeing, insurance	200,000,000
Overseas economic operations	360,000,000
Paperwork management	288,300,000
Personnel and civil service	48,500,000
Real-property management	185,000,000
Personnel problems, Defense Department	388,800,000
Food and clothing procurement	$400,000,000
Transportation economies	151,500,000
Use and disposal of surplus property	2,000,000,000
Recommended possible savings	8,565,100,000

This Commission report highlights the need for drastic reorganizations to reduce the bureaucracy which rides the backs of all our taxpayers and all our enterprises large and small. It is pertinent to observe, Mr. Speaker, that in the 25 years between 1930 and 1955, while the population of the United States increased approximately 30 percent, employment in the Federal Government's executive branch increased by more than 300 percent and the payrolls increased even faster than that to the amazing total of $10,400,000,000 in 1955 compared with $1,100,273,000 in 1930.

CUT OUT FOREIGN AID TO IRON CURTAIN SYMPATHIZERS AND COOPERATORS

Mr. Speaker, if we would adopt the recommendation of the Hoover Commission and also cut out the foreign-aid programs for countries sympathetic and cooperating with the Russians, we could reduce taxes as envisioned by the Reed-Dirksen proposed constitutional amendment.

BALANCING THE BUDGET WOULD HELP, TOO

And, Mr. Speaker, of course there can be no doubts about savings that would be effectuated with a balanced budget as required under the proposed Byrd-Bridges constitutional amendment. We now pay nearly $7 billion a year in interest on the public debt—an amount greater than the cost of Government in any peacetime year prior to 1937.

Mr. Speaker, the rates of taxes levied upon incomes and the failure in peacetime to balance the Federal budgets have had their dual effects upon our entire economic structure. Changes in the internal revenue laws have been followed by changes in the price indexes at the wholesale and consumer levels. Every dollar added to the tax burden is reflected by movements upward in the price indexes which reflect a decreased purchasing power of the dollar. Thus the tides of inflation rise and fall, but seeming always rising to new heights as indicated by the special table which follows, showing the price indexes and surplus or deficits in the 22 years prior to 1913 when the 16th amendment became effective, and in the 43 years from 1913 to 1955 inclusive since the 16th amendment became effective.

NOTE.—The relative purchasing power of the dollar can be ascertained for any year by dividing the wholesale price index into 10,000. Thus in 1890 the dollar was worth $1.77⁹⁄₁₀ in purchasing power while the 1955 dollar was worth but $0.51⁵⁄₁₀₀.

Meeting the Problems of Our Older People

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM G. BRAY
OF INDIANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. BRAY. Mr. Speaker, the problems of America's aged have attracted an increasing amount of attention in recent years. As the life span has increased, the number of persons over age 65 has grown until they now form twice as big a percentage of our population as they did in 1900. In addition, the many private and governmental retirement plans have removed them from the labor force and created a distinct group with special problems.

The great extension in private pension plans, the Federal social-security and old-age assistance programs have made great strides in meeting the financial needs of our senior citizens. Many older persons do not receive an income adequate to their needs, but the day is approaching when few will live in need.

A start has been made in meeting the housing needs of oldsters, who have great difficulty in financing a home and must often live in substandard housing. The medical needs of these people are being met with increasing efficiency, and the fruits of the remarkable medical research of the last generation are being shared with those who often have the greatest physical problems.

But however essential these needs may be, to live usefully and happily in advanced years a person must have things to do. After an active life of earning a living and raising a family a person cannot be happy with nothing to occupy him. There are vast untapped resources in these older people which are going unused. In our own acquaintance we all know people who have made the golden years happy, productive ones. That a great many oldsters do not is the result of many factors, most of which can be changed by simple interest and cooperation.

In general our education is directed toward two-thirds of our life; the latter part is neglected. In even our grade and high schools we should study the latter part of life which is inevitable, unless we die prematurely. We should work toward making that part of life beautiful and happy so that we may approach it with confidence and expectation and not fear. We need to learn and know more about the autumn years from every aspect. We need to understand the problems of that period when we are young as well as when we are old. Each individual is unique, with his own characteristics and needs, whether he is 20 or 70. There are an infinite variety of activities in which older folks are interested when an opportunity is presented to them.

Cooperation and encouragement can go a long way in aiding these people to find these useful outlets. Often very little money is needed, and some of the activities become self-supporting. But progress is much greater when it is organized and when a group is formed which allows concerted effort.

It has been effectively stated that retirement should not be considered as a cessation of activities and interests but as a changing of activities and interests. An increasing number of elderly people live a happier richer life in their changing of interests and may even lead a more productive life in their new endeavors.

One of my most pleasant associations is with the Borrowed Time Club, composed of men and women who have exceeded the allotted span of years. Formed in Bloomington about 7 years ago, it has done a remarkable job in expanding the horizons of its members and in interesting the community in its activities. It has concentrated on the positive side of old age, and has made the most of its potential.

When the State of Indiana took congnizance of the problems of older people by establishing a commission on the aging and aged, Dr. Frank Beck, founder of the Borrowed Time Club, was named as its chairman. A better qualified man could not have been found.

The first State conference of the Indiana commission will be held in Bloomington October 4, 5, and 6. It is hoped that this conference will be the first step in stimulating statewide activity which will increase the usefulness and happiness of our 400,000 Hoosiers over age 65. Those interested in further information concerning the conference may write: Conference for the Aged, Indiana University, Bloomington, Ind.

I am pleased that seventh district people are taking a part in this undertaking and I wish them every successs.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. OLIN E. TEAGUE
OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. TEAGUE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, may I call to the attention of the membership of the House some salient facts to which I am sure most of you will wholeheartedly subscribe.

The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations is important today, and will become increasingly important with time. The United States should help elect as director of that organization a highly competent person. The reasons for such a desirability are too numerous to mention. The director should be a man who knows agriculture from top to bottom; he should be an outstanding businessman and one with broad experience in diplomacy and foreign affairs. To wrap up all of these qualifications in one man is almost desiring to do the impossible. But look at our former colleague, the honorable Miguel Elizalde—he is a natural for this job; he is an outstanding businessman; a legislator of proven ability; a diplomat of vast experience—who has a personal acquaintanceship with more foreign dignitaries than most any man I know. And what about farming: he has been a successful farmer since boyhood in the Philippines. And, not only that, he operates successfully a large farm in the State of Maryland. He knows eastern and western agriculture.

Again I say—he is a natural for this world leadership in agriculture.

Republican Social Security Record

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. DANIEL A. REED
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, the Eisenhower administration has compiled a magnificent record in the field of social security. The system has been strengthened, its finances put on a sounder basis, the benefits increased, and its protection extended for the first time to many millions of Americans. It was in the field of social security that the Republican Party, when it took power after nearly 20 years out of office, demonstrated once and for all that its policies were forward-looking and that its domestic program was based upon a fundamental and deep-rooted concern for human welfare.

The social-security legislation which has just become law contains some very significant changes, particularly with regard to the payment of disability benefits and the lowering of the benefit age for women. This legislation had bipartisan support in the Congress. After the legislation had passed the House, the administration quite properly evidenced concern over some aspects of the bill. It will be recalled that the Committee on Ways and Means which has jurisdiction over social-security legislation and which initially developed this legislation had refused to hold public hearings on the matter. Thus, this legislation, involving billions of dollars and the economic security of millions of Americans and their families, was developed in closed, secret sessions. The Republican minority of the committee strenuously objected to this procedure on the ground that it did not safeguard the vital interest of millions of Americans. This protest was a matter of public record.

As part of the Republican protest against the secret proceedings in which this legislation was developed, it was pointed out that there were a number of other areas in the social-security law to which consideration should be given. Among these was an increase in minimum benefits and a further liberalization in the so-called work clause which reduces an individual's benefit if he continues in gainful employment after 65.

In view of the method by which this legislation was considered, it was not surprising that the administration, which after all is responsible for administering the law, discovered certain problems under the bill as it passed the House. As a result, very lengthy public consideration was given the bill in the Senate and very substantial improvements made. Among these improvements were a very large reduction in cost, the establishment of a special trust fund to handle the financing of the disability-insurance program, and a smaller tax increase to finance the new program. There is no question but that a sounder law resulted from these changes.

Mr. Speaker, I would like at this point to recall some of the more important provisions of the administration social-security program which was enacted as the Social Security Act Amendments of 1954. I have a personal interest in that law, not only because it clearly symbolizes the Republican record in this field, but because I personally sponsored the legislation.

I. EXTENSION OF COVERAGE

First. Farmers: The Republican Social Security Act Amendments of 1954 extended social-security coverage for the first time to self-employed farm owners and operators. This meant that old-age and survivors insurance protection has been extended to about 3.6 million farmers, their wives, and their children.

Second. Farm workers: The law also extended coverage to about 2 million farm workers. The 1954 law extended this same protection to those farm workers who earn $100 or more in the course of a year from one employer. Unfortunately, some of these same individuals whom we brought into the system in 1954 will now be removed from coverage as a result of the new 1956 law.

Third. Professional groups: The law extended social-security coverage to accountants, architects, engineers, and morticians. Lawyers and dentists would also have been covered by the bill as I introduced it and as it passed the House. These individuals will now be covered under the 1956 law.

Fourth. Ministers: The law covered ministers and members of religious orders, whether self-employed or employees, if they elect individually for coverage on the same basis as self-employed individuals. It was estimated that this amendment would extend coverage to about 260,000 persons.

Fifth. State and local employees: The 1954 law extended coverage to the employees of State and local governments who were covered by State and local retirement systems—other than policemen and firemen—under voluntary agreements between the States and Federal Government, if a majority of the members of the system voted in a referendum in favor of coverage. There were about 3.5 million persons in this group.

Sixth. Domestic workers: The law extended coverage to domestic workers in private homes—and others who perform work not in the course of the employer's place of business—who are paid $50 in cash wages by an employer in a calendar quarter, regardless of the 24-day test required in the prior law. This provision extended coverage to about 250,000 persons.

Seventh. Miscellaneous: The law also extended social security coverage to the following groups for the first time:

(a) American citizens employed outside the United States by foreign subsidiaries of American companies, under voluntary agreements between the Federal Government and the parent American company—about 100,000.

(b) Homeworkers who were excluded from coverage as employees—whether or not they were covered as self-employed persons—because their services were not subject to State licensing laws—about 100,000.

(c) Employees engaged in fishing and related activities, on vessels of 10 net tons or less or on shore—about 50,000.

(d) American citizens employed by American employers on vessels and aircraft of foreign registry.

(e) Cotton-gin workers.

The following is a breakdown of the additional coverage provided by the Republican social security law of 1954: 3,600,000 farmer operators, 2,100,000 farmworkers, 200,00 domestic workers, 3,500,000 State and local employees, 250,000 ministers, 100,000 homeworkers, 50,000 fishermen, 100,000 employees of foreign subsidiaries, 50,000 in employment not in course of trade or business, 100,000 professional self-employed, and 150,000 Federal employees; totaling 10,200,000.

II. INCREASE IN BENEFITS

First. More than 6.5 million persons then on the benefit rolls had benefits increased as of September 1, 1954. The average increase for retired workers was about $6 a month, with proportionate increases for dependents and survivors. The range in primary insurance amounts for those then on the rolls became $30 to $98.50, as compared to $25 to $85 under the then existing law.

Second. Persons who retired or died in the future would, in general, have their benefits computed by the following new formula under the 1954 law: 55 percent of the first $110 of average monthly wage—rather than $100 as in prior law—plus 20 percent of the next $240—rather than 15 percent of the next $200. Thus, an individual's retirement benefit was made as high as $108.50 a month, and he and his wife together would receive as much as $162.75 in retirement benefits. These benefits have not been increased by the 1956 law.

Third. The minimum monthly benefit amount for a retired worker was increased to $30, and the minimum amount payable where only one survivor is entitled to benefits on the deceased insured person's earning, was made $30. This minimum benefit was not increased by the 1956 law.

Fourth. The maximum monthly family benefit of $168.75 was increased to $200; the provision of the then existing law that total family benefits could not exceed 80 percent of the worker's average monthly wage would not reduce total family benefits below 1½ times the insured worker's primary insurance amount, or $50, whichever is the greater.

III. EARNINGS BASE

The total annual earnings on which benefits will be computed and contributions paid was raised from $3,600 to $4,200. This has not been changed.

IV. COMPUTATION OF BENEFITS

The individual became entitled under the 1954 law to drop out from the computation of his average monthly wage for benefit purposes up to 5 years of his lowest earnings.

V. RETIREMENT TEST

The earnings limitation was removed entirely at age 72—instead of at 75, as under prior law. For beneficiaries under age 72, the earnings limitation was made the same for wage earners and self-employed persons. A beneficiary can earn as much as $1,200 in a year from covered work without loss of benefits. He loses a month's benefit for each unit of $80—or fraction thereof—of covered earnings in excess of $1,200, but in no case can he lose benefits for months in which he neither earns more than $80 in wages nor renders substantial services in self-employment. Beneficiaries engaged in noncovered work outside the United States have their benefits withheld for any month in which they worked on 7 or more days.

No further liberalization of the work test was considered by the last Congress.

VI. ELIGIBILITY FOR BENEFITS

(a) As an alternative to the then existing requirements for fully insured status, it was provided that an individual would be fully insured if all the quarters elapsing after 1954 and up to the quarter of his death or attainment of age 65 were quarters of coverage, provided he had at least 6 quarters of coverage after 1954.

(b) It was provided that benefits would be paid to the surviving aged widow, widowed mother, and children, or parents of any individual who died after 1939 and prior to September 1, 1950, and had at least 6 quarters of coverage.

VII. PRESERVATION OF BENEFIT RIGHTS FOR DISABLED

The 1954 law provided that the period during which an individual was under an extended total disability would be excluded in determining his insured status and the amount of benefits payable to him upon retirement or to his survivors in the event of his death. Only disabilities lasing more than 6 months would be taken into account. Determinations of disabilities generally would be made by State vocational rehabilitation agencies or other appropriate State agencies pursuant to agreements with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare.

VIII. RECOMPUTATION OF BENEFITS FOR WORK AFTER ENTITLEMENT

It was also provided that an individual may have his benefit recomputed to take into account additional earnings after entitlement if he has covered earnings of more than $1,200 in a calendar year after 1953 and after the year in which his benefit was last computed.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, the Republican social security record is one of solid accomplishment. It is a proud record, one which guarantees a more secure future for millions of Americans and their families.

Restoration of the First Newspaper Printshop in the Indiana Territory

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM G. BRAY

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. BRAY. Mr. Speaker, a noteworthy step in the preservation and restoration of one of the great cultural landmarks of the Midwest will take place in Vincennes, Ind., on Sunday, October 7, 1956, at 2 p. m. At that time the Lincoln-Free Press Memorial Association will formally dedicate the restored printshop where the first newspaper of the Indiana Territory, the Indiana Gazette, was published on July 4, 1804, at Vincennes, then the capital of the Indiana Territory. At that time the Indiana Territory included the States of Indiana, Illinois, and parts of Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota. In 1807 the name of the paper was changed to the Western Sun. It is now the Vincennes Sun Commercial, one of the outstanding daily papers of Indiana. It is owned by Central Newspapers, Inc., of which Mr. and Mrs. Eugene C. Pulliam have the controlling interests.

This dedication is the culmination of the efforts of some of Indiana's outstanding citizens, who recognized that in connection with the first publication of a newspaper in the Indiana Territory was interwoven historymaking news and people.

Elihu Stout, who established this newspaper and operated it for many years, came to Vincennes in 1804. After a conference with William Henry Harrison, then Indiana Territorial Governor, he opened his printshop, using an old hand-operated Ramage press. The equipment is said to have been transported by water to Vincennes, and the supplies were hauled by horsedrawn cart over the buffalo trace. Issue No. 1, of volume I is lost, but the front page of issue No. 2 contains a copy of an act of Congress which so well illustrates the times of its issue. It is a law that has to do with Revolutionary War pensions and is signed by Nathaniel Macon, Speaker of the House of Representatives and Aaron Burr, Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate, and approved March 3, 1804, by President Thomas Jefferson.

Among the early books of Indiana printed in this shop was "Laws Adopted by the Governor and Judges of the Indiana Territory, at their Second and Third Sessions, Begun and Held at Vincennes 20th, January, 1802 and February 16, 1803". In 1816, Stout printed "The Constitution of the State of Indiana," with the imprint: "Vincennes; printed by Elihu Stout, 1816." It is impossible at this late date to comprehend the vast influence in government, education, culture, and progress that this early printing press and newspaper have had in the development of the great Midwest. Abraham Lincoln saw a printing press for the first time when he visited the shop while passing through Vincennes on his way to Illinois.

This great job of restoring this printshop which has meant so much to the free people of America was started several years ago by Judge Curtis Shake of Vincennes. Other leaders in the project have included: Ross H. Garrigus, editor of the Vincennes Sun Commercial; Isaac K. Beckes, president of Vincennes University; Florence G. Watts; Ralph F. Meeks; Howard Greenlee; all of Vincennes, and a score of others. A Ramage press of the same type used in this early newspaper office, 1 of only 7 known to be in existence, has been presented by the John Wanamaker store, of Philadelphia, as a gift to this memorial.

People of United States Indebted to Polish Nation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. DON HAYWORTH
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HAYWORTH. Mr. Speaker, the people and the Government of these United States are greatly indebted to the Polish nation. Over long periods throughout our history hundreds of thousands of her finest citizens have emigrated to our shores.

Everyone recognizes the substantial integrity and fine character of those who have had the courage to leave their familiar environment in Europe and carve for themselves a new life in America. This emigration started long before the founding of our country and reached its climax in the decades before World War II.

In my district are many thousands of Polish people and their descendants. No one will deny that no finer group can be found in our national life. They are a most religious people. Their family life is outstanding, and the care they give their older people is remarkable. In the city of Flint is a most remarkable institution known as Dom Polski. It is one of the most outstanding of Flint's civic institutions.

Since the Polish people have become so valued and significant a part of America and of our American heritage, it is only natural that all of us should have great concern for the Polish people in Europe. Save for the Jews, no people in history have suffered more than have the people of Poland.

Throughout modern history Poland has suffered from one ruthless conqueror to another. The one bright spot over these many years was provided by the fairmindedness and determination of Woodrow Wilson. Following the First World War, and at last given the breath of freedom, the Polish people proved their ability to govern themselves and establish a sound economy. Now again under the domination of Russia—and this time in the clutches of communism—they have resisted, as much as any people could, the oppression of their Communist masters.

We, in America, with so many Polish people firmly in our midst as part and parcel of the American family, ought never admit that the situation now existing can be permanent. We have no way of knowing what opportunity for freedom may come to Poland. But when that time comes America must be at her side.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement prepared by me.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President, in the final moments of the 84th Congress I want to take the opportunity to express my regrets that two of the most able members of the House Foreign Affairs Committee will not be returning in the 85th Congress.

I need not elaborate, for I know that it is only too evident who these two great statesmen are—the Honorable JAMES P. RICHARDS, chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, and the Honorable THURMOND CHATHAM, member of the Foreign Affairs Committee. Both of these distinguished Congressmen will be returning to their home States of South Carolina and North Carolina, respectively.

Mr. RICHARDS is retiring after 24 years of outstanding and distinguished congressional service. Mr. CHATHAM has served his Nation and State with great competence and ability over the past 8 years.

It will be difficult to see them leave the Washington scene, but I sincerely hope that they will be back many times in the days to come, to visit with us and to give us the benefit of their sound advice, which I remember so well from our years of service together in the House of Representatives.

I have served with both gentlemen on the Committee on Foreign Affairs and I can say without qualification that seldom have I worked with two men of such untiring energy, wise statesmanship, and understanding. Both men have enviable records of service to the Nation and their States.

The vacancies created by the retirement of these two Members will be difficult to fill. The record and standards set down in the field of world affairs by these two great statesmen will make the task somewhat easier for those who follow in their roles as members of the distinguished House Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The Congress, the Nation, and the free world are better off because of the accomplishments and records of these two great Americans from the Carolinas. Both DICK RICHARDS and THURMOND CHATHAM will be remembered with gratitude and affection in the years to come.

It is not goodby to these two friends of long standing; it is only "so long."

Nonmilitary Operations of NATO

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM E. JENNER
OF INDIANA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. JENNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD excerpts from documentary material assembled by me to indicate the extent of the nonmilitary operations of NATO.

There being no objection, the excerpts were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATO POLITICAL, ECONOMIC, AND CULTURAL ACTIVITIES

This Congress remains the legislative branch of our National Government until the 31st of December. For every hour of that time we are responsible for our country.

I call your attention to the fact that significant developments are likely to take place, in foreign affairs, in this period, when our attention is centered on the national election.

Important developments are already taking place in NATO.

We have recently heard many references to plans for expanding the political, economic, and cultural activities of NATO.

This is curious, because NATO has, from its inception, been given political, economic, and cultural responsibilities, and has been developing the governmental organs needed to put them into effect.

The following quotations are meant to assemble in one place some of the basic documentary material which many people have been asking me to send them in connection with the following problems:

1. Implementation of article 2 of the treaty, giving NATO political, economic, and cultural powers and responsibilities.

2. Relation of NATO with the U. S. S. R.

3. The propaganda program for support of this transformation.

I hope every member of this body will follow with the closest attention every bit of the limited information we are allowed to see, on the growth of this new star in the galaxy of international organizations, operating above, and in restraint of, our constitutional government.

SOURCES

The principal sources of information on developments of NATO policy and governmental machinery are:

1. NATO. The First 5 Years, 1949–54, by Lord Ismay, Secretary General of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, Paris, France, 1954.

2. NATO letter. North Atlantic Treaty Organization, Information Division, Paris 16. Monthly. Available from the United States Department of State.

3. Reports of the United States Department of State and the International Cooperation Administration.

Recommendations of the NATO Council to the member governments, dealing with military affairs and other matters, are classified, and therefore not available to Congress, the press, or the public.

MILITARY ACTIVITIES

The military accomplishments of NATO have been fully discussed elsewhere.

We may note, as evidence of the trend, first the loss of the northern anchor of NATO, when the Icelandic Parliament asked the United States to withdraw its troops from NATO's military bases but to continue paying for them. Second, we may note the weakening of the southeastern anchor, with the split between Greece and Turkey over Cyprus, the rapprochement of Yugoslavia with the Soviet Union, and the neutralization of the Austrian spearhead between Germany and Italy. Third, we may list the series of delays in the rearming of West Germany.

I quote from the Chicago Sunday Tribune of July 22, 1956, the following question and the answer by Henry Wales, Paris bureau chief, during the Tribune roundtable conference in London:

"Question. What does France think about NATO and SHAPE?

"Answer. I don't think any Europeans except such individuals as have soft jobs in NATO and SHAPE (Supreme Headquarters Allied Powers in Europe) take them seriously. At SHAPE's recent fifth birthday celebration about 400 generals and colonels watched a parade of 84 soldiers of the 15 nations which are members, with a half a dozen French gendarmes pinch hitting for Iceland, which has no army."

The political, economic, and cultural activities of NATO have always been important, but they grow increasingly important as military activities dwindle.

Congressman STEWART L. UDALL, of Arizona, who was 1 of 6 House Members at the NATO Parliamentary Conference last summer, said, "As a peacetime military economic alliance, NATO is without a precedent in history" (House Committee on Foreign Affairs, hearings on Bow resolution of repeal of Status of Forces Treaty, 1956, p. 499).

CIVIL POWERS IN THE NATO TREATY

Article 2 of the NATO Treaty reads as follows:

"The parties shall contribute toward the further development of peaceful and friendly international relations by strengthening their free institutions, by bringing about a better understanding of the principles upon which these institutions are founded, and by promoting conditions of stability and well-being.

"They seek to eliminate conflict in their international economic policies and will encourage economic collaboration between any or all of them."

The first clause, "strengthening their free institutions," gives NATO political powers. The third, "promoting conditions of stability and well-being," gives them duties in the field of social welfare. The clause about economic collaboration gives them economic responsibilities. The phrase about "eliminating conflict" in economic policies establishes the goal of a directed, rather than a free and competitive economy.

The phrase "bringing about a better understanding of the principles upon which these institutions are founded" is a mandate for NATO to engage in propaganda activities.

This statement of objectives was ratified by the United States and other parties, as indicated in article 11, which says the treaty shall be ratified by the parties "in accordance with their respective constitutional processes." This section refers to the method of ratification only, and does not imply that the constitutional system of any of the parties is unchanged by ratification.

This treaty was signed at Washington on April 4, 1949.

NATO AREA

The NATO area is defined in article 6 of the treaty in connection with the area involved in event of armed attack.

The NATO area includes—

"The territory of any of the parties in Europe or North America.

"The Algerian departments of France.

"The occupation forces of any party in Europe.

"The islands under the jurisdiction of any party in the North Atlantic area north of the Tropic of Cancer.

"The vessels or aircraft in this area of any of the parties."

NATO civil activities thus may apply to all of the United States, including Alaska, Western Europe, French North Africa, the territory of Turkey in Asia, and possibly to wider areas.

DEVELOPMENTS, 1949–55

We can follow the general development of NATO's political, economic, and cultural activities from documents published by the State Department and the International Cooperation Administration.

I quote from a pamphlet, NATO—Its Development and Significance, published by the ICA, in September 1955:

"While first priority has been given to the strength of their military defenses, the NATO countries are giving attention to cooperation for building and maintaining their collective political, economic, and moral strength" (p. 8).

"Since the economic capabilities of all the NATO countries including the United States are limited, NATO is constantly concerned with the problem of balancing political and economic needs against defense needs. The NATO agencies must offer whatever advice and assistance they can contribute to the solution of the difficult economic problems produced by the defense program and must make sure that defense plans themselves remain within the bounds of realism (p. 11).

All NATO governments have accepted the principle stressed by Secretary of State Dulles that NATO planning should not be based on short-term, emergency measures but should instead be adapted to the long haul. In other words, NATO is seeking types and levels of military power that can be maintained over a long period of years without intolerable political or economic risks. The NATO countries each year conduct an annual review in which the defense plans and economic capabilities of all member countries are jointly studied by member governments for the purpose of keeping NATO's total defense program balanced and realistic.

"While NATO has given top priority to defense problems, it offers many opportunities for useful cooperation in other fields. Article 2 of the treaty explicitly calls for cooperation in political, economic, and similar matters and the NATO organization structure affords readymade channels for the practical development of such cooperation" (p. 11).

"The Council is assisted by a number of committees that work on specialized problems. Some of these committees are formed to do one particular job and are temporary. In addition there are about 20 permanent civilian committees, which deal with such matters as defense production, labor mobility, civil and military budgets, wartime commodity problems, civil defense, plans for mobilizing ocean shipping and inland surface transport and information and cultural relations" (p. 16).

"Equally significant is the development of NATO's civil structure which not only guides and supports the military program but also provides a channel for cooperation in other fields of activity. Particularly important has been the growth of the practice of regular political consultation within NATO, which helps all member governments to understand one another's special problems and interests and to harmonize their global policies. There has also been useful cooperation on information, economic and cultural matters, emergency planning, labor problems and other non-military activities" (p. 23).

1949—WASHINGTON

We can trace these developments year by year, from communiques and resolutions issued by the North Atlantic Council.

The first session of the council took place in Washington on the 17th of September 1949.

Lord Ismay says:

"At this first session the Council recognized that comprehensive questions of military production and supply, and of economic and financial factors, would have to be studied. At their second session held in Washington on the 18th of November 1949, it was decided to set up two new agencies; namely, a Defense Financial and Economic Committee, and a Military Production and Supply Board.

"The Defense Financial and Economic Committee was to be composed generally of Finance Ministers and to report direct to the Council. It was to have, in particular, the following tasks:

"1. to develop, in coordination with the Military Committee (including the Standing Group) and the Military Production and Supply Board, overall financial and economic guides to, and limits of, future defense programs which North Atlantic Treaty countries as a group and individually should undertake within available financial and economic resources.

"2. to appraise the financial and economic impact on member countries of major individual defense projects formulated by the Military Production and Supply Board or the Military Committee (including the Standing Group); to consider also the availability of raw materials, capital equipment and manpower; and to make recommendations as to action on such projects.

"3. to recommend financial arrangements for executing military defense plans, and particularly financial arrangements for the interchange among North Atlantic Treaty countries of military equipment, surplus stocks, or materials and equipment to be used in producing military equipment.

"4. to measure and to recommend steps to meet the foreign exchange costs of imports of materials and equipment from nonmember countries required by defense programs under the North Atlantic Treaty.

"5. to consider, as may be found desirable and appropriate, plans for the mobilization of economic and financial resources in time of emergency" (Ismay, pp. 25–27).

1950—LONDON

Specific implementation of article 2 was made by formal resolution at the fourth session of the London Conference of the North Atlantic Council, May 15–18, 1950.

The resolution was needed because a year's experience had shown that there was "insufficient exchange of views" on the political side.

The resolution read:

"In view of this situation, the Council will in particular undertake the following tasks:

"(a) Study the inter-relationship of the various programs to support the plans for the defense of the North Atlantic area and ensure coordination of the work of the Defense Committee, and all other bodies established under the North Atlantic Treaty Organization;

"(b) Recommend to governments the steps necessary to insure that effect is given to the coordinated plans prepared for the defense of the North Atlantic area;

"(c) Exchange views on political matters of common interest within the scope of the treaty;

"(d) Promote and coordinate public information in furtherance of the objectives of the treaty while leaving responsibility for national programs to each country;

"(e) Consider what further action should be taken under article 2 of the treaty, taking into account the work of existing agencies in this field" (Ismay, p. 184).

1951—OTTAWA

The North Atlantic Council said in a formal declaration, at its meeting at Ottawa, September 20, 1954:

"The peoples of the North Atlantic community are united under the * * * treaty to preserve their freedom and to develop their common heritage of democracy, liberty, and the rule of law * * *

"They will continue to work closely together to consolidate the North Atlantic community. All obstacles which hinder such cooperation on an equal footing should be removed * * *

"The strengthening of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization in the past 2 years has developed in the minds of the peoples a strong sense of their common interests and ideals. There is a desire within the North Atlantic community to meet specific needs in all fields where close collaboration will advance the welfare of the community. * * *

"A clear sense of the direction in which the community is developing should make it easier to take practical steps toward that end.

"The Council has therefore decided to set up a Ministerial Committee composed of representatives from Belgium, Canada, Italy, Netherlands, and Norway, to consider the further strengthening of the North Atlantic community and especially the implementation of article 2 of the North Atlantic Treaty.

"The Committee, assisted by the Council Deputies, will, in particular consider and make recommendations to the Council on the following matters:

"(a) Coordination and frequent consultation on foreign policy, having particular regard to steps designed to promote peace;

"(b) Closer economic, financial and social cooperation, designed to promote conditions of economic stability and well-being, both during and after the present period of the defense effort, within the North Atlantic Treaty Organization or through other agencies;

"(c) Collaboration in the fields of culture and public information.

"In these and other ways the Council will build up the inner strength of the North Atlantic community, without implicating the work of other international organizations which promote the same objectives.

"The Council endorses the recent declaration of the Organization for European Economic Cooperation which called on all sections of the European community to increase production and play their part in the collective effort for peace and well-being.

"In developing the North Atlantic community, the Council will act in conformity with and seek to strengthen the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations. It is only by the work and by the enlightened understanding of the free peoples everywhere that the cause of freedom and democracy will be upheld against any challenge" (Ismay, pp. 201–203).

1951—ROME

The final communique of the eighth session of the North Atlantic Council, November 24–28, 1951, stated:

The report stressed the importance of further developing the habit of consultation on matters of common concern. The Council directed that fuller study be given to a number of proposals relating to economic, social and cultural matters and to the coordination of the activities of NATO civilian agencies with those of other international organizations. In this connection the Council recommended that particular consideration be given to facilitating the movement of labor from member countries with excess manpower to others where it could be effectively utilized" (Ismay, p. 190).

"Labor migration" and "manpower mobility" are similar to problems we refer to as "immigration."

Lord Ismay reports that changes made in American immigration policy have been recommended on the ground of "strengthening the Atlantic community" (Ismay, p. 153).

1952—LISBON

At the very important ninth session of the North Atlantic Council, at Lisbon, February 20–25, 1952, the Council said in its final communique:

"The Council adopted a report of the Atlantic Community Committee, established at its Ottawa meeting. This report emphasized the importance of economic cooperation, the expansion and liberalization of trade, and the possibility of working out closer cooperative arrangements with other bodies, particularly the OEEC. In approving the analysis of the problem of the movement of labor between member countries in the report of the Atlantic Community Committee, the Council acknowledged the importance of this problem and endorsed the resolution of the Temporary Council Committee on this subject. It was agreed that the permanent North Atlantic Treaty Organization should keep this problem under continuous review, and make recommendations for the elimination, by the most effective utilization of manpower resources, of general or specific manpower shortages which hinder defense production. As cooperation in the field covered by the Five Power Atlantic Community Committee is of direct and common concern to each member of the Council, it was decided that the future work in this sphere should be transferred to the Council" (Ismay, pp. 191–192).

Lord Ismay reports further on the Lisbon meeting:

"The Council also considered the report of the Atlantic Community Committee. This document, which covered topics ranging from political consultation to the liberalization of trade, from the mobility of labor to cultural relations, did not pretend to be a blueprint for NATO action; but it rendered useful service in sorting out the problems to which the Alliance should devote its attention in the future" (Ismay, p. 47).

Chairman of this Atlantic Community Committee was Hon. Lester Pearson, now Foreign Minister of Canada, and one of the three wise men appointed by NATO in 1956 to work out the implementation of article 2. In 1952 the Pearson Committee reported, according to Lord Ismay, that "little ground had been left untrodden, either in the economic, social, or cultural fields" (Ismay, p. 151).

1952—PARIS

The Ministerial Meeting of the North Atlantic Council, at Paris, December 15-17, 1952, said in its final communique:

"The council received a progress report by the Secretary General, which outlined the structure of the International Secretariat. It described the work accomplished in the last 8 months by the council, meeting regularly through the permanent civilian and military authorities. It also dealt with the constructure work of the Council's Committee on Civil Defense, and of those concerned with nonmilitary aspects of the Treaty covered by article 2, such as overpopulation and social, cultural, and informational matters" (Ismay, p. 192).

The council also passed the following resolution at the Paris meeting of the North Atlantic Council and the Ministers of Foreign Affairs, Defense, Economics, and Finance:

"Convinced of the necessity of a continuing review and of an adequate solution of economic problems which face member states, not only to provide the defense effort with a firm foundation but also to promote social progress and the ideals of freedom which are the bases of the North Atlantic Community; and

"Having in mind article 2 of the North Atlantic Treaty and the work already initiated within the Organization to give effect to the report of the Committee on the North Atlantic Community, approved by the council at its Lisbon session and particularly as far as overpopulation problems are concerned:

"Agrees that member governments should seek by individual and collective measures to strengthen their political and economic capacities by finding solutions to their problems such as balance of payments, increase of output, internal financial stability and manpower; and that the results of their endeavours should be examined periodically by the council" (1952) (Ismay, p. 194).

THE END OF A PERIOD

Lord Ismay sums up the political achievements of NATO, by 1954:

"The increasing responsibilities assigned to NATO by member governments necessitated the centralization and simplification of the civilian agencies still too complex and scattered despite the measure of coordination already achieved by the Deputies, whose work had been outstanding. Their main triumphs lay in the political field: It was they who practiced and daily developed what might be called the NATO method; that is, the technique whereby the representatives of 12 (later 14) sovereign governments reach unanimous agreement without formal vote. By bringing to bear on their governments the weight of opinion in NATO they assisted the attainment of an agreed common view which normally received the assent of the Council without further ado. For instance, it was largely due to the Deputies that Scandinavian hesitations about the inclusion of Greece and Turkey were overcome; it was they who did the most to obtain agreement on the principle of a German contribution to the defense of the NATO area; and it was they who reached agreement on the financial contribution to be made by governments to NATO military and civilian agencies" (Ismay, p. 48).

Congress has no official access to such agreements on financial contributions to be made by the member governments to NATO military and civilian agencies. Such reports are made to the executive branch, and are classified.

WAR POWERS

NATO has latent powers which may become explicit in time of war or emergency.

Lord Ismay speaks of the need for governments to make extensive preparations, in time of peace, for "the stability of the home front" (p. 142).

This area of operations apparently includes production, raw materials, labor supply, allocation of workers, refugees, and civil defense. Ismay says it is "imperative for partners in any modern alliance to work together in the civilian field." This involves, he says, "the organization and protection of the civil population" and "the direction of civilian activities in time of war" (p. 142).

The NATO Council has a Committee on Civil Organization in Time of War, which has full-time staff members working on "control of mass movements of persons anxious to escape from threatened bombardment," protection of industrial plants and other facilities against sabotage, and medical care, among other problems (p. 143).

NATO has also set up the Planning Board for Ocean Shipping, so that in time of war or emergency (not defined), "the great bulk of ocean-going merchant ships under the flags of NATO countries would be pooled and, for allocation purposes, put at the disposal of an interallied body to be called the Defense Shipping Authority."

This authority will be responsible for "the allocation of ocean-going shipping throughout the whole area controlled by and friendly toward the member governments of NATO, its allies and partners" (Ismay, p. 145).

A large part of American coastal shipping and shipping through the Panama Canal is oceangoing.

Since many NATO members have territory, allies, and dominion partners in Asia, Africa, and Australia, it is difficult to decide what are the limits of NATO's operating area and its authority in this field.

The Board has been making its plans and choosing key personnel so that it will be fully operative at the outbreak of war.

Control of shipping involves in practice control of highways, railroads and ports. NATO has a planning board for control of these facilities in Europe.

NATO is also at work on plans for control of civilian requirements of imported commodities "on a strict austerity basis" (p. 147).

The Council has set up a Food and Agriculture Planning Committee (including agricultural machinery), a Coal and Steel Planning Committee, and an Industrial Raw Materials Planning Committee (p. 148).

They are at work on drafting the necessary governmental decrees, staff requirements for "preparing the measures in peacetime and operating them in wartime," rationing and preparation of the documents for rationing and price controls, including organization "within each country" (Ismay, p. 148).

FURTHER EXPANSION OF NATO

Secretary of State Dulles recently recommended expansion of NATO to "the totality of its meaning." He said:

"No NATO member, I suppose, wishes to drift into some new and ill-defined relationship which could be provocative of future misunderstandings. But the unanimity of our thinking upon the great basic issues makes it apparent that the time has come to advance NATO from its initial phase into the totality of its meaning.

"The North Atlantic Treaty already serves as an indispensable and vital instrument of the Atlantic community. But the time has, I believe, come to consider whether its organization does not need to be further developed if it is adequately to serve the needs of this and coming generations. If that be the common desire of the NATO member nations, the United States will join eagerly in exploring the possibilities which now beckon us forward" (Department of State Bulletin, April 30, 1956, p. 710).

Newspapermen questioned the Secretary of State at his news conferences. Among other points the Secretary stated that the President has the power to conduct foreign relations through whatever persons and means he chooses.

From the transcript of the news conference:

"Question. Mr. Secretary, I believe the United States has always been opposed to the maintenance of political standing groups in NATO as opposed to military groups. Is there any change in that position?

"Answer. Well, the question of whether we make the Atlantic community, through NATO or otherwise, into a body of greater political importance is one of the matters that is being considered. So far there has been no decision by any of the governments concerned to do that. So far, it has been operated primarily as a military alliance, and, while there have been reports from time to time on political matters, those have been primarily for the purpose of keeping the other Ministers informed on matters of interest rather than on the basis of the common position on these matters. We are quite prepared to consider, with an open mind and with the other countries, an evolutionary step which would place greater political responsibility upon representatives of the NATO or the Atlantic community countries.

"Question. Mr. Secretary, do you draw a distinction between NATO and the Atlantic community, when you or the President use those terms? And, if so, what is it, in your mind?

"Answer. There is a difference, I think, in this respect, that NATO is technically a creature of a treaty and that treaty is primarily a military alliance. As far as the treaty itself goes, the provisions of, let's say, article 2 and article 4, which are the two articles which deal with nonmilitary topics, those provisions are rather narrow and rather sketchy. And it may very well be that, if these broader aspects are to be developed, they could be developed through steps which were additional to, or you might say superimposed upon, the provisions of the North Atlantic Treaty. I do not think we need to be limited by the terms of the treaty, because there is within the President an authority to conduct foreign relations, and to negotiate through persons and by means that he chooses. If he chooses to conduct foreign relations through persons who at the same time are members of the NATO Council, he can do so. In other words, they would in a sense be wearing two hats" (Department of State Bulletin, June 4, 1956, p. 926).

At a news conference, the Secretary was asked:

"Question. Mr. Secretary, on the NATO business, could you say whether you have reached any opinion on whether the NATO treaty, as it now stands, has jurisdiction over political questions, if member countries are willing to commit such questions to NATO for consideration?

"Answer. Well, the NATO Council which exists is not only in the form of occasional meetings by the foreign ministers but, also in the form of a permanent council and does now discuss from time to time political matters. The question is whether or not it is important and desirable and agreeable to all concerned to develop that function. It is a function which to some extent is now used. You may recall that prior to the summit meeting, for example, there was a meeting of the ministers that was especially called for that purpose. And then, prior to the meeting of the foreign ministers that was held at Geneva in October-November, there was a meeting. There have been other meetings which have discussed political problems. So that, if we develop this, it would not be really breaking new ground. It would be developing further the ground that has already been broken.

"Question. Is it clear, sir, that the whole idea, as now considered in developing NATO, is entirely in the political field and not in the economic field? Your remarks would indicate that.

"Answer. Well, I cannot speak except for the United States in that respect. Certainly consideration is being given to development in the economic field, and there are certain respects in which it is hard to draw a clear line between what is political and what is economic. Economic policies are often part of your political machinery; and, to that extent, if there was to be a more full discussion of political policies, that would also embrace, I would assume, the economic policies of the member countries insofar as they concern the treaty area.

"Now, as far as being an operating mechanism in the economic field is concerned, it is the view of the United States that there are enough operating mechanisms there. We have the OEEC (Organization for European Economic Cooperation), the EPU (European Payments Union), the GATT (General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade), the International Monetary Fund—all of which are operating agencies in the economic or related financial fields. And there would not seem to be much room or occasion to create a new operating agency. As I say, insofar as economic policies are involved as a part of the policies of the member states, those would be embraced within political exchanges of views.

"I want to emphasize that those are just the views of the United States that I am expressing. I don't know what the views of the other members will be" (transcript of Secretary Dulles' news conference) (Department of State Bulletin, June 25, 1956, p. 1069).

NATO AND THE SOVIET UNION

There is nothing in the North Atlantic Treaty, or in the organizational structure of NATO which requires it to oppose communism or restrict the influence of the Soviet Union or its fifth columns. NATO staff members are "international civil servants," not subject to American security requirements.

Mr. Dulles has stated that, at Geneva, in November 1955, the three western powers offered the U. S. S. R. a treaty of assurance, that is, an overall security treaty against "armed aggression."

Unless defined, this could mean that the NATO powers would be committed to assist the Soviet Union, in the event of an armed uprising from within the satellite countries.

Sir Winston Churchill proposed in May 1956 a grand alliance between the western powers and the Soviet Union, if its change since Stalin's death was sincere.

The NATO letter gives the following account:

"On May 10, Sir Winston Churchill was presented at Aachen with the Charlemagne Prize, for his services to Europe. In his speech of thanks, he said that the main theme of salvation should be the grand alliance between the European powers, the United States, and the British Commonwealth. Russia and the Eastern European States should not be excluded, and this could lead to the solution of grave issues such as the reunification of Germany.

"Much had happened, said Sir Winston, since he last visited Germany to attend the Potsdam conference in 1945. The Soviet Union had pursued a policy dividing her from her wartime allies. Then had followed the historic reconciliation between the United States and the Commonwealth, on the one hand, and West Germany on the other hand, and the formation of NATO. The North Atlantic Treaty, in which Germany was a partner, was a solemn affirmation of the unity of Europe.

"One of the supreme duties and privileges of France, Sir Winston Churchill went on to say, was to bury all bitterness and lead Germany back by the hand into the European family. The French contribution to European unity was very large, and the German reception of it had been invaluable.

"NATO itself was a very striking product. It was the expression of a world wearied of war and determined to build its own organization in such strength and power that there would be peace henceforward. The principle was simple and majestic: We all joined hands and swore to fight the aggressor whoever he might be. A new question, however, had been raised by the recent Russian repudiation of Stalin. If it were sincere, we had a new Russia to deal with, and if this were so he did not see why the new Russia should not join in the spirit of this solemn agreement.

"We must realize, Sir Winston Churchill said, how deep and sincere were Russian anxieties about the safety of her homeland from foreign invasion. In a true unity of Europe, Russia must have her part, and he was glad to see that Poland was already not unaffected by the recent changes in the Russian outlook. Other changes might follow. Czechoslovakia might recover her freedom. Above all, he added, Germany will be reunited.

"Sir Winston Churchill said it would be rash and blameworthy to attempt to solve the problem of European unity, of which German reunification was a vital part, by any violent stroke; the only unity that might come from violence would be a unity of ashes and death. It would be equally fatal for NATO to relax and let apathy overtake what had been achieved in the past 7 years, but he did not regard NATO as the sole effective expression of the moves towards European unity. No one could doubt the usefulness of the Western European Union, the OEEC, the Coal and Steel Community, and the Council of Europe, but he believed that the main theme of salvation should be the grand alliance of European powers, linked with the United States, Canada, and other members of the British Commonwealth.

"The spirit of this arrangement should not exclude Russia and the Eastern European States. 'It may well be that the great issues which perplex us, of which one of the gravest is the reunification of Germany, could then be solved more easily than they can by rival blocs confronting each other with suspicion and hostility,' he said.

"In view of the interest which attaches to any remark of Sir Winston Churchill it is important to bear in mind exactly what he said in this context. This was that if the recent repudiation of Stalin by Soviet leaders was sincere he did not see why 'the new Russia should not join in the spirit of this solemn agreement' (that is, the North Atlantic Treaty).

"This is very far from saying that the U. S. S. R. should soon be invited to accede to the North Atlantic Treaty. M. Molotov, it will be recalled, suggested this at the Berlin Conference of Foreign Ministers in 1954. There are, however, at present insuperable objections to Russia joining NATO. As Mr. Harold Macmillan, then United Kingdom Foreign Secretary, said at the Geneva meeting of Foreign Ministers in Geneva last October:

" 'The answer to this is made plain by the wording of the NATO Treaty itself. NATO is a system of States, sharing common aims and views. Unfortunately, it has not yet been possible for the members to establish common aims and views with the Soviet Union. Therefore, we cannot accept the membership of the Soviet Union in our organization; for since all the decisions of NATO must be unanimous we should be giving the right of veto to a State pursuing different aims and ends. It may not always be true, but we have to face the facts as they are' " (NATO letter, June 1, 1956, pp. 11–12).

STATE DEPARTMENT COMMENT ON THE CHURCHILL PROPOSAL WAS GENERALLY FAVORABLE

"Sir Winston Churchill has stated that, 'if' the Russian repudiation of Stalin is sincere, we have a new Russia to deal with and that, if so, there is no reason why the new Russia should not join in the spirit of the solemn agreement of the North Atlantic Treaty to fight the aggressor, whoever he may be. Sir Winston went on to say that 'that is for the future' and that in the meanwhile we should go forward toward that future by reinforcing patiently and surely the arrangements which we have so far achieved. He also spoke of the vital need for German reunification.

"The first suggestion of Sir Winston is in accord with the proposal which the three western Foreign Ministers made to the Soviet Union at Geneva on October 27, 1955, during the consideration of the linked problems of European security and the reunification of Germany. In this connection, France, the United Kingdom, and the United States proposed a 'treaty of assurance' which contemplated reciprocal renunciation of force and withholding of support from aggressors and an agreement that armed attack in Europe would endanger the peace and security and that all parties would then take appropriate action to meet the common danger. This proposal has never been accepted by the Soviet Union, even as a basis for discussion.

"Sir Winston's second suggestion for 'reinforcing' the arrangements which we now have is a welcome support for the action taken at last week's meeting of the NATO Ministerial Council, which established a committee of three of the Foreign Ministers to study ways and means to improve and extend NATO cooperation in nonmilitary fields and to develop their unity within the Atlantic community.

"The United States welcomes the spirit and substance of Sir Winston's important address on these points" (State Department Bulletin, May 21, 1956, pp. 837–8).

The press questioned Secretary Dulles on the proposal at his news conference:

"Question. Mr. Secretary, last week, as you know, Mr. Churchill made a suggestion that under certain conditions Russia ought to be included in a kind of expanded NATO. And I believe that was the same day that you testified something to the effect that in 10 years or so we might hope to look on the Russians as more respectable citizens. Could you comment first on Winston Churchill's proposal and, second, spell out a little bit more what you meant by your remark?

"Answer. I read quite carefully the full text of what Sir Winston Churchill said, and it seemed to me that he was saying in effect much the same thing which the three western powers had said last November at the Geneva Conference where we met with the Soviet Foreign Minister. At that time we proposed, as part of the European settlement which would bring about the reunification of Germany, that there should be some kind of overall security treaty which would engage the members of NATO, or certain of them, and certain powers on the other side to a comprehensive agreement which would assure that, in the event of armed aggression of any one against the other, we would all stand against the aggressor. That proposal was made by us with the British and the French at the Geneva Conference last November. And, as I say, I interpreted Sir Winston Churchill's remarks as being in essence a repetition of the thought and spirit of those remarks.

"Question. Mr. Secretary, is it correct to interpret the sense of your comments on Mr. Churchill's remarks as being that at Geneva we proposed to the Soviet Union that she participate in a European collective security or European nonaggression pact, that Churchill was at Aachen repeating that proposition or the sense of it, and that the United States is still backing such an invitation of the Soviet Union; that is, to enter a collective nonaggression pact and to come into NATO?

"Answer. I do not want to say whether or not what Churchill said was consciously based upon what had been said at Geneva. It may have been, quite likely was, his own spontaneous thinking. What I pointed out was that it was quite parallel with what we had done at that time. We had proposed what was called then a Treaty of Assurance to cover all of the essential parts of Europe and containing mutual guaranties, consultations, and the like. The United States is still adhering to that position.

"Question. Mr. Secretary, let me clarify that. I want to understand it completely. Churchill, I understood, at Aachen—that is the impression I had—urged that Russia be included in the NATO alliance. Is that the American position? Is that what we are saying?

"Answer. I do not think that Churchill proposed the inclusion of Russia in the NATO alliance. I think that what he proposed was that the Soviet Union should support the principles of the NATO alliance" (State Department Bulletin, May 28, 1956, pp. 884–886).

Additional comment on such an agreement was made by the Honorable Livingston T. Merchant, Ambassador to Canada:

"I honestly believe that some day the Soviets will understand and accept this fact. So far they have refused to, and they continue to direct their efforts to destroy NATO and divide its members one from the other. These efforts are more subtle than they once were. There is, however, no evidence that their long-term purpose and objective of world domination has been abandoned. The shifting tactics of international communism, however, require that we members of the North Atlantic alliance consider in what ways we can develop further our alliance in the interest of expanding cooperation in areas other than the military. The latter has rightly held the priority since the treaty was signed. Behind the defensive military shield which has been erected there are now the opportunity and the need to strengthen the relationship under the treaty in other directions. At the ministerial council meeting in Paris last month it was agreed that a committee of three Foreign Ministers should advise 'on ways and means to improve and extend NATO cooperation in nonmilitary fields and to develop greater unity within the Atlantic Community.' Fittingly, your distinguished Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Pearson, was one of the three Foreign Ministers selected by the Council for this task.

"Just as the United States believes that its security can best be assured by collective security arrangements, so also do we believe that no opportunity should be overlooked for peaceful negotiations to seek just settlements of the great issues which divide the Communist and the free world. In the past 3 or 4 years I have myself participated in literally months of negotiations with the Soviets, in company with the British and the French—at Berlin in 1954, at Geneva in the spring and summer of the same year, at Vienna in May 1955, at San Francisco a year ago, again at Geneva at the summit conference last July, and once more at Geneva last fall.

"Our fundamental policy is clear and simple—to join with our friends in measures to assure our common defenses in the face of a threat and yet to avoid no opportunity to seek peaceful solutions through negotiations" (State Department Bulletin, July 9, 1956, p. 57).

NATO CULTURAL AND PROPAGANDA ACTIVITIES

Activities designed to reshape public opinion were developed side by side with more tangible activities, in the first 5 years, and are increasing rapidly as emphasis on the civil powers of NATO increases.

NATO educational and propaganda activities have been carried on through all the standard media of mass communications—press, radio, moving pictures, teachers' conferences, international summer camps, information polls, and the rest.

Lord Ismay mentions, in the earlier period, the following activities of the Information Division, among others.

1. Tours of journalists.
2. Fifth anniversary coverage in radio, television, film, and press.
3. NATO Caravan of Peace.
4. Films.
5. NATO letter, handbook, picture book.
6. Briefings (including the United States National Defense College and "several groups of parliamentarians," and various pro-NATO organizations).

Over 100,000 copies of the NATO handbook are distributed every year.

"Some 250,000 copies of (the 'simple picture book') aimed at the schools and the armed forces, have been published in all languages of the member countries," said Lord Ismay in 1954 (Ismay, pp. 155, 156).

Troop information and what is called "military community relations" are high on the agenda. Here as elsewhere NATO emphasizes "coordination" and lets national agencies carry out the approved programs. This "solar system" of propaganda agencies has, says Ismay, "resulted in a marked increase both in the volume of troop information exchanged between countries and in the space given to NATO in national publications for the armed forces" (Ismay, p. 157).

NATO is also deeply interested in influencing the opinion of members of the parliaments of member countries.

NATO also has a planetary system of voluntary agencies helping to spread its views. These include organizations working for an Atlantic Community. An Atlantic Community Study Conference has met periodically.

NATO encourages support by voluntary societies. Ismay says, "The value of such spontaneous enterprises would be diminished if they became too closely linked with either NATO or member governments" (Ismay, p. 158).

Speaking in 1954, Ismay says NATO's information activities "demand the most patient and careful tending" because people "will be prepared to support further cooperation under the Treaty only when they are convinced that, as cooperation has increased their security, so it can increase their well-being" (Ismay, pp. 158, 159).

"Should the risk of aggression become less pressing than it is today," he continues, "it may be discovered that article 2 is the real battlefield."

Subsequent activities give evidence of the widening sphere of NATO information and propaganda activities since 1954.

The themes include:

1. The Atlantic Community.
2. Our common heritage.
3. We cannot stand alone.

The theme of "elements of strength" was developed by Mrs. Eleanor Dulles, of the State Department, as follows:

"The immediate question before us is to discern the elements of strength and try to increase them.

"The first of these lessons we have learned in recent years, as I see it, is that no nation can stand alone. Many have seen the handwriting on the wall and have shaped their national policy along lines of cooperation and mutual support. The North Atlantic Treaty countries are obvious illustrations.

"The second lesson in how to increase our strength is to realize that what we do locally in our own work and in our education and cultural activities makes a difference. This is a point of view that requires thought as to how our daily tasks conform to our accepted principles as a nation, whether we personally are in line with the policy of our Nation among nations. This takes us into the matters of foreign economic and financial relations. It requires an extension of our professional and business activities beyond the local scene and calls for seeing our own lives in a world setting.

"It is hard for us to realize that what is done in our local communities affects our international position.

"Recently this connection has been made very close. Impressions regarding our civic standard, the maintenance of order, the pursuit of justice, and the development of education in its broadest sense are of incalculable importance. In all these things we play a daily part. Our lives mirrored by press and movies, reported by visitors, and finding expression as we deal with persons from other lands shape foreign policy. It is the essence of our democracy that this should be so. We cannot escape these facts. We have shaped our Government and chosen our systems or national life along these lines. We as individuals are representatives of our nations. By our actions will the meaning of our national policy be judged" (Department of State Bulletin, July 9, 1956, p. 62 ff.).

The theme of "a common heritage" was developed by Deputy Under Secretary of State Murphy, at a symposium on NATO, sponsored by the College of William and Mary and the Norfolk Chamber of Commerce, at Norfolk, Va., on April 2, 1956, in the following words:

"According to the 1950 census, there were wore than 33 million people living in the United States who either were born abroad or had parents born abroad. Of this number, nearly half came from the 14 other NATO countries. Of the remainder of our population, an even larger percentage can trace their ancestry back to one of the NATO nations.

"We Americans have developed over the years a political and constitutional structure that is peculiarly our own. But its basic principles, including representative authority, and guaranties of human and property rights, had European origins. Most of our European allies, despite varying political structures, still govern themselves under these basic principles. In simple terms, we and our allies share a devotion to the concepts of human freedom and political liberty. These concepts are what set the free nations apart in the world today.

"A look at the content of our educational program shows even more concretely our common heritage with Western and Southern Europe. Here at William and Mary, the second oldest university in the country and one of our best, we find as in other American universities numerous studies in literature, science, art, and the social sciences. If we forget for a moment the portion of this accumulated knowledge that has been produced by the minds and hands of our own countrymen, we will quickly recognize that the greatest part of the remainder has come from the NATO countries of Europe" (Department of State Bulletin, April 16, 1956, p. 645 ff.).

Skillfully planned efforts are being directed especially at teachers and students.

Fellowships are one instrument:

"The Department of State announced on April 4 that M. Margaret Ball, professor of political science, Wellesley College, Wellesley, Mass., is the United States winner of one of the 11 NATO research fellowships offered by the North Atlantic Council. Simultaneous announcement of the award was made at NATO headquarters in Paris.

"The NATO Fellowship and Scholarship Program was announced last July in implementation of article 2 of the North Atlantic Treaty, which provides for cooperation in nonmilitary fields. It is designed to promote the study of historical, political, constitutional, legal, social, cultural, linguistic, economic, and strategic problems which will reveal the common heritage and historical experience of the Atlantic countries, as well as the present needs and future development of the North Atlantic area considered as a community." (Department of State Bulletin, April 16, 1956, p. 649).

International study conferences are another among the many tools for forming the opinions of teachers and students.

"A study conference on 'The Role of the School in the Atlantic Community' will be held at the Palais de Chaillot from September 3 to 7, 1956. It is being organized by the Atlantic Treaty Association in collaboration with the NATO International Staff.

"The purpose of the conference is to consider the best means of promoting in schools greater knowledge of the international structure of the world today, including the Atlantic Community, the organizations serving it, and the peoples composing it.

"Membership of the conference will be limited to persons nominated by the official education authorities, or such other authorities as Governments may designate in the 15 States signatory to the North Atlantic Treaty. They will necessarily include representatives of certain Provinces, Laender, or States in the three Federal countries concerned, Canada, the German Federal Republic, and the United States of America.

"The reason for this decision, which has been approved by NATO, is that the ATA considers it necessary, as a first step toward obtaining the cooperation of teachers and of increasing the intelligent interest of boys and girls in the Atlantic Community on any considerable scale throughout the countries of the North Atlantic Alliance, to secure the active support of the highest educational authorities.

"In order to insure genuine discussion, the membership of the conference will be limited to a maximum of six members for each national delegation, even allowing for the Federal States. It will be for the national authorities to decide whether they will send officials from the central or other educational administrations, inspectors or experienced heads of schools, or one or two of each.

"Schools, for the purposes of this conference, are understood to mean educational establishments below university level. The majority of young citizens in all the allied countries do not receive a university education. It is with the problem of increasing the standard of knowledge of certain essential facts of international life within that majority of the younger generation, as well as among boys and girls proposing to go to universities, that the conference will be concerned.

"The subject matter of the conference will be divided under four headings:

"1. Civic Education in the School: The Facts of International Life.

"2. Civic Education in the School: The Free Institutions of the Atlantic Nations.

"3. Mutual Understanding and Friendship Within the Atlantic Community.

"4. Practical Aids to Teachers." (NATO letter, July 1, 1956, p. 25 ff.)

The size and range of information activities are determined in part by the funds available.

It is not possible to trace what funds are available for NATO information activities, from United States tax sources.

Secretary Dulles testified on May 28, 1956, in connection with congressional hearings on the State Department budget, and especially on a cut in new funds for press officers for international organizations:

"The House reduced our request for this appropriation by $328,410. Three hundred thousand of this amount is of particular interest to me and to our efforts in redesigning the objectives of NATO, with emphasis on cultural aspects as well as military."

The closing of one channel of financing by Congress does not, however, mean that others were closed.

The executive branch can allocate funds from other appropriations, such as "Presidential funds," or assign any personnel from executive agencies, to serve on the staffs of international agencies.

There are so many channels through which financial support could be piped from American Government resources to NATO or other international agencies that no estimate would have any meaning.

A Graduated Corporate Income Tax Would Prevent the Growth of Small Business

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. DANIEL A. REED

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, one of the most challenging problems facing the country today is how small business can best be strengthened. Small business is the backbone of our economy. Its continued vitality is essential to our economic health. The fact that this Congress has done so little in this regard is a matter for widespread concern.

Most discussions of the small-business problem center around proposals for tax relief of various kinds. Actually, the difficulties confronting the small-business man arise from many different sources, and the tax structure is not solely responsible. The difficulty of obtaining new capital, advertising costs, the high price of labor—all of these and many others contribute to the small-business problem.

However, I certainly recognize that tax policy plays an important role in this area. Indeed, in 1954, the Republican 83d Congress enacted a number of new tax provisions which had long been recommended as particularly desirable from the standpoint of small business. Depreciation allowances were substantially liberalized for purchases of new plant and equipment. Greater freedom of action was granted to small companies to retain their earnings for their own business purposes without penalty. More realistic accounting provisions were adopted. These are but a few of the tax benefits provided by the Republican 83d Congress for small business. Again, I say that it is unfortunate that the Democratic 84th Congress has not compiled a similar record of accomplishment. True, Mr. Speaker, there has been a great deal of talk here and shaking of heads about the plight of small business. However, these protestations of sympathy have been singularly unaccompanied by any constructive action.

One of the plans which has been advanced in this Congress for the alleged relief of small business consists of a graduated corporation income tax. Such a proposal, if enacted, would pronounce a death sentence to the American free-enterprise system. Normally, Mr. Speaker, it would not even be necessary to dignify such an unsound scheme by serious consideration. However, there is no question but that it has a certain superficial appeal to some businessmen, and for this reason, I believe it to be essential that the proposal be examined with the utmost care. A failure to understand its implications could lead to tragic results.

The present corporation income tax is made up of two parts. A so-called normal tax of 30 percent applies to all of a corporation's taxable income. In addition, a so-called surtax of 22 percent applies to that portion of a corporation's taxable income which is in excess of $25,000. In effect, therefore, there is a surtax exemption amounting to $25,000. Such an exemption has been contained in the law for many years as a special provision for small business. On the other hand, while a system of graduated or progressive corporation income-tax rates has been suggested from time to time, it has always been rejected by responsible individuals as completely unsound. Such a system has never been considered seriously by any of the tax committees of the Congress.

In order to appreciate the basic fallacy of this proposal, it is necessary to understand that the corporate tax burden is borne primarily by the individual stockholders who own and in fact constitute the particular corporation. As a result, in determining the taxpaying ability of a given business entity, it is essential that one look beyond the mere amount of its income. It is necessary to determine also the number of its stockholders or other owners and the amount of their individual investments. Suppose that one corporation has an income of $100,000 and has 10 owners, each having invested one-tenth of the capital of the business. Now, take the example of another corporation with only $10,000 of income but, by the same token, with only one owner. Under the theory of a graduated corporation income tax, each of the owners of the first corporation would be called upon to bear a substantially higher burden of taxation with regard to his share of the corporate income than would the single owner of the second corporation, even though the actual dollar amounts of their proportionate shares of the income are identical.

Let us look at it in another way. Let us take the case of two elderly individuals, each of whom has managed to save $10,000. One of these individuals invests his $10,000 in a large corporation, and the second invests his $10,000 in a smaller corporation. Under a graduated corporation income tax, the first individual would bear a proportionately heavier tax burden than would the second. I challenge any one to show me any justification, either in logic or in equity, for such a discriminatory tax system.

One of the unfortunate aspects of this proposal is that it is apt to have a superficial appeal to some small-business men. I can only say, in this regard, that their acceptance of such a fallacious and dangerous doctrine would be very shortsighted at best. The benefits of a graduated tax would prove completely illusory.

Every small-business man is ambitious to expand his business. That is as it should be. It is that very competitive urge which has made our free-enterprise system great and which has brought to the American people an abundance of goods and a way of life which are the envy of the world. However, adoption of a graduated corporation tax system would spell the doom of that system and its benefits.

Look at what would happen under such a system. The enterprising small-business man who develops a new product and thereby increases his earnings will immediately be penalized by a higher rate of tax. Should he develop more efficient methods of production or marketing, he would immediately pay the price in higher tax rates. If he expands his capacity through better machinery or by larger plant facilities, he will be punished for his enterprise by higher tax rates.

Therefore, small-business men who support a graduated corporate income tax are in reality digging their own graves. They seek tax relief, and properly so, in order to permit their businesses to grow and expand. What they forget is this—under a graduated tax system, the moment that their companies do in fact grow bigger, they will be slapped down by a higher rate of tax. In other words, the scheme contains a "built-in" mechanism designed to prevent the growth of small business. As a result, it is in reality an anti-small-business proposal. Advanced as a panacea for the ills of small business, the proposal has sinister implications for the entire economic system. It is the very antithesis of all that has made American enterprise strong and vigorous. Mr. Speaker, when Karl Marx declared that the graduated income tax could be relied upon to destroy the capitalistic system, he must have had a plan very similar to this in mind.

I am convinced that we can develop a constructive tax policy designed to strengthen small business and to foster its growth. On May 31, 1956, President Eisenhower appointed a Cabinet Committee on Small Business. I am confident that this Committee will be instrumental in developing a vigorous, forward-looking program. I am likewise confident that this Republican program will be designed to encourage the growth of small business and not to stifle and paralyze small business as would proposals such as that for a graduated corporation income tax.

Mr. Speaker, I am including at this point a copy of President Eisenhower's letter of May 31, 1956, to Chairman Arthur Burns, establishing the Cabinet Committee on Small Business:

MAY 31, 1956.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The important contributions made by small business concerns to the progressive spirit and vitality of the American economy have repeatedly been stressed in my economic reports to the Congress and on various other occasions. Such enterprises, of which there are some 4 million currently in operation, serve continuously as a dynamic influence in our enterprise system. It is often through them that new products and new processes are first brought into use. Equally important, it is in small concerns that many men and women find an opportunity to demonstrate their ability to serve constructively in the business world. For these and related reasons, Government policies that make it easier for new businesses to be established and that foster the growth of small concerns enhance the welfare of the whole economy.

The Federal Government has a number of programs now in operation that are significantly helpful to small business.

The Department of Commerce helps constantly in the solution of management problems for small business through its Office of Technical Services, Office of Area Development, Business and Defense Services Administration, and Office of Business Economics.

Financial assistance is available to small concerns through the Small Business Administration.

Jointly with the Department of Defense and with other Federal departments and agencies, the Small Business Administration assists small concerns in obtaining Government procurement contracts.

Many small construction companies and related businesses benefit from the home-financing programs administered by the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

The Office of Defense Mobilization seeks to strengthen the production potential of small firms in our defense programs.

Through its enforcement of antitrust laws, the Department of Justice helps maintain the competitive environment that is essential to the Nation's economic welfare.

These and other programs and policies of the Federal Government facilitate the establishment of new concerns and foster the growth of small businesses. Yet the conditions of our modern economy are such that many small concerns confront substantial hindrances to their growth. It is my wish that the Federal Government keep fully abreast of developments that affect small businesses. Its programs and policies aimed at assisting small businesses should be carefully reviewed at this time with the object of strengthening them where necessary, and of making recommendations for steps that will provide such enterprises with additional constructive assistance.

To this end I am establishing a Cabinet Committee on Small Business of which I would like you to serve as chairman. By copies of this letter I am designating the Secretaries of Defense, Commerce, Labor, the Director of the Office of Defense Mobilization, the Administrator of the Small Business Administration, and the Administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency as members. Other department and agency heads will participate on an ad hoc basis as may be deemed desirable. The committee is to have the continuing assignment of making specific recommendations to me for administrative actions, and where necessary for additional legislation, to strengthen the economic position of small businesses and to foster their sound development.

Sincerely,

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER.

President Eisenhower's Farm Program

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN
OF MINNESOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, the primary objective of every American should be to continue our effort for permanent peace, progress, and prosperity for all segments of our economy, including agriculture and small business. Prosperity secured through another war and inflation will only bring economic disaster and loss of American lives and resources.

The 84th Congress is about to close, and I believe that it is appropriate for me to briefly discuss some of the major proposals which have been enacted into law after originating in my Committee on Agriculture. The production of food is a basic industry and the most vital to every person. As a member of this committee, I have always believed in and worked for a strong and prosperous agriculture. I definitely feel that this policy is for the benefit of our Nation's economy.

A careful survey of the district which I have the honor to represent in Congress discloses that success or failure of the men and women engaged in business, profession, and labor, depends to a great degree on a strong and active purchasing power by the farm families in the trade area. It is estimated that in many cities and villages, the buying power of the farmers represents from 40 to 90 percent of the business done in the particular community. While I have diligently worked for policies and laws to assure a prosperous agriculture, I have also worked with the same degree of vigilance for the success of small business and other occupations.

This Congress has approved nearly all of the proposals made by President Eisenhower in his nine-point farm program, which are listed as follows:

First. We have approved the President's soil-bank plan and authorized $1.2 billion a year for this program.

Second. We have strengthened the surplus disposal and commodity programs.

Third. Enacted the Great Plains program.

Fourth. Provided additional funds for agricultural research.

Fifth. Enacted new farm credit legislation.

Sixth. Approved a law providing for a refund of taxes on farm-used gasoline.

Seventh. Enacted laws to improve the soil and water conservation programs.

Eighth. We have enacted many other laws, including the interstate highway program, social security, and legislation relating to the general welfare which have been approved by the President to the benefit of all the people.

In addition, President Eisenhower, by Executive directive, increased the support price of soybeans to $2.15 a bushel, and flaxseed to $3.09 a bushel, which meant an additional income in 1956 of more than $1 million to the farmers of my district in Minnesota.

President Eisenhower, also by Executive directive, increased the support price on manufactured milk by 10 cents per hundred pounds, and the support price on butterfat to 58.6 cents a pound. This meant an additional income to the dairy farmers of my district of approximately $1,600,000 for the year 1956.

The President also established the support price for corn on allocated acreage at $1.50 a bushel, and $1.25 a bushel for corn grown in excess of the acreage allotment. He also increased the minimum support price of wheat to $2 a bushel. The action taken by the President on corn and wheat approximated additional income for the farmers in the First District by over $2 million for the crop year 1956.

The soil bank proposal as submitted by the President is undoubtedly the first realistic approach to reducing the production of surplus basic commodities, including wheat and corn, ever passed by Congress. As a member of the conference committee on the farm bill, I helped write the soil-bank proposal. I wanted to see it tried out although I had some doubt as to whether or not it would be of any direct value to the small farmers who work on restricted acreage and use most of their production to feed their livestock and poultry. I hope that the plan will work and that it will be both a direct and indirect benefit to all of the farmers whether or not they place acreage into the soil bank. It seems to me, that the reduction in tillable acreage should materially raise the price level of all farm commodities, and narrow the price squeeze which is so apparent today to every farmer. I do not favor the destruction of food or growing crops, and I hope that when the program goes into effect for 1957, it can be put into operation before any crops are planted.

It will be of interest to note the participation in the acreage reserve program for 1956. I am showing in the following tabulation the participation in the soil-bank program by counties in the First District.

The 1956 acreage reserve signup in the 1st Congressional District of Minnesota

County	Number of corn agreements	Acres	Amount paid to farmers
Dodge	229	2,254.9	$98,022.30
Fillmore [1]	435	4,092.9	179,675.85
Freeborn [2]	380	3,698.4	168,550.47
Goodhue [3]	391	2,977.0	141,299.30
Houston [4]	267	1,988.9	92,995.01
Mower [5]	524	5,717.0	237,784.92
Olmsted [6]	406	4,686.5	213,063.95
Rice [7]	409	3,610.7	159,186.57
Steele [8]	151	1,671.6	79,424.73
Wabasha [9]	216	2,122.0	99,166.66
Waseca [10]	262	2,783.5	133,773.24
Winona	162	1,368.0	62,527.30
Total	3,832	36,971.4	1,665,470.30

[1] Fillmore: 12 tobacco acreage agreements were accepted.
[2] Freeborn: 1 wheat agreement was accepted.
[3] Goodhue: 18 wheat agreements were accepted.
[4] Houston: 4 wheat agreements and 8 tobacco agreements were accepted.
[5] Mower: 2 wheat agreements were accepted.
[6] Olmsted: 4 wheat agreements were accepted.
[7] Rice: 3 wheat agreements were accepted.
[8] Steele: 1 wheat agreement was accepted.
[9] Wabasha: 5 wheat agreements were accepted.
[10] Waseca: 3 wheat agreements were accepted.

231 acres, involving 41 wheat agreements, were placed in the acreage reserve, for which payments of approximately $4,600 will be made.

33 acres, involving 20 tobacco-producing agreements, were placed in the acreage reserve, for which payments of approximately $5,300 will be made.

The recent boost in wages on account of the steel strike will further widen the price spread which is affecting all consumers, and the farmers in particular. This wage increase has largely set the pattern for other manufacturers to follow. It all means that consumers will have to pay more for the necessary things that they are required to buy. It is my hope that this question can be dealt with in the next session of Congress without disturbing the economy of our country.

The House Committee on Agriculture has considered more than 800 bills. We have heard hundreds of witnesses, including representatives of the leading farm organizations, and officials from the Department of Agriculture. Considering the wide diversity of views and opinions, it has not been an easy problem to deal with the agricultural subject. It is the hope of most members of our committee that the day is not far distant when Government controls will not be necessary in any degree and that the farmers can secure full parity prices in the open market.

Legislation of Interest to Veterans

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM G. BRAY
OF INDIANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. BRAY. Mr. Speaker, I want to summarize the legislation which has been before the Congress which is of special interest to the veterans of the United States.

The veterans of America were shocked a few months ago when the Bradley Commission filed its report. The Bradley report, as it is referred to, apparently recommended material changes in the relationship between the Government and veterans, changes in the policy which has existed since the very beginning of our country. I had visits, calls and letters from veterans throughout my district expressing fear that the Bradley report would adversely affect their pension or compensation or hospitalization or would generally change their rights as a veteran. I explained to them that this Bradley report is merely the opinion of the Bradley Commission and has no force or effect unless Congress would pass legislation in conformity with its recommendations. I was perhaps especially interested in this report and the effects it might have for I have served as post service officer of both my American Legion and VFW posts. I have also served as veterans' service officer of my hometown.

I am especially happy to point out that Congress has not put into effect or attempted to put into effect the Bradley Commission recommendations. On the contrary, the House of Representatives has passed an unusual amount of legislation this year which is favorable to veterans. However, most of this legislation has not become law as the Senate has not acted on it.

Both the House and the Senate passed 14 laws for the benefit of veterans in the last session of Congress which have been signed by the President. In addition, the House passed 14 bills, many of them in the latter part of the session, which were not acted on by the Senate before adjournment. Notable among these bills were H. R. 7886, H. R. 2867, and H. R. 12038. H. R. 7886, which is commonly called the World War I veterans' pension, would have presumed World War I veterans at the age of 65 to be totally disabled for pension purposes. The veteran less than 65 years of age would have received $75 per month; if more than 65 years of age, or if he had drawn a pension for 10 continuous years, he would have received $90 per month. There were several other increases in this legislation. However, there was an income limitation for this total non-service-connected disability which would have prevented its being drawn if the single veteran earned more than $1,400 per year or if the married veteran earned more than $2,700 per year.

H. R. 2867 was passed by the House which would have increased the pension to widows of Spanish American War veterans to $75 per month.

H. R. 12038 would have increased the compensation for service-connected disabilities by 10 percent and more than that in some cases. It is regrettable that these three bills, H. R. 7886, H. R. 2867, and H. R. 12038, and 11 other similar but less extensive bills which were passed by the House, did not receive action in the Senate. This legislation, however, will be considered by the new Congress which will convene in January.

The veterans hospital program is making commendable progress. Today I doubt if there are any hospitals in the country which give better service than do the veterans hospitals. They are now engaged in a modernization program which will take several years to finish. There is a shortage of veterans hospitals, but we are trying to get caught up on that shortage. One difficulty, of course, is that in the past hospitals were often constructed without regard to the patient load in that area or as to the availability of doctors and technicians in the vicinity to staff the hospitals. That fault is being remedied and the new hospitals are being placed with a better view of the patient need and the medical service availability. We are working toward getting adequate facilities in Indiana. There is a special need for mental hospitals for veterans throughout the country.

A few years ago there was some difficulty encountered in getting appropriations through Congress to adequately take care of the veterans' pensions, compensation, and hospital needs. However, no difficulty was encountered this year.

The loan guaranty provisions of the GI bill of rights were extended by the Congress. In general, veterans legislation, except for the measures which I have mentioned above, received fair treatment at the hands of Congress.

There are other measures in which veterans are especially interested—those dealing with our country's defense. I believe our defense program is progressing satisfactorily and will adequately take care of our needs, yet will not place an undue burden on the American family and taxpayer.

There is a feeling that recent decisions of the Supreme Court have taken away from the American people proper protection from disloyal persons. I am not questioning the legality of these decisions but the job with which the country is confronted is that if existing laws are unconstitutional or did not properly cover the problems involved, then it is the duty of the Congress to pass additional laws to adequately protect us against disloyalty and subversion. At the close of Congress there was legislation being considered in several of these fields. If needed, they probably will receive favorable consideration in the next Congress which will convene in January.

Patterson Reports to Labor

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JAMES T. PATTERSON
OF CONNECTICUT
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, it is with intense gratification that I am able to report to the working men and women of my district on the tremendous advances made on their behalf under the leadership of Republicans in Congress and the Federal Government.

During the past 3½ years—as it has been during my entire 10 years in Congress—it has given me great satisfaction to work for those measures which were in the best interest of the American laborer.

Now the fruits of those labors are becoming more and more evident in the rapid flowering of benefits for all Americans, and particularly for the men and women who work with their hands.

And as the results of our work flow into the paychecks and the homes of the American laborer, our Nation is experiencing a shift of opinion on the part of working population with respect to political parties. In a very short span of years, the Democrat claim to be the only party working for the good of laboring groups in this country has been thoroughly debunked. In recent weeks, public opinion polls show sentiment among unionized workers shifting to Republican candidates. More and more union leaders are coming to the conclusion first expressed by George Meany, president of the AFL–CIO, that "right now we never had it so good."

On June 13, James C. Petrillo, head of the 25,000-member American Federation of Musicians and a lifelong Democrat, told a convention in Atlantic City that he had never talked to any man "as friendly and understanding about our problems as President Eisenhower."

The reason for increasing labor satisfaction with what we have done during the past few years is not hard to find. I have no hesitancy in saying that our record of achievements for the workingman is one of the great phenomena of the decade. It is fairly screamed by every statistic available to Government and private research organizations.

For example, employment—that vital take-home pay factor so essential to the working men and women—smashed all existing records in 1955. An average of 63,200,000 persons were employed and that figure is 4,500,000 more than in the last peacetime year under the Democrats. What is more, the level of jobs is even better in 1956. In May, a total of 65 million Americans had jobs and this means 3 million more jobs were held during the first quarter of 1956 than during any first quarter under the Democrats—even in war periods.

As you all know, the coal industry was having very rough sledding when the Republicans first took office. Now, almost unnoticed in the tremendous tide of events, that industry is staging such a dramatic comeback that L. C. Campbell, president of the National Coal Association, told that organization's 39th annual meeting on June 13 that coal "may well be entering its golden years."

This optimism stems from several developments of importance. One is the fact that under Republican policies, exports of bituminous and anthracite coal and coke are running at an annual rate which may make 1956 the highest year in history. Another is that the Republican atomic energy development program is producing a great demand. W. Kenneth Davis, reactor development director for the Atomic Energy Program, said the demand for coal will run well ahead of the demand for other fuels in the next 20 years.

During 1955, unemployment in all industries and fields of endeavor averaged less than 2,700,000—nearly three-quarters of a million below the last peacetime year when the Democrats were in control of Congress and the Government. The three GOP years from 1952 through 1955 averaged less unemployment than Truman's last term despite a nearly 3 million increase in the civil labor force in those years and despite the fact that two-and-a-half of the Truman years were war years.

At the same time, under the prosperity which we have developed, both hourly and weekly wages are at all-time record highs—averaging nearly 13 percent higher in peacetime 1955 than in wartime 1952. The average hourly pay of factory workers was $1.88 compared with $1.67; weekly wages were $76.61 compared with $69.97.

And this increase in take-home pay under the policies which we have adopted is continuing during 1956. I would remind you also that during the last 3 years under the Democrat Truman administration, the dollar bill lost 12 cents, or nearly one-eighth of its buying power through inflation. In the 3 Republican years, the inflation rate was cut to three-fourths of 1 cent.

Combined with lower taxes voted by us in the Republican 83d Congress, this means that labor's average take-home pay, adjusted for cost-of-living changes, was up 13 percent in 1955 over 1952 for the single worker. It was up 10 percent for the average family man with a wife and two children.

Added to this is the fact that, during the Republican years, our working men and women lost less time at work because of strikes. In 1955, for example, strike losses were down 53 percent from the last year under President Truman. During the 7 Truman years after World War II, the average man-days idle were 93 percent greater than in the 3 Republican years.

More directly, we of the Republican Party raised the minimum wage for the Nation's workers to $1 an hour. This affected more than 2 million workers and indirectly aided millions more through its great impact on general wage levels and purchasing power.

In another highly important sphere we tightened up the enforcement of the labor standards laws. The Republicans undertook 1,143 enforcement actions in 3 years. This compared with only 476 actions in the last 3 years of the Truman administration. More than $6 million in back wages due under the Fair Labor Standards Act were paid to over 80,000 employees by 15,000 firms following the Labor Department's investigations last year alone.

At the same time, the Republican campaign to encourage the employment of physically handicapped workers, helped 250,000 of our less fortunate members of the working force to obtain gainful employment.

During our stewardship of the Federal Government, the Republicans also recognized the need for some changes and refinements in the Taft-Hartley law. Consequently, President Eisenhower submitted 14 proposed improvements, covering such subjects as secret strike ballots, non-Communist oaths, strike settlement recommendations, contract reopening, welfare funds, injunctions, check-offs, and free speech.

However, the President's program was defeated by the solid vote of 46 Democrat Senators and no Taft-Hartley revision program has come from the Democrat 84th Congress.

In conclusion, I should like to say that the Republicans have more than kept their pledge to do everything possible to better the lot of the American working men and women. It is true, as Mr. Meany has said, that American workingmen have never had it so good. But, we Republicans feel that they can and will have it a lot better. If our policies are permitted to be carried through to fruition, American labor will enjoy the fruits of more leisure, higher pay, better goods and services at less cost. In fact, the working men and women of America will benefit more than any other single group.

Edwin F. Ladd, of North Dakota

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MILTON R. YOUNG
OF NORTH DAKOTA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement by me on the late Senator Edwin F. Ladd, of North Dakota.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The commemoration this year of the 50th anniversary of the passage of the Food and Drug Act of 1906 recalls how much of the credit for this legislation belongs to the late Senator Edwin F. Ladd, of North Dakota. He was one of the most outstanding men ever produced by the State of North Dakota, a man who achieved the respect and devotion of not only his own State but of much of the Nation.

When he died in 1925, Dr. Ladd was a Member of the United States Senate from North Dakota, but long before he came to Washington he had become a world renowned personage, known at scientific congresses abroad and in demand as an expert in his field of chemistry.

Although primarily interested in the problems of agriculture, he never failed to take a stand on the side of justice and for the rights of the people. For 35 years, Senator Ladd fought the battles of the people of his own and other States, often almost singlehanded.

Born in Maine, Dr. Ladd studied chemistry at the State university and from 1884 to 1890 served the New York State Agricultural Experiment Station as chief chemist. In 1890 he went to North Dakota where his work began in the chemistry department of the Agricultural College at Fargo.

Within a short time he found himself involved in a series of food and drug adulteration controversies and these in turn led to the enactment of a pure food and drug law by the State of North Dakota. This law, passed largely at the instigation of Dr. Ladd, preceded by 3 years the enactment of the Federal law.

By the time the State legislation was passed, Dr. Ladd was so well known that his appointment as administrator of the law was taken as a matter of course. He proved to be as able and efficient an executive as he was a chemist.

It is interesting to trace the steps that brought Dr. Ladd to his preeminence. In the first place, before he ever had anything to do with politics, he had for years been engaged in food and drug analysis in his laboratory.

As a citizen of North Dakota this man of science became acutely conscious of what happened to what the farmer raised for sale, and conversely, what had happened to what the farmer bought.

His researches had some astonishing results. For example, he analyzed the brands of paint sold in the State and, when his work was published, a group of paint manufacturers were so impressed with the thoroughness of the job that they raised a fund and turned it over to Dr. Ladd for paint investigation. This, in turn, was followed by the practice of using on the college campus itself paints that were under investigation, leaving it to the weather to demonstrate the shortcomings of the merits of the product. Demonstrations of this character are commonplace now, but in Dr. Ladd's time they were not.

Gradually his work expanded.

One of his most celebrated accomplishments was the exposure of wheat bleaching. At the time certain types of North Dakota wheat commanded a high premium because they made an intensely white flour. Competing millers discovered that inferior wheat could be chemically bleached so as to produce a flour as white as they produced from Dakota wheat. Dr. Ladd got a law passed which required millers to stamp the word "Bleached" in large letters on every sack of such flour sold in the State. Action of this character spread to other States and eventually to a successful Federal Supreme Court case. In a way somewhat similar to his experiences with paint, Dr. Ladd's flour researches and the resulting pressures led to experiment and new and superior methods of blending wheat.

Canned corn bleached with sulfite and sweetened with saccharin, peas and string beans preserved with copper and alum salts, embalmed beef—the Spanish-American War had made this last notorious—phony maple sirup, and candy made of glucose and stained with coal-tar dyes were some of the products that Dr. Ladd helped to expose. In all this Dr. Ladd worked closely with the famous Dr. Wiley, Chief Chemist of the Department of Agriculture, and proved to be a devastating witness before the congressional committees when the pure food and drug bill was up for consideration.

Colored oleomargarine branded "butter" and 3½-ounce spice containers labeled 4 ounces got short shrift from Dr. Ladd. Half-strength formaldehyde—useless in treating seed grain for smut or potatoes for scab—did not long survive his attacks. He insisted upon the enforcement of the laws against the adulteration of drugs—digitalis was a case in point—and he made his enforcement stick. In commenting upon the North Dakota pure food law, he said: "The pure food law does not prohibit the selling of ground olive stones or coconut shells as such but it does forbid selling them for pepper or other food products."

A tireless worker, he was a member of numerous scientific bodies and a steady stream of his papers appeared in their professional proceedings. In this day when so many people have come to believe that all powerful government has the answers to everything, it is instructive to recall that Dr. Ladd had no such ideas. Regulatory legislation to him was a leverage, not a triumph of the police power. In his last years, before Stalin had pulled down the Iron Curtain, Senator Ladd visited Soviet Russia and with a detached and penetrating eye examined the new utopia. His conclusion was, as Senator King, of Utah, put it, that "the knout of the Czar had produced repercussions and the mailed fist of the Communist was to be expected."

Senator Ladd was one of the most illustrious of all North Dakota public servants. He was a great man—great in his faith, great in his purpose, and great in his love of humanity.

Social Security for Farmers

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. DANIEL A. REED
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, one of the most significant changes provided by the Eisenhower social-security program has been the extension of this essential protection to the Nation's farmers and their families. This was accomplished by the Social Security Act Amendments of 1954, which I sponsored and led the fight for on behalf of the administration.

The coverage of farmers had been resisted for many years prior to 1954 on the ground that farmers typically do not retire at age 65 and, thus, would seldom be in a position to take full advantage of the benefits of the system. In my opinion, this argument overlooked one vitally important fact. We are apt to forget that the social-security program provides not only retirement benefits for the covered individual himself but also provides very substantial survivorship benefits for his widow and his young children in the event of his untimely death. I agree that many farmers frequently do not retire at 65. I likewise agree that these individuals as a group are relatively more able to make adequate provision for their own security. But even accepting all that as true, the fact remains that the unexpected death of the family's breadwinner frequently spells economic disaster to his loved ones. How many young men in their twenties and thirties, for example, have been able to set aside enough to provide comfortably for their wives and children in the event that something should happen to them? Obviously, the answer is very few.

The social-security program provides substantial survivorship benefits. For example, a young widow with 2 children under age 18 can receive as much as $200 a month in such benefits, and these benefits are exempt from Federal income tax. Again, when his widow herself reaches age 62, she can receive as much as $81.40 a month, also tax free. These are not enormous amounts but they can spell the difference between family tragedy and decent security.

It is for this reason that I led the fight to extend social-security protection to our 6 million farm families. I grew up on a farm, and I remember from my own personal experience how suddenly a tragic accident would strike on one of our neighbor's farms. Today, with the ever-increasing use of machinery on farms, the danger of accident is even greater. I believe that the extension of the basic protection of the social-security system to our farmers has brought a new peace of mind into farm homes throughout the breadth of the land.

I have always wished that there could be some sound basis whereby coverage under social security could be made a matter of free individual choice, in line with our American traditions. Certainly, a voluntary system would have much to recommend it and would avoid many of the complaints which one hears today. However, if the system were made voluntary, experience shows that only those who would gain the most would elect coverage while those who would gain the least would stay out of the system. This would result in vastly increasing cost of social-security protection. It would then cost approximately as much as private insurance, or about 10 times as much as it does today. This would, of course, destroy the practical utility of the system.

Some rather important technical changes were made this year with regard to the social-security coverage of farmers. I would like to describe these changes briefly as I believe they will be of interest to many of our farm families.

OPTIONAL METHOD OF FIGURING SELF-EMPLOYMENT EARNINGS

Self-employed farmers who report on a cash basis have had an optional method of figuring their net earnings ever since they were first covered by the 1954 law. The 1956 amendments permit members of a farm partnership and individual farmers who keep books on an accrual basis also to use a revised optional method.

Under the new optional method, for taxable years ending on or after December 31, 1956:

(a) If a farmer's gross income from agricultural self-employment is not more than $1,800, he may count as his net earnings from farm self-employment either his actual net earnings or two-thirds of his gross farm income.

(b) If his gross farm income is more than $1,800 and his net farm earnings are less than $1,200, he may use either his actual net earnings from farming or $1,200.

(c) If his gross farm income is more than $1,800 and his net farm earnings are $1,200 or more, he must use the actual amount of his net farm earnings.

INCOME FROM LAND FARMED BY SOMEONE ELSE

Beginning with 1955, earnings from self-employment as a farm operator have counted toward social-security benefits. Under the old law, however, an individual did not get social-security credit for cash or crop shares he received as rent for his land.

Under the 1956 amendments, the cash or crop shares received from a tenant or share farmer will count for social-security purposes if under the individual's arrangement with the tenant or share farmer he participates materially in the production of the crops or livestock or in the management of the production.

In order to participate materially the individual must take an important part in the management decisions or in the actual production.

SHARE FARMERS

If a farmer uses farmland owned by someone else and he receives a share of what he produces, his earnings may have been covered by the social-security law since the beginning of 1955. The 1956 amendments make it clear that if, under an ordinary crop-sharing arrangement, the crops or livestock he produces are divided between him and the landlord, with his share depending on the total amount produced, then he is considered a self-employed farmer for social-security purposes. This is true even if the landowner takes an active part in the farm operations. This rule is effective for all taxable years ending after 1954.

WHEN FARMWORKERS ARE COVERED

If an individual worked for a farmer before 1957, he got social-security credit if the farmer paid him $100 or more in cash wages in the calendar year.

Under the new law, beginning with 1957 his earnings from farmwork will count toward social-security benefits under either of these conditions:

(a) If a farm employer pays him $150 or more in cash during the year, his cash pay from that employer is covered by the law.

(b) If he does farmwork for an employer on 20 or more days during a year for cash pay figured on a time basis (rather than on a piece-rate basis), his cash pay for that employer is covered by the law.

For the $150-a-year test, both piece-rate and time-rate cash pay count. The total number of days worked does not matter so long as he is paid $150 in cash by the employer in the year.

For the 20-day test, the total amount of his cash pay does not matter so long as he works for one employer on 20 days or more for cash pay based on some unit of time such as an hour, a day, or a week.

FARM LABOR CREWS AND CREW LEADERS

Wages paid to members of a labor crew, such as those used to pick cotton and harvest fruits and vegetables, may be covered by the social-security law, but in the past it has sometimes not been easy to tell whether the employer of the members of the crew was the farmer who was having the work done or the crew leader (or "labor contractor" or "row boss"). The new amendments make it easier to tell which is the employer.

If an individual is a crew leader, the crew members he furnishes and pays are his employees unless he and the farmer have entered into a written agreement which shows that the crew leader is his employee.

If an individual is a farm operator using crew workers, and he has entered into a written agreement with the crew leader which shows that he is his employee, then the crew members are also his employees.

This provision is effective for work performed after December 31, 1956.

FOREIGN AGRICULTURAL WORKERS

The 1954 law did not cover agricultural work performed by workers from Mexico hired under contract or by foreign workers lawfully admitted from the British West Indies on a temporary basis.

Under the amendments, agricultural work performed by foreign workers admitted to the United States on a temporary basis from any foreign country will not be covered by the law after 1956.

ACTION TO TAKE NOW

If a person's work was brought under social security by the 1956 amendments and he does not have a social-security card, he should go to his social-security office and get one without delay. If there is no social-security office near him, he should ask for an application blank—Form SS–5—at the post office, fill it out, and mail it to the nearest social-security office.

After he gets his card, he should show it to his employer. He needs the social-security number to report the wages properly.

If he is self-employed he will need his social-security card when he makes out his social-security self-employment tax report. This report is part of the individual Federal income-tax return.

If a person is an employer and he is paying or expects to pay farmworkers taxable cash wages during the year, and if he does not already have an employer identification number, he should apply for one without delay. He can get the proper blank at his social-security office or at his Internal Revenue Service office.

Further information about social-security cards or social-security benefits can be obtained from the social-security district office.

Further information about social-security employment taxes or self-employment taxes can be obtained from the local Internal Revenue Service office.

The addresses of these offices can be obtained at local post offices.

Accomplishments of the Committee on Ways and Means During the 84th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. JERE COOPER

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, it has been my privilege to serve as a member of the Committee on Ways and Means since July 14, 1932. During that period I have always been impressed with the industry and competence of my committee colleagues. This impression has recently been greatly enhanced by the information I have developed in the preliminary work I have done with respect to the preparation of this report of the committee activity during the 84th Congress. This preliminary work has entailed a review of the activity of the 84th Congress to date, which has left me convinced that the Committee on Ways and Means has worked as hard and as effectively in this Congress as any committee of Congress has ever worked.

At the outset of my remarks I would like to express my grateful appreciation to my committee colleagues who have served so constructively and so ably on the committee during the Congress that is now drawing to a close. As members of the committee, they have been instrumental in the preparation of legislation that proffers great benefit to the American people they represent. As members of the Committee on Ways and Means they have worked diligently for long hours, for long days, for long weeks, and for long months. They may derive satisfaction from the knowledge of the great accomplishments they have achieved. To all the members of the committee, Democrat and Republican alike, goes my grateful and heartfelt appreciation for their cooperation and endeavors without which our accomplishments would not have been possible.

In citing this record of the Committee on Ways and Means during the 84th Congress, it has been my purpose to devote special attention to the activities during the second session of this Congress, in view of the fact that a similar report in regard to the first session activities was set forth in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 101, part 10, pages 13181–13183. However, so that the record may be complete, the statistical information that I will present will be for the entire 84th Congress, and I will necessarily refer to major legislation to which reference was made in my above-mentioned previous remarks.

Before proceeding to discuss the overall statistics and the details of particular measures, I should like to merely list at this point a few of the major bills which became public law and which were handled by this committee, to indicate the heavy responsibility which the committee bears with respect to our Federal legislation and the great importance of the committee's work in many complex areas of legislation. Some of these leading measures are: The social security amendments of 1956; the Federal Highway Revenue Act of 1956; the Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1955; the Customs Simplification Act of 1956; the Philippine Trade Agreement Revision Act of 1955; the Narcotic Control Act of 1956; the Renegotiation Amendments Act of 1956; and the exemption of farm uses from the Federal excise tax on gasoline.

That the workload of the Committee on Ways and Means has greatly increased is evident from a review of statistics from the 81st Congress to date. More bills were referred to the committee during the 84th Congress than were referred to it in the 81st and 82d Congresses combined. During the 84th Congress the committee had 1,324 bills referred to it for consideration as compared to 458 for the 81st Congress and 696 for the 82d Congress. In the 83d Congress 1,203 bills were referred to the committee.

During the 84th Congress the committee took favorable action with respect to legislation affecting the major subjects coming within the committee's jurisdiction, including social security, tariff laws and customs, the narcotic laws, the Internal Revenue Code, and the Renegotiation Act. In addition to legislation with respect to the major subjects, the committee also acted on legislation affecting the statutory debt limit and authorizing certain administrative expenses in the Treasury Department.

During the 84th Congress the Committee on Ways and Means reported on 99 bills to the House of Representatives compared to 54 bills in the 81st Congress, 64 bills in the 82d Congress, and 52 bills in the 83d Congress. In the 81st Congress 44 bills were reported by the committee which became public law, 51 in the 82d Congress, and 41 in the 83d Congress; whereas, 72 bills became public law during the 84th Congress.

Of the 102 bills coming within the committee's jurisdiction on which some favorable legislative action was taken during the 84th Congress, 29 of them related to tariffs and customs, 60 to tax matters, 3 to social security, 2 to the Renegotiation Act, 3 to narcotics, 2 to the public debt, and 3 to miscellaneous subjects. Ten of these bills might be regarded as major legislation. Specific requests for favorable action had been received from the administration on 24 of the 102 bills on which favorable legislative action was taken.

In order that the splendid record compiled by the Committee on Ways and Means in the 84th Congress may be publicly available, I will insert at this point in the RECORD a report I have prepared of the committee's activity for the 84th Congress:

RECORD OF THE COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS, 84TH CONGRESS, 2D SESSION

There follows a summary of the record of the Committee on Ways and Means briefly setting forth the activities and accomplishments of the committee during the 84th Congress:

I. STATUS OF LEGISLATION

The status of bills referred to the committee during the 84th Congress is indicated in the table set forth below:

Status:	Total bills
Reported by the committee	99
Passed by the House	91
Reported by Senate Finance	76
Passed by the Senate	76
Enacted into law	72

(NOTE.—One bill, H. R. 9083, passed the Senate with amendments in the closing days of the 2d session and time did not permit the House to take action with respect to the Senate amendments. Memorandums of disapproval were issued by the President on H. R. 4392, 6887, and 7634.)

The committee met 129 times in executive session during the 84th Congress and held a total of 54 days of public hearings on a variety of subjects. Testimony was received from 526 witnesses in the public hearings in addition to which a large number of individuals and organizations submitted statements for the record with regard to the subject matter under consideration in lieu of appearances. Data concerning these hearings follow:

Subject	Days	Witnesses

II. BRIEF DESCRIPTION OF LEGISLATIVE ACTIVITIES

A. Social-security legislation

During the 84th Congress the Committee on Ways and Means prepared and presented to the Congress for favorable consideration major amendments to the Social Security Act. The principal bill was H. R. 7225, the Social Security Amendments of 1956, which became Public Law 880. The major features of this legislation included (1) monthly benefits for permanently disabled insured individuals who have attained age 50; (2) a reduction to 62 years in the benefit eligibility age for women; (3) continued monthly benefits to disabled children after they attain age 18; (4) expanded old-age and survivors insurance coverage; (5) adjustments to the OASI contributions schedule to assure the continued actuarial soundness of the program; (6) a liberalization of the public assistance matching formula so as to assure the availability of increased Federal funds to the States for old-age assistance, aid to the permanently and totally disabled, aid to the blind, and aid to dependent children; (7) a new program of medical care for the needy aged, disabled, etc., whereby the Federal Government matches on a 50–50 basis State expenditures for medical care of public-assistance recipients; and (8) provision of Federal funds for research and personnel training with respect to public welfare.

One of the important considerations with respect to H. R. 7225 is that it removed serious benefit gaps that previously existed in the social-security system. These benefit gaps in the program were removed by providing for social-security payments for disabled workers at age 50, continued benefits for disabled children 18 or over whose disability began before they reached age 18, and monthly benefits for women at age 62 instead of 65. It is estimated that in the first year of operation these amendments will make old-age and survivors insurance benefits in the amount of $550 million payable to approximately 800,000 persons. In the long run, it is estimated that 2.3 million people will be added to the benefit rolls who will receive approximately $1.5 billion in annual benefits.

The coverage provisions of H. R. 7225 extended for the first time social-security protection to a large group of people who are self-employed in certain professions such as lawyers, dentists, chiropractors, veterinarians, naturopaths, osteopaths, and optometrists. Doctors of medicine are now the only self-employed people who are not covered by social security. In addition, several important improvements were made in social-security coverage of farmers and farm workers which were directed to the clarification of the status of a farm landowner or tenant who derives income from a share-farming arrangement, to liberalized farm income reporting procedures so as to benefit small farmers, and to simplified reporting requirements with respect to occasional employees. Another improvement in the coverage provisions of the social-security laws that were provided by H. R. 7225 makes OASI coverage available to the employees of the Tennessee Valley Authority and of the Federal Home Loan Bank. The 1956 changes in the law restore a remarried widow's benefit rights on the earnings record of her first husband under circumstances of her second husband's death within a year of their marriage. The 1956 amendments provide that social-security coverage will be denied for service in the employ of any organization that is Communist associated.

It is estimated that the amendments to the public assistance titles of the Social Security Act provided by H. R. 7225 will make available in the first year of operation approximately $160 million in increased Federal funds which will be available to the States for augmenting the public assistance payments received by slightly over 5 million needy American citizens. The new medical care program authorized under the public-assistance payments is estimated to cost $65 million in the first year of operation and will do much to assure adequate medical care for our public-assistance recipients.

Amendments to the Social Security Act continuing OASI wage credits for military service and permitting application for lump-sum death benefits by dependents of deceased military personnel was separately enacted as was other legislation providing that members of the uniformed services of the United States—approximately 3 million persons at the present time—will be covered by the social-security laws beginning January 1, 1957, in the same manner as civilians.

The humane purpose and meritorious nature of these improvements in our social security law resulted in the overwhelming support which the legislation received in the two Houses of Congress.

B. Tax legislation

During the 84th Congress the Committee on Ways and Means took favorable action with respect to 60 bills which amended the Internal Revenue Code. Many of these bills made important changes in our tax structure. Five of these bills might be deemed to be major legislation either as they were enacted into law or as they passed the House of Representatives.

Of the five that might be labeled major legislation, one of them passed the House of Representatives in the form of a major revenue bill but a major feature of the bill was deleted in the Senate. The House-passed version of H. R. 4259, the Revenue Act of 1955, provided a $20 tax credit against the individual income tax for each personal exemption claimed by a taxpayer. The legislation also provided a 1-year extension of the existing corporate normal tax and of certain existing excise-tax rates. The House version of H. R. 4259 granted across-the-board individual tax relief amounting to over $2 billion to an estimated 71 million taxpayers. Because of extending existing corporate and excise tax rates for 1 year the net revenue effect of the legislation as passed by the House was to increase receipts toward a balanced budget. The Senate deleted the $20 tax credit from the bill and as H. R. 4259 was enacted into law (Public Law 18) it merely provided for a 1-year extension of the existing corporate normal tax rate and of certain existing excise tax rates.

A major bill amending our Federal tax laws that became public law during the 84th Congress was H. R. 7201 which provided a revised formula for the income taxation of life insurance companies. The legislation made several changes in the taxation of life insurance income so as to improve the definition of income and to prevent abuse of the life insurance treatment by companies which are not entirely life insurance companies. The taxing method provided under this bill was intended to become a permanent formula as the legislation passed the House. The Senate-passed version provided that the formula would be in effect for 1 year. Because of the Senate action it was necessary to extend the formula for an additional year by the enactment of H. R. 11995 (Public Law 784) pending the development of further recommendations with respect to the establishment of a permanent formula for the taxation of life insurance companies' income.

A third bill that might be considered major tax legislation because of its effect in preserving the Federal revenue was H. R. 4725 which closed two loopholes in the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. It is estimated that these loopholes would have cost the Treasury in excess of $1 billion if they had been permitted to remain in the law. In taking this action to repeal sections 452 and 462 of the 1954 Code (relating to prepaid income and to reserves for estimated expenses), the committee directed a staff study to be made with a view to preparing legislation embodying the principles of these sections but providing adequate safeguards to prevent the existence of any loopholes.

A fourth major tax bill prepared by the Committee on Ways and Means was embodied in H. R. 10660 (Public Law 627) as title II of that bill to provide the necessary funds to pay on a sound and current basis the costs of the gigantic Federal highway program enacted during the 84th Congress. This legislation made moderate increases in the Federal excise taxes applicable to gasoline and other types of motor fuels, tires and tread rubber, and trucks, buses, and truck trailers. In addition, the bill provides for revenues to be raised from a use tax on heavy vehicles. It is estimated that in the 16-year period from 1957 to 1972 approximately $14.5 billion will be raised by the new or increased taxes provided under H. R. 10660 and that in addition to this amount there will be allocated to the Highway Trust Fund for road-development purposes $23.7 billion from taxes imposed under present law. As the contemplated improvements in our highway system are accomplished, the motorists of America will realize a saving in their annual motoring costs despite the tax increases included in this highway legislation. For example, it is estimated that the tax increases will cost the average motorist $8.60 per year but that the average motorist will save in annual operating costs on his vehicle $96 per year with the result that he will actually realize a net saving annually of $87.40 for the privilege of driving on a modern up-to-date road system. It is inevitable that the development of a modern highway system in the United States will contribute to the safety and economic welfare of the American public and will provide an increased measure of national security.

Difficult problems were involved in working out this equitable and sound method for financing the new Federal highway program, and the solution reached by the committee contributed in a major way to the overwhelming vote which the combined highway bill received in the House of Representatives and the Senate.

The fifth tax bill that might be termed major legislation relieved farmers from Federal excise taxes in the case of gasoline and special fuels used on the farm for farming purposes by authorizing annual refunds of such taxes paid on gasoline and special motor fuels. Under this bill some relief was granted to the American farmer from the severe price-cost squeeze confronting him. This legislation will provide farmers with approximately $60 million in tax relief each year.

The remaining 55 tax bills which were approved by the Committee on Ways and Means were designed to eliminate existing inequities in our Federal tax structure and to grant appropriate tax relief in certain hardship areas.

C. Tariffs and customs legislation

During the 84th Congress the committee took favorable action on 4 major bills affecting tariff and customs laws and 25 minor bills. The 4 major bills are as follows:

H. R. 1: One of the most important pieces of legislation to be favorably considered by the Congress in the 84th Congress was the Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1955. This legislation became Public Law 86 and continued through June 30, 1958, the authority of the President to enter into trade agreements. The legislation made significant improvements in the administrative safeguards available to domestic producers against excessive imports and made other improvements in our reciprocal trade program. H. R. 1 also prescribed the delegation of authority to the executive department for the establishment of our foreign economic policy which the President described as the cornerstone of our foreign policy.

Pursuant to the authority provided in H. R. 1 trade negotiations were conducted among 22 nations of the free world including the United States during the winter and spring of 1956. As a result of this conference the United States obtained concessions on American exports valued at approximately $400 million annually and expects to receive indirect benefits from other concessions of a substantial dollar amount. Products on which concessions were obtained by the United States cover a wide range of agricultural and industrial commodities and articles.

H. R. 5550: This legislation was favorably acted on by the committee to authorize the President to accept membership in behalf of the United States in the Organization for Trade Cooperation. The principal objective of the establishment of the organization and United States membership therein was to make possible the creation of improved international machinery for administering the most important trade agreement entered into by the United States under the Trade Agreements Act—the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. During the course of the public hearings held by the committee on H. R. 5550, 6 members of the President's Cabinet and 1 Assistant Secretary testified as to the urgent need for the legislation on the grounds that the United States had as much to gain from membership in the organization as any other country by virtue of the fact that the organization would provide a means whereby our country could undertake to guard against impairment of the trade concessions granted to us. In reporting this legislation to the House, the committee adopted several amendments to the bill to make it clear that enactment of H. R. 5550 and the resulting membership in the Organization for Trade Cooperation could not result in the overriding of domestic law by an international body and would not commit the United States to make further tariff reductions or adopt any other trade measures. The amendments adopted by the committee also made it clear that the legislation was not to affect the existing safeguards contained in present law for domestic producers.

H. R. 6040: During the 84th Congress further revision of our customs structure was enacted by the favorable consideration of the Customs Simplification Act of 1956 which provided improved procedures for the valuation of imports and the conversion of foreign currency into dollars for the purpose of existing customs duties. In addition, this legislation repealed certain obsolete provisions of our customs laws and streamlined other provisions so that the procedural aspects of our international trade may be handled more expeditiously. It has been stated that the enactment of this legislation will also introduce increased certainty and greater commercial realism in our customs laws. This legislation became Public Law 927.

H. R. 6059: This legislation, the Philippines Trade Agreement Revision Act of 1955, authorized revision of the 1946 Trade Agreement between the United States of America and the Republic of the Philippines. This legislation became Public Law 196.

Comparable legislation passed the Philippine Legislature and the authorized charges in the existing trade agreement have been proclaimed by the respective chief executives of the two countries. It has been stated that the trade relations that will ensue from these modifications will further serve to strengthen the historic bond of friendship between the peoples of the two countries and will improve the economic relationship between the United States and the Republic of the Philippines.

In addition to the above-enumerated 4 major bills affecting our tariff and customs laws, the committee also took favorable action with respect to 25 other tariff and customs bills of somewhat lesser importance. Among other things these bills continued the suspension of duties on certain strategic and critical materials, extended the free-entry period on gifts for members of the Armed Forces abroad, and household and personal effects brought into the United States on Government orders, and made appropriate adjustments in the tariff and customs status of certain other articles.

D. Narcotics legislation

One of the most insidious and heinous crimes occurring in the United States involves violations of our Federal drug laws and the illicit trafficking in drugs. Not only does drug addiction that is encouraged and spread by this illicit trafficking dissipate the lives of the persons who become addicted, but other socially undersirable consequences result from the violence and crime that attend drug violations. To review the experience with narcotic legislation enacted during the 82d Congress in deterring the illicit drug traffic and to develop additional legislation that might be necessary in this area, the Committee on Ways and Means established a Subcommittee on Narcotics during the close of the first session of the 84th Congress. This subcommittee was composed of Mr. HALE BOGGS, of Louisiana, as chairman; Mr. KARSTEN, of Missouri; Mr. MCCARTHY, of Minnesota; Mr. IKARD, of Texas; Mr. BYRNES, of Wisconsin; Mr. SADLAK, of Connecticut; and Mr. BAKER, of Tennessee. This subcommitee utilized the adjournment period between the first and second sessions of the 84th Congress and continued its work into the second session and reported to the full committee its findings and recommendations resulting from its study. This subcommittee activity was the initiating factor in the development of the Narcotic Control Act of 1956 (H. R. 11619) which became Public Law 728. This legislation provided more severe penalties for narcotic-drug law violations and provided improved enforcement authority for Federal agents charged with this responsibility. This subcommittee activity has also resulted in the introduction of legislation which has been referred to another committee in the House of Representatives to provide for the control of barbiturates and amphetamines. During the course of the consideration of this legislation the Commissioner of Narcotics, the Honorable Harry J. Anslinger, informed the Committee on Ways and Means that the enactment of this legislation would represent a major step forward in the eradication of the illicit drug traffic.

Favorable action was also taken on legislation (H. R. 2369) to correct an inadvertent error in the 1954 code relating to narcotic penalties and on legislation (H. R. 7018), to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to subpena witnesses, require the production of records, and to take other specified actions in connection with the enforcement of the narcotic laws.

E. Miscellaneous legislation

The Committee on Ways and Means acted favorably with respect to seven bills that might be incorporated under this miscellaneous category in the absence of listing them elsewhere in this report. Two of these bills, H. R. 4904 and H. R. 11947 related to the Renegotiation Act of 1951, as amended. The latter bill was major in character in that it included important changes and liberalizations in the renegotiation authority. The bill increased from $500,000 to $1 million the statutory floor below which sales are not subject to renegotiation. The standard commercial article provision was changed and clarified, and the number of executive departments, contracts with which are subject to renegotiation, was reduced. The bill also provided for a 2-year carry forward of losses on renegotiable contracts so that losses sustained in 1954 and later years may be carried forward 2 years for purposes of renegotiation computations. In addition, filing requirements under the law are streamlined so as to minimize the administrative inconvenience of doing business with the Federal Government. These and other improvements in the Renegotiation Act became public law during the 84th Congress.

At the request of the administration, the Committee on Ways and Means twice acted to increase for 1 year in each instance the statutory debt limit. These bills, H. R. 6992 and H. R. 11740, became Public Laws 124 and 678, respectively.

Two other bills relating to certain Treasury administrative expenses (S. 1727, Public Law 57) and to the collection of State sales and use taxes on cigarettes (H. R. 6886, Public Law 335) were favorably acted on by the Committee on Ways and Means.

In addition, the committee acted on House Resolution 475 which was a resolution of inquiry regarding settlement of a tax claim by the Internal Revenue Service of a tax claim against the American Distilling Co.

III. SUBCOMMITTEES

During the closing days of the 1st session of the 84th Congress three subcommittees were established. These subcommittees were (1) the Subcommittee on Taxation of Life Insurance Companies, (2) the Subcommittee on Excise Tax Technical and Administrative Problems, and (3) the Subcommittee on Narcotics. With the exception of the Subcommittee on Excise Tax Technical and Administrative Problems, the legislative work of the subcommittees has been referred to in connection with the discussion of legislation in the preceding paragraphs.

The Subcommittee on Excise Tax Technical and Administrative Problems held extensive public hearings and met many days in executive session to develop legislation that would provide administrative simplicity in connection with our Federal excise tax structure and would remove inequities existing in present law. As a result of this subcommittee activity a report was submitted to the Committee on Ways and Means which was the basis for the preparation of legislation by the committee proposing major revisions in our Federal excise-tax laws. This legislation, H. R. 12298, was introduced by the subcommittee chairman, the Honorable AIME J. FORAND, of Rhode Island, and will receive continued study by the reconstituted subcommittee which is to be known as the Subcommittee on Excise Taxes and which will have added to the scope of its jurisdiction questions involving excise-tax rates. The membership of the reconstituted subcommittee is as follows: Hon. AIME J. FORAND, of Rhode Island, chairman; Mr. EBERHARTER, of Pennsylvania; Mr. KEOGH, of New York; Mr. KARSTEN, of Missouri; Mr. HERLONG, of Florida; Mr. JENKINS, of Ohio; Mr. MASON, of Illinois; and Mr. HOLMES, of Washington.

In addition to the subcommittee activity described above, it is expected that two other subcommittee studies will be undertaken during the adjournment period.

The Subcommittee on Internal Revenue Taxation under the chairmanship of Hon. WILBUR D. MILLS, of Arkansas, includes in its membership Mr. GREGORY, of Kentucky, Mr. O'BRIEN, of Illinois, Mr. IKARD, of Texas, Mr. SIMPSON, of Pennsylvania, Mr. KEAN, of New Jersey, and Mr. BAKER, of Tennessee. This subcommittee will review the 1954 Code to determine what technical and substantive corrections and changes in the Code may be necessary. The subcommittee will also study the correlation between the statute and the regulations promulgated thereunder and inquire into the administration of the Internal Revenue laws under the Reorganization Act of 1951.

The Subcommittee on Customs, Tariffs, and Reciprocal Trade Agreements, under the chairmanship of the Honorable HALE BOGGS, of Louisiana, includes in its membership Mr. KING of California, Mr. HARRISON of Virginia, Mr. MCCARTHY, of Minnesota, Mr. MACHROWICZ of Michigan, Mr. REED of New York, Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin, Mr. SADLAK of Connecticut, and Mr. CURTIS of Missouri. It is expected that this subcommittee will make extensive inquiry into our tariff and customs laws and the administration thereof so as to determine the relationship and effect of these matters on the foreign economic policy of the United States and their effect upon domestic producers and employment.

These subcommittees which will be active during the adjournment period following the 2d session of the 84th Congress, will submit reports to the full committee prior to the convening of the 85th Congress so as to inform the membership of the Committee on Ways and Means as to the activities and findings of the respective subcommittees. It is expected that these reports will make important contributions to the development of legislation in the related fields of inquiry.

Growing Industrial Eminence of the 15th Congressional District of Ohio

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN E. HENDERSON
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, before this session of Congress concludes its business, I wish to state again my intense interest in the growing industrial eminence of the 15th Congressional District of Ohio. Much has been published in national periodicals calling attention to the economic rebirth of the Ohio Valley. In the June 1956 issue of Fortune, these dramatic developments were discussed fully in an article entitled "The Boiling Ohio." I am proud to state that the area which I have the honor to represent in this Chamber is very much a part of this new industrial empire.

The recent decision by the Olin-Mathieson Chemical Corp. to construct its $120 million integrated aluminum-production plant in Monroe County is the most spectacular in the industrial growth pattern in which other companies also have notably affected the economies of Washington, Muskingum, and Guernsey Counties.

Still, let me say that this area of southeastern Ohio is only on the threshold of developing the full economic potential of its people and its natural resources. Decades of chronic unemployment and economic adversity have beset this area despite the wealth of its resources. Coal, water, natural gas, oil, and salt are but a few of the resources with which nature has blessed this area. To this we may add a central location with respect to the Nation's market centers; highway, rail, and water transportation; and an abundance of electric power. Most notable of all are the people of the area who are eager to improve the local economy and who have organized themselves into chambers of commerce and civic associations which are actively seeking to interest industries in becoming a part of their communities. Such organizations are working vigorously in Guernsey, Monroe, Morgan, Muskingum, Noble, Perry, and Washington Counties. I have worked closely with these groups and am familiar with their programs and operations. I pledge to continue my efforts in their behalf.

To them must go the credit for the notable achievements which have been recorded thus far. The fact that large areas still remain to be developed industrially is the challenge which faces them today. Their challenge is also an opportunity for American industry seeking sites in areas near the center of our Nation's commercial heart, yet disbursed from the crowded centers of industry where additional industrial development is inadvisable.

Report to the People of the 17th Congressional District of New York

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. FREDERIC R. COUDERT, JR.
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. COUDERT. Mr. Speaker, this marks the 10th year that I have been privileged to represent the 17th Congressional District of New York in the House of Representatives.

From 1939 to 1946 I served in the New York State Senate, where I sponsored a substantial volume of legislation and was chairman of the Rapp-Coudert legislative committee, which unearthed the Communist and other subversive conspiracies in the New York City public educational system. In commenting upon this investigation the New York Times said:

> The Rapp-Coudert Committee is to be congratulated.

Through my congressional years I have fought for national security, stable money, tax reduction, and sound economy; civil rights; less restrictive entry of displaced persons; adequate school facilities; solution of housing problems, of problems of the aging, and for many other worthwhile objectives.

During the past 4 years I have supported the Eisenhower Administration's legislative program in the conviction that this was in the best interests of all the people. To my gratification, President Eisenhower saw fit to endorse me in the following letter:

> THE WHITE HOUSE,
> Washington, April 28, 1956.
> DEAR FRITZ: I should feel remiss if I failed to express to you my appreciation of your cooperation in the Congress in connection with a number of matters of vital importance to our country which have come before the Committee on Appropriations. I am aware that on several occasions your efforts have contributed a great deal to the success of key programs, and for this I am personally grateful. I look forward to the continuance of your effective public service in the years to come.
>
> With kind regards.
>
> Sincerely,
>
> DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER.

Space limitation permits me to present here only the highlights of my 10-year congressional record.

The first objective of our Government during these difficult and troubled times has been safeguarding the security of the United States and the welfare of its people. Within the limitations of that framework I have worked ceaselessly as a member of the House Committee on Appropriations to reduce waste and unnecessary Federal expenditures to the end that the people of the United States may one day be relieved of much of their paralyzing tax burden.

TAXES AND INFLATION

I am a strong advocate of reducing taxes whenever that can be done without endangering the national security or adversely affecting the public welfare. I have favored adoption of the recommendations of the Hoover Commission, aimed at lowering the cost of governmental operation and thus making lower taxes possible.

When I became a Member of Congress one of my first concerns was to provide tax relief for our citizens who had borne the burden of providing funds for defense of the free world for so many years. In the Republican 80th Congress we passed 3 tax bills to provide needed relief, but President Truman vetoed all 3. I voted for all 3 and voted to override all 3 vetoes. The first veto was sustained in both Houses, the second in the Senate, and it was not until April 2, 1948, that we were able to override the veto and reduce tax rates from World War II levels.

In 1950 I voted for a bill passed by the House to cut excise taxes by a little over $1 billion. But the Korean war intervened before the Senate could act and Congress then had to increase taxes, rather than cut them, to provide weapons against the Communist aggression.

The Truman Administration asked for further tax increases in 1951. Believing the increases recommended by the Democrat-controlled Ways and Means Committee were excessive, I voted to recommit the Revenue Act of 1951 to the Committee and also voted against its passage. With many of my Republican colleagues I felt that additional cuts in nondefense expenditures should be made before tax rates were further increased.

It was again my privilege to vote for a tax reduction in 1954. I voted on four rollcalls in favor of President Eisenhower's tax-reduction program. Early in 1955 the Democrat majority in Congress tried to embarrass President Eisenhower by a further income-tax reduction. This would have prevented achievement of the President's objective of reducing inflationary pressures through maintenance of a balanced budget. I was convinced that such a reduction would not benefit the low-income groups it was supposed to help, because it would ultimately be translated into an increase in the cost of living. Therefore, I supported President Eisenhower's position in opposition to the Democrat-sponsored tax cut.

I have long sponsored and fought for legislation to compel a balanced budget in absence of war or national emergency in order to prevent the dangerous inflation resulting from Federal budget deficits.

As a member of the Appropriations Committee I have done all in my power to reduce unnecessary Government expenditures and to eliminate waste. It has been my objective to reduce the burden on individual incomes whenever possible so as to increase the incentives of our people to produce more and thus to expand our economy and its tax base.

Accordingly, on March 16, 1950, I proposed a constitutional amendment that would ultimately permit the Federal Government to resort to an income tax only in a national emergency and to reduce the national debt and pay interest thereon.

In 1956 I introduced a bill to establish a Hoover-type Commission on Federal Taxation to consider the defects and inequities of the present tax structure, particularly the income tax, and to recommend constructive changes. It is worthy of note that T. Coleman Andrews, former Commissioner of Internal Revenue in the Eisenhower Administration, has called for repeal or drastic modification of the Federal income tax law and has recommended a similar commission to study this question.

For some years I have been concerned about problems confronting many of my constituents who are self-employed or engaged in professional work. Employees of corporations are not taxed on part of the payments made into approved retirement plans. But the professional person or small-business man must provide for his own retirement from his income after taxes. On October 20, 1951, I first introduced and fought for a bill to allow an income-tax deduction to individuals for premiums paid on annuities and life insurance contracts. I intend to continue the fight.

Through the years I have supported rent-control and price-control measures when needed to protect the people from the ravages of inflation. I voted for such anti-inflationary measures from my first year in Congress until 1953, when upon the recommendation of President Eisenhower, Federal price, wage, and rent controls were repealed in order to stimulate the national economy. At that time New York State had its own rent-control laws.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

In the struggle against the forces of communism the United States has long been committed to leadership of the free world. I have supported the necessary action to make this leadership effective.

I have supported a broad program of foreign aid under both the Truman and Eisenhower administration, but have sought to prevent misuse and waste of the taxpayers' dollars. As a member of the Appropriations Committee, I have frequently called attention to specific instances of waste and bad management. This in no way reflected lack of sympathy with the basic and necessary objectives of the program.

During my first year in Congress I voted for a relief program for war-devastated countries and also voted for the Greek-Turkish aid bill, authorizing $400 million aid to Greece and Turkey in their resistance to communism. I voted in 1948 for establishment of the Marshall plan, a program that has been continued with modifications ever since.

The first important action of the 84th Congress was the resolution to authorize the President to use the Armed Forces in defense of Formosa, necessitated by five years of promises to defend the Chiang National Government in the event of attack from the Red China Government on the mainland. I voted for it.

The fact that the President came to the Congress for the authority, thereby setting a precedent for the first time in such circumstances, was particularly gratifying to me. It was gratifying because of my long fight to amend the law so as to require Presidential consultation of the Congress before committing American troops to armed combat, except in self-defense or pursuant to the obligations of our mutual security treaties.

Believing it essential that we expand our foreign trade, I have supported the reciprocal-trade-agreements program. I voted for this program in 1948, 1949, 1951, 1954, and 1955. Our present law extends the program until 1958.

As another step to expand our international trade, President Eisenhower asked legislation to simplify custom procedures. I supported this program, which became law this year.

I have worked to facilitate the investment of capital in overseas businesses so that American techniques and resourcefulness can accompany our dollars overseas. I believe this is one of the best ways to stimulate development of the economies of friendly nations. With this in mind, I voted in 1949 for a bill, which became law, to permit Federal Reserve member banks to deal in and underwrite securities issued by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

In this same field I voted in 1950 for a bill, part of the point-4 program, to expand the authority of the Export-Import Bank. This provided that the bank could guarantee, for an appropriate fee, private capital invested abroad up to $250 million against losses through expropriation or restricted conversion of foreign currency into United States dollars. The following year I voted for a bill to increase the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank by $1 billion.

In another phase of foreign affairs, I was recorded in 1947 in favor of statutory authorization for the State Department's Information Program. This included the Voice of America.

I supported the passage of a bill in 1948 to authorize admission of 202,000 additional displaced persons into the United States. Through the years I have consistently supported such legislation.

In 1952, I favored the McCarran-Walter Immigration Act as a means of strengthening the Attorney General's authority to deal with subversives, Communist or otherwise. The act was faulty in a number of respects and President Eisenhower has recommended a revision, with which I am in accord.

DEFENSE

Provision for the military security of our country is the most important matter with which Congress and our Government must deal. I have voted for the multi-billion-dollar appropriations and other defense measures deemed necessary to make and keep our country strong.

As far back as 1948, I was one of those who recognized that our national defense must be based in large part on air superiority. In that year I voted for a bill to provide funds to start immediate expansion of our Air Force to 70-group strength, over the protests of President Truman. I have consistently supported the authorization of funds to provide adequate research in the defense field and development of new weapons.

While recognizing the vital importance of maintaining an adequate defense establishment, I have been ever mindful of the danger of waste and extravagance in military expenditures. I have fought to assure the greatest value out of every taxpayer's dollar.

In the course of this never-ending struggle, I participated with Representative HOWARD SMITH, Democrat, of Virginia, in 1952 in a move to impose an overall ceiling of $46 billion upon Defense Department spending during fiscal 1953. I did so because the Defense Department had available, with new funds requested and carryover funds, a total of over $100 billion legally spendable in 1953.

There were loud outcries from the professional military, their civilian chiefs, and a section of the press that the limitation passed by the House would hamstring the military and endanger national security. The House limitation did not become law because of failure of the Senate to agree. But it turned out in fact that the military was wholly unable to spend during 1953 even the $46 billion which the House had been prepared to allow. This fact completely vindicated the House action and my position.

To promote the efficient operation of the Military Establishment, I supported the National Security Act of 1947, which unified the Armed Forces under a Secretary of Defense with Cabinet rank. It also created a Department of the Air Force coequal in rank with the Army and Navy.

VETERANS

Having served overseas as an infantry soldier in World War I, I have always had a deep appreciation of the problems of veterans of our Armed Forces. I voted for legislation to increase allowances for veterans receiving college training; to pay half the cost of special housing for wheelchair disabled veterans; to permit holders of terminal leave pay bonds to cash them after September 1, 1947, instead of holding them 5 years; to permit payment to veterans of retroactive benefits withheld during hospitalization; and to grant additional allowances for veterans paralyzed from service-connected injuries.

HOUSING

The need for decent housing for all our people has long been one of the great problems facing the Nation. I have proposed and pressed for passage of legislation to facilitate the private construction of homes for middle-income families in metropolitan areas. I consider this one of the most acute needs in the housing field.

I have supported measures for public housing where needed. From my first year in Congress I have supported measures to aid in construction and repair of homes, to expand and liberalize mortgage insurance programs of the Federal Housing Administration, to eliminate and prevent slums, and to conserve and develop urban communities.

HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE

Perhaps the most important matter within this broad field is the vast Social-Security Program. Throughout my congressional career I have favored broadening the coverage of the Social-Security System and increasing the amount of benefit payments, while at the same time maintaining the program on a sound fiscal basis.

In 1948 I voted to override President Truman's veto of a bill which included, among other provisions, increased Federal grants for old-age assistance, aid to dependent children and the blind. The following year I voted to extend coverage of the Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Program to 11 million additional workers and to increase retirement annuities an average of 70 percent. In 1952 I voted for amendments increasing old-age and survivor benefits and raising to $75 a month the amount of earnings permitted without loss of benefits.

In 1955 I introduced a resolution to establish a commission on problems of the aging, with a view toward a program of care, encouragement, and rehabilitation, based upon authoritative study and recommendation.

I voted in 1955 for a proposal passed by the House to lower the pension age for women to 62 and to make totally disabled workers eligible for pensions at 50. A slightly different version, for which I also voted, became law in 1956.

To advance national health, I voted for a bill to establish a National Science Foundation to encourage scientific research, which was vetoed by President Truman. I also voted to establish a National Institute for Research and Heart Diseases.

In legislation on education, I supported establishment of a National Advisory Committee on Education and a bill authorizing the President to call a White House Education Conference. In the last session of Congress I voted for the anti-segregation amendment to the Federal school aid bill and for passage of the bill.

In the field of civil rights I voted for a number of constructive measures, including the antipoll tax bill. I supported the original House bill to establish a permanent Fair Employment Practices Commission and fought a Democrat filibuster against it. In the last session of Congress I supported President Eisenhower's Civil Rights Program, which was passed by the House.

AGRICULTURE

In the field of agriculture, I have sought to protect the American farmer who represents an important segment of the national economy. But at the same time I have worked to protect the consumer against unnecessarily high-food prices. To keep down the cost of living, I voted for repeal of Federal taxes on oleomargarine. I have consistently voted against high rigid farm price controls which boost the cost of food to the consumer.

VOTING RECORD

The foregoing record is evidence that the voters of the 17th district have been faithfully represented in the significant and controversial issues acted upon by the House since I have been a Member of Congress. In the 84th Congress just closed I have voted on 90 percent of all rollcall votes and upon hundreds of additional votes taken by voice, division, and tellers.

In concluding this report, I wish to express my deep appreciation to the voters of the district who have given me the honor and privilege of representing them in Congress.

Statement Concerning the Activities of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, House of Representatives, 84th Congress

---

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HERBERT C. BONNER
OF NORTH CAROLINA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of pleasure and pride that I report that, with adjournment of the 84th Congress, the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries has produced a record of constructive activity unequaled in any prior Congress since the formation of its present jurisdiction pursuant to the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946.

During the first session, there were a total of 86 meetings of the full committee and its subcommittees. Eighteen pieces of legislation considered by the committee became law. During the second session, there were 131 meetings of the full committee and its subcommittees. As of this date, 56 legislative measures reported from the full committee in this session have been approved by the President.

Major legislation included authorization for the world's first atomic powered merchant ship; the Fisheries and Wildlife Act of 1956; granting of permanent status to the United States Merchant Marine Academy at Kings Point, N. Y.; authorization of 100 percent mortgage insurance on privately financed loans for the construction of vessels; bills increasing the safety of operation of small craft, including the inspection and certification of vessels carrying more than six passengers for hire; and, several bills authorizing the sale of Government-owned ships to expand or inaugurate essential shipping service.

During the two sessions of this Congress, the committee launched and carried through a number of highly important inquiries pursuant to special investigative authority or in accordance with section 135 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946.

EIGHTY-FOURTH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

At the outset of this Congress, it was decided that the greatest value could be rendered to the committee, a majority of whose members were freshmen Congressmen, by holding a series of hearings concerning the functions and workings of the several administrative agencies under the jurisdiction of the committee. Accordingly, during February and March of 1955 extensive hearings were held in Washington, studying the operations of, first, the Maritime Administration and the Federal Maritime Board of the Department of Commerce; second, the Fish and Wildlife Service of the Department of the Interior, third, the United States Coast Guard, Department of the Treasury; fourth, the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, Department of Commerce; and fifth, the Panama Canal Company and Panama Canal Zone Government. These hearings proved of great value and were welcomed not only by the new Members, but by those who had served with the committee during previous Congresses. They were strictly informative in nature and provided much useful background for the Members to enable them better to appraise legislation subsequently considered concerning the agencies involved.

During this same period, the committee held follow-up hearings on legislation enacted in the previous Congress to determine the effectiveness and administration thereof.

Hearings held before the committee in the 83d Congress disclosed the critical need for modern, large-capacity, high-speed tankers to keep the merchant marine in a state of readiness in case of emergency. All testimony indicated that the minimum speed for the tankers proposed to be constructed under a special trade-in and build program was 18 knots. However, when it came to the attention of the committee that the maritime Administration, Department of Commerce, was consummating trade-in transactions for new vessels to operate at a maximum speed not in excess of 16 knots, immediate inquiry was held. No acceptable explanation was given for the change in requirements, but it is gratifying to report at this time that the program has been proceeding substantially as originally represented to the committee.

Probably, one of the most important aspects of American merchant-marine policy has been the concept that the United States should carry "a substantial portion of its water-borne foreign commerce" which has generally been construed to mean an ultimate goal of about half of the tonnage moved in the foreign commerce. In the free flow of American foreign trade, of course, this goal is subject to the fluctuations of normal competition and the willingness of the Congress to realize that the goal cannot be approached without recognition of the differential between American and foreign costs of operation and standards of living. However, in view of the extensive foreign aid and rehabilitation programs conducted under Government auspices following World War II, virtually all aid programs contained provisions to the effect that at least 50 percent of Government cargoes should be carried in American bottoms, provided such were available at fair and reasonable rates for American-flag vessels. This requirement, initially written into individual foreign-aid laws, enabled American-flag shipping to participate in the foreign commerce of the United States under the abnormal conditions of the postwar years. In the 83d Congress, the principle was enacted into permanent law in recognition of the apparent fact that United States Government programs would continue for some time to come. Notwithstanding the previously well-established principle, supported by precedent as far back as 1904, certain Government Departments, either misinformed or under pressure from foreign sources, charged that the law was thwarting important Government programs involving the exportation of surplus agricultural commodities. Full hearings failed to disclose any substance to these charges. Contrarily, they proved the soundness and workability of the so-called 50–50 law.

Another matter of considerable importance which was investigated during the first session of this Congress was labor-management relations in the maritime industry. The Merchant Marine Act of 1936 was enacted at a time when the American shipping industry was at a perilously low stage, and industrial relations were substandard to the rest of American industry. Much of the philosophy of that act was aimed at bringing maritime labor up to the levels enjoyed by other groups in the citizen labor forces of the United States. Over the years, however, certain provisions of the act seem to have been ignored or not properly implemented. As a result, an impression has developed in more recent years that maritime labor is strangling the American shipping industry. With a completely wide-open mind on this subject, I called for a full-scale investigation of all phases of maritime labor-management problems. Staff members were sent to the Pacific, Atlantic, Gulf, and Great Lakes areas to interview and gather material from all key figures in labor and management, concerned with sea-going and shoreside personnel. A voluminous and valuable record of hearings was compiled over a period of 2 months in 1955. A unanimous committee report—House Report No. 1658—filed in the House on January 19, 1956, carefully analyzes all phases of this problem.

Hearings were also held on the vessel replacement program of the 16 subsidized operators holding contracts under the Merchant Marine Act of 1936. These operators, representing the hard core of the common-carrier segment of the American merchant marine, are all soon to be confronted with obligations to replace and modernize their fleets. In the face of rising construction and operating costs, the committee was interested to hear a discussion of replacement plans and a recounting of the particular problems confronting the lines.

During the 1st session of the 84th Congress, H. R. 6243, by Mr. BONNER, and H. R. 6276, by Mr. TOLLEFSON, were introduced to authorize the construction of a nuclear powered merchant ship to promote the peacetime application of atomic energy. Hearings held on these bills resulted in the reporting of H. R. 6243 to the House, and eventual favorable action by the Senate in slightly amended form in the second session. Implementation of this law will be a landmark in maritime history.

Other matters of importance during the first session were the investigation of longshore labor problems in southern California; the inauguration of extensive investigation of the ocean freight-forwarding industry; hearings on various fisheries and wildlife conservation bills; a study of the proposed abolishment of the Panama Railroad, and other matters relating to Panama Canal operations; and, bills authorizing the sale of the Government-owned warbuilt passenger-cargo vessels the SS Monterey and SS La Guardia, to private operators for expanding the essential passenger-carrying segment of our merchant marine.

EIGHTY-FOURTH CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

During the first session, emphasis was placed on indoctrination, orientation, and investigation of various problems of concern to the committee as a whole. With the exception of certain legislation which was referred to special subcommittees on Fisheries and Wildlife Conservation and the Panama Canal, and the investigations of longshore labor in southern California and of the freight-forwarding industry, the greater part of all activity was before the full committee. At the beginning of the second session, however, four standing subcommittees were appointed to distribute the workload and make possible more expeditious handling of the legislative backlog. These subcommittees are, first, Subcommittee on Merchant Marine; second, Subcommittee on Fisheries and Wildlife Conservation; third, Subcommittee on Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Navigation; and fourth, Subcommittee on Panama Canal. When considered preferable, some matters were held for the attention of the full committee, irrespective of category.

By subject matter, the principal activities of the second session may be summarized as follows:

I. MERCHANT MARINE

The convening of the second session found the Cargo Preference Act again subject to misinformed or prejudiced attack. In line with previous committee policy to give all interested parties an opportunity to be heard, full hearings were held in January and the first half of February to determine the substance, if any, of the current charges against the 50–50 cargo law and the possibility of need for change to avoid conflict with other national policy. Testimony from the Departments of Agriculture, State, and Commerce, agricultural and American shipping interests, and a leading representative of European shipping, either supported or failed to negate the soundness of the basic principle involving cargo preference where Government sponsored cargoes are concerned. These hearings are covered fully in a report entitled "Cargo Preference and Its Relations to the Farm Surplus Disposal Program," February 27, 1956—H. Rept. No. 1818.

As a followup to the extensive hearings on maritime labor relation problems, steps were taken via hearings and conferences to bring about the establishment of a uniform termination date of labor agreements in the maritime industry. Progress was made and much support was given to the idea that this would be a stabilizing force in maritime labor relations. No legislation was involved.

In the field of legislation, the second session was noteworthy for several important measures designed to strengthen existing law and in other ways encourage the further development of our merchant marine.

Bitter experience in World Wars I and II has shown that inadequacy of shipbuilding and ship repair potential can be our Achilles' heel in time of national emergency. Therefore, with depressing statements on the health of the ship construction and repair phases of the maritime industry before it, the committee (a) sought to provide for more effective information on shipyard availability by a bill to require periodic surveys of national shipyard capacity and capability, (b) extended the Emergency Ship Repair Act for an additional 2 years, (c) prohibited the use in coastwise trade of vessels rebuilt outside the United States, and (d) recommended the establishment of a modern shipyard for use in emergencies in lieu of an existing reserve shipyard considered to be obsolete. This latter matter raised serious questions as to the adequacy of other reserve shipyards and the committee plans to make appropriate inquiry into the entire subject of standby shipyards.

After protracted debate in the House, and deep consideration in the Senate, the question of whether or not to make the first application of atomic energy to the merchant marine was resolved in the closing months of Congress when the Senate adopted the House bill with amendments. The amendments, while preserving appropriate division of authority between the Atomic Energy Commission and the Department of Commerce, assure the development of a practical nuclear-powered merchant ship. The first ship will unquestionably be experimental but it should go far toward proving the feasibility of this great source of power in ship construction and design.

At the beginning of the second session, the President's budget message requested appropriations for the construction of a nuclear-powered tanker and two austerity prototype ships of new design designated as the Freedom and Clipper classes which would be especially suited for mass production in time of national emergency. The chairman and ranking members of both the majority and minority sides of the committee appeared before the Commerce Subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee to present arguments showing the necessity for legislative authority to construct these new special types of vessels intended for purposes other than the fulfillment of "the long-range program previously adopted" under the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, as amended. The committee representatives contended that, however desirable the construction of these vessels might be, existing law did not provide sufficient authority. In other words, since the proposals were distinct departures from the 1936 act, specific requests should be referred to and approved by the appropriate legislative committees before appropriations were granted. The Appropriations Committee agreed with the position of the Merchant Marine Committee members, and in due course legislation was proposed to authorize the construction of prototype vessels of the Freedom and Clipper design, together with the experimental conversion of one Liberty ship.

After full hearing, the committee acted favorably upon House Joint Resolution 614, with an amendment eliminating the construction of the Freedom class prototype. This amendment was due to disclosure during the hearings that a private operator was already under commitment to build seven vessels of the Freedom class for its regular trade routes. Accordingly, it did not appear that the expenditure of some $8 million for the construction of one such vessel for Government account was justified. This legislation has since been enacted into law.

Other important legislation dealing with merchant marine matters included authority to use the Maritime Administration revolving fund to meet the expense of activation, repair, and deactivation of Government-owned vessels chartered to private operators; a bill to provide for biennial instead of annual inspection of merchant vessels; an amendment to the 1936 act to permit the transportation of privately owned motor vehicles of Government personnel on commercially operated American-flag ships; a bill to provide a single standard of evaluation, and otherwise clarify existing provisions of law relative to marine war-risk insurance; and a bill to remove an inequity in the Merchant Ship Sales Act of 1946 affecting those who purchased war-built vessels prior to the enactment of that act.

In the close of the committee's activities during this Congress, forcible attention has been brought to the fact that, despite the needs of an expanding waterborne commerce, major gaps exist in several areas. One of the most serious deficiencies is in the important domestic coastwise and intercoastal trades. Essential trade routes 3 and 4 from the Atlantic Coast to Cuba and Mexico are not adequately served at present. Only two American-flag passenger ships are in service between the United States and northern Europe, with trade route 8 from New York to Antwerp/Rotterdam not presently being served by any American-flag passenger vessels. And excellent possibilities appear to exist for expansion of commerce between United States southern Atlantic ports and the Caribbean area.

The committee considered and favorably reported several proposals which would have authorized the sale of war-built vessels to citizens for operation in trades not presently being adequately served. Several of these matters contemplated the conversion of vessels to new types which would enhance their potential use for national defense purposes as well as increase their commercial efficiency. Some have been enacted into law, while others, due to misunderstanding or opposition from other forms of transportation and misinformation after being reported by the committee almost unanimously, failed of passage and will have to be reconsidered in the next Congress.

Probably the most important single piece of maritime legislation successfully acted upon in this Congress was that which authorizes the Government to guarantee up to 100 percent of privately financed mortgages or loans for the construction of new merchant vessels. Existing law permits direct Government financing of essential ship construction. However, in order to increase public participation in the merchant marine program and reduce appropriation pressure, there was enacted in the 83d Congress legislation which authorized 90 percent Government guaranty of ship construction mortgages and loans, except in the case of so-called special purpose vessels where 100 percent could be guaranteed. Experience with this law proved that, as a practical matter, it was not workable and would not serve the intended purpose of encouraging the development of the merchant marine. Private financing institutions were unwilling to tie up large sums of money over long periods of time and also assume a portion of the substantial financial risk involved. It is anticipated that the recent amendments to this law will make possible the early replacement of existing but obsolescent vessels, and will encourage expansion of American-flag shipping with new operators and additional modern vessels.

Shortly before the end of the session, Department of Commerce and Department of Defense officials were called to discuss with the committee the matter of the replacement of the Steamship America which, under the terms of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, will become obsolete in 1960. This hearing was purely preliminary and solely for the purpose of learning the plans of the executive branch in this matter so important to the national security and the prestige of the United States as a maritime Nation. It is desirable that this subject be followed up early in the first session of the next Congress.

II. FISHERIES AND WILDLIFE CONSERVATION

A major portion of the committee's activities were devoted to problems concerning commercial and sports fishing and wildlife conservation.

In recent years, the growth of population and the unprecedented expansion of our national economy have simultaneously increased the importance of these subjects and created serious difficulties demanding attention and correction.

The commercial fisheries are an important source for the Nation's food supply. Recreational hunting and fishing, becoming more popular each year, are affording employment to many thousands and adding millions of dollars to our gross national product. At the same time, fewer areas of our country are available for the conservation and management of our wildlife resources. Existing areas are being sought by conflicting interests for mineral or industrial exploitation.

One of the first legislative proposals referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine ind Fisheries in this session of Congress called for a sweeping reorganization of the governmental setup concerned with the problems of the commercial fisheries. Increasing costs of production of boats and gear, the need for discovering and developing new sources of fishery products, together with the problems of research and resource management, brought about the introduction of a number of bills designed to aid the commercial fishery industry. Extensive study and hearings over a period of several months resulted in the Fisheries and Wildlife Act of 1956, giving recognition to the increasingly difficult problems of the commercial fishing industry, establishing a revolving loan fund, placing the Saltonstall-Kennedy Act on an expanded and permanent basis, and, through the process of amendments to the original proposals, emphasizing the growing importance of sports fishing, hunting, and wildlife conservation as sources of recreation. This act makes substantial changes within the Department of Interior and materially up-grades the status of the functions previously performed by the Fish and Wildlife Service of the Department.

A companion act to the Fisheries and Wildlife Act of 1956 provides for the education and training of high school, college, and university students for the fishing industry. There is a growing shortage of manpower ranging all the way from the crews of fishing boats to laboratory researchers and other technicians. This act will meet the problem by authorizing funds for high school vocational training and grants to colleges and universities.

Among the major conservation matters considered by the committee during this session was a bill to establish the United States section of an international commission between the United States and Canada for the control and eventual elimination of the predatory sea lamprey in the Great Lakes. Over a period of years, the Congress has authorized research and experiment to find ways and means of controlling the sea lamprey which has virtually destroyed the once extensive white fish and lake trout fisheries of the Great Lakes. The successful discovery of control methods will now be implemented through the international commission created by this legislation.

The committee considered and favorably reported to the House some six bills authorizing the establishment or modernization of fish hatcheries throughout the country. Five of these bills have become law and will result in new or expanded facilities in Vermont, West Virginia, North Carolina, Virginia, and Montana. An additional bill, introduced by Representative WINT SMITH of Kansas, was before the committee but departmental reports were not received in sufficient time to hold hearings and take action thereon prior to adjournment of Congress. In each case, substantial need was shown for the hatcheries legislation. It seems desirable, however, that the subject be thoroughly explored in the first session of the next Congress to examine the policies of the Fish and Wildlife Service regarding the location of hatcheries, their overall need, and the formulation of standards by which applications for new hatcheries can be evaluated on a national basis.

Other conservation legislation included a bill to provide for adequate protection against drought for the unique Okefenokee Swamp in Georgia; a bill to provide for the continued preservation for conservation purposes of federally owned lands adjacent to the Jim Woodruff Reservoir in Florida and Georgia; and, a bill to prevent the extinction of the Key deer, a vanishing species inhabiting the Florida keys.

At the opening of the session, serious charges were made that wildlife refuges, or parts thereof, were being disposed of or dangerously exploited by conflicting interests. Several bills were before the committee which would have required congressional consent to any proposal to dispose of any refuge or part thereof for any purpose. The committee held extensive hearings on this subject and issued a report entitled "Preservation of National Wildlife Refuges"—House Report No. 1941—setting forth an arrangement arrived at with the Secretary of the Interior, whereby, in lieu of legislation, the committee would review any proposed changes in the national wildlife refuges. Since the establishment of this arrangement, the informal procedure has worked well. In only two instances, involving oil and gas leases, has it been deemed necessary to hold public hearings. In these cases, committee approval was forthcoming.

Hearings also were held on a proposal to transfer some 11,000 acres of the Wichita Wildlife Refuge to the Department of Defense. While no action was taken on the legislation involved in this case, it points up the need for constant vigilance on the part of the Congress to protect and preserve the remaining wilderness areas against unnecessary encroachment.

III. COAST GUARD, NAVIGATION, AND MERCHANT MARINE SAFETY

Several disasters have occurred in recent years involving extensive loss of life of passengers and crews aboard small craft operated for hire. These vessels, despite the large number of passengers carried, were not subject to inspection and certification by the Coast Guard with regard to seaworthiness, safety equipment, or qualifications of the operators. In each case, however, the evidence showed that the casualties would not have occurred had the vessels been subject to proper inspection. Legislation to provide for necessary regulation by the Coast Guard of small vessels, such as party fishing craft, carrying more than six passengers for hire, was thoroughly considered by the committee and favorably acted upon in this session.

Other proposals to improve safety of boat operation included a bill to clarify existing confusion by centralizing jurisdiction over navigation lights on fixed structures, and another to standardize lights on motorboats.

To increase the efficiency of the Coast Guard, one proposal establishes a supply fund to modernize accounting procedures along the lines of Hoover Commission recommendations.

The temporary promotion authority of the Coast Guard was extended for another 5 years, and its authorized officer strength was increased to 3,000.

Starting in May of this year, the committee embarked upon a full-scale study of the possible need for additional regulation of recreational boating. This sport has grown explosively in recent years, particularly in the field of boats of less than 16 feet propelled by outboard motors. At this time, the committee has held some 6 days of hearings in Washington on this important subject. Further hearings will be held in boating centers throughout the country during the balance of the year. No legislation is before the committee, and the investigation will be as thorough and as objective as possible before report and recommendations are made. It should be noted that this study was initiated at the suggestion of the manufacturers of pleasure boats, engines, and other equipment.

Just before adjournment, the Nation was shocked by the disastrous collision of the Swedish passenger ship, motor vessel Stockholm, and the Italian luxury liner steamship Andrea Doria. That such a catastrophe could occur today with all of the modern communications and safety equipment, and international standards of ship construction and navigation, raises serious questions as to whether existing requirements are high enough. Ocean passenger traffic is increasing yearly with American citizens comprising the great proportion of the traveling public patronizing the American and foreign passenger vessels which operate to and from the United States. Immediate authority was requested of and granted by the Congress to make thorough studies and investigations of merchant marine safety on the high seas, including the facts and circumstances surrounding the tragic collision of the Stockholm and Andrea Doria. Investigation is presently in progress and will continue throughout the balance of the year.

IV. PANAMA CANAL

Serious questions have been raised concerning the need to continue the operation of the Panama Railroad across the Isthmus of Panama in the Canal Zone versus proposals to depend upon highway transit from the Atlantic to the Pacific side of the zone. Some hearings have been held on this subject, and a railroad expert has been employed by the committee to make a special survey of the situation.

In addition to a number of minor bills, the committee approved a proposal authorizing the construction of a bridge across the canal at Balboa, C. Z., to carry out treaty agreements reached in 1955.

RECOMMENDATIONS FOR FUTURE ACTION

In addition to continued study and action predicated on the investigations currently underway relative to the safety of recreational boating, and the adequacy of international standards of construction and operation of passenger vessels on the high seas, the following subjects appear to be of importance for consideration early in the next Congress:

First. Tramp shipping under the American flag. Bills have been introduced on this subject several times in recent years including the second session of this Congress. The subject is difficult and carries many implications which should be studied with the greatest care and attention. Time did not permit full deliberation of the pending legislation in this session. Yet it is obvious that the present conception of liner services on fixed trade routes is not sufficient to even approximate the commonly accepted goal of quantity of shipping needed under the American flag. The present American-flag tramp fleet is composed mostly of vessels of obsolete design and well past middle age in service. Introduction of a bill similar to the one presently before the committee would afford an appropriate vehicle for the careful consideration of this important subject.

Second. Reserve fleet, ship transfer, and trade-in policy: The past several years have seen these subjects become so obscured as to make it impossible to determine whether there is any policy or any program of an organized and generally understood nature. Full investigation and hearings should be most helpful.

Third. Reserve shipyards: Investigation of 1 of the 4 reserve shipyards suggests the need for examining all of these yards to determine their adequacy and value in the event of future mobilization effort.

Fourth. Tourism by passenger ship: The startling fact that American vessels are carrying only 18 percent or less of the busy waterborne passenger traffic across the North Atlantic and are losing ground with air competition in other areas suggest that a study of tourism by ship would be of value in determining the possibilities of future development of this type of service. The popularity of passenger ship travel on the available ships suggest that expansion of American shipping, in private operation, is entirely feasible and desirable.

Fifth. Coastwise, intercoastal, and noncontiguous domestic shipping: Recent study by the Department of Commerce and hearing by the committee in this Congress show that the important domestic trades can be revived. However, further planned study is needed.

Sixth. Unsubsidized shipping—tax deferment of earnings for new ship construction: This was considered in connection with the Long-Range Shipping Act of 1952, but no action was taken due to opposition from certain sources. Approximate equalization of opportunity for nonsubsidized operations with that of subsidized operations with that of subsidized operators on essential trade routes merits the most careful consideration. Hearings commenced this year and additional statements requested by the committee will provide useful background on the prospective value of this type of legislation.

This Congress has seen material development in our merchant marine, and other fields under the committee's jurisdiction. I pledge my continued and full support to carry out and advance all of the objectives of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

In closing, I would like to take this opportunity to express my heartfelt thanks to all of the members of the committee and its staff who have labored hard and devotedly to bring about the substantial and constructive achievements of this Congress.

A Factor of Important Public Interest

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. NOAH M. MASON
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, a factor of important public interest has been brought to light as a result of determinations recorded by the United States Supreme Court, by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, and by the United States Treasury Department's Bureau of Internal Revenue.

The aforesaid determinations were the result of law actions encompassing over 20 years of proceedings in the courts which 3 private citizen companies were obliged to carry on in order to protect their rights to have returned to them the balance of their cash funds which they had deposited and entrusted into the escrow of the treasury of a Government-owned corporation; the companies had faithfully performed their obligations which the aforesaid cash bond had guaranteed and the officers of that corporation had duly recognized the companies' performance and had ordered the return to the companies of the total of their cash bond amounting to over half a million dollars; however, only a minor part of the total of the companies' cash funds was returned to them by the corporate check of that Government-owned corporation, and the balance remained unreturned in the treasury of that corporation on invalid pretexts and was still in its treasury when that corporation was discontinued and dissolved and abolished by an act of Congress.

The Senate and House Committees on the Judiciary have recorded exhaustive reports on the facts and circumstances of this case, setting forth therein their judgment on court records, departmental reports, and the determinative probative evidence; such includes unrebutted evidence transmitted by the Department of Justice and by the United States Treasury Department's Bureau of Internal Revenue proving the companies' legal and equitable ownership of these cash funds; the recommendations of the aforesaid committees, and of Members of Congress of both political parties, have severely condemned therein the procrastination in the withholding of these private cash funds, and have recorded declarations that the integrity of the Government, expected and required of it in its dealing with United States citizens through Government-owned corporations which carry on corporate commercial business, requires the return of aforesaid funds to the depositors and owners thereof; for example, the companies.

There is on file with the aforesaid committees a memorandum dated June 30, 1956—in re S. 759 and H. R. 2940, 84th Congress—which sets forth the essential details of the aforesaid determinations and the pertinent facts and the applicable laws which are cited therein.

Members of Congress whose constituents deal with Government-owned corporations will obtain orientation by these determinations as to what occurs when such a corporation is discontinued and dissolved by congressional mandate and as to what concerns to its unfinished business. One of the important facts recorded in aforesaid memorandum is the determination by the High Court that the sovereign United States, when becoming the liquidator of a Government-owned corporation, merely takes the place of such a corporation, and is placed into a nonsovereign status and must carry on as if it were such a corporation until the unfinished business of such a corporation is fully terminated, unless Congress mandates otherwise.

A nonpartisan Commission appointed by Congress has recorded finding of facts pertaining to a number of government-owned corporations now in existence as corporate entities and Congressional investigation thereof may decide that some of these corporations have outlived the purpose for which they were created and no longer serve national interests and need no longer be supported by the expenditure of public funds; such corporations may be discontinued and dissolved by congressional action. Citizens who have unfinished business with such corporations will be helped by the determinations on record in aforesaid memorandum; its last paragraph is as follows:

A FACTOR OF IMPORTANT PUBLIC INTEREST

The law actions which the companies in this case had to proceed with to preserve and establish their rights and their claim and which encompassed over 20 years of court proceedings, resulted in clarifying the confusion which prevailed in the past about Government-owned or Government-controlled corporations.

These corporations come into corporate and commercial existence by virtue of the corporate laws of a State or of the District of Columbia; they become active in commercial, industrial, public service or other pursuits like any other corporation in the respective fields of activities which was or is incorporated and financed by private United States citizens.

The following statement is pertinent:

"There are a large number of private corporations which have been created by, or availed of or by, the Government of the United States.

"The determinations in this case of the United States Supreme Court and of the United States Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia where the herein concerned Government-owned Merchant Fleet Corporation was incorporated, are therefore of transcendant importance to those who have dealt, are dealing, or may deal with such Government-owned or Government-controlled corporations, so they may know the extent of their rights against such corporations, after having dealt upon their faith in normal commercial practice with such corporations.

"The determinations of the aforesaid high courts are succinct and definite, and final.

"Likewise of importance is the determination in this case by the United States Bureau of Internal Revenue of the United States Treasury Department that companies which are associated and are operating under one coordinated management in dealing with such a Government-owned corporation and which are performing their obligations covenanted in an agreement with such a governmentally controlled corporation, are not permitted to make joint-returns but are required to make individual returns for each of the associated companies."

Provisions of the New Social-Security Amendments

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM G. BRAY
OF INDIANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. BRAY. Mr. Speaker, the amendments to the social-security program which have been enacted by the 84th Congress will affect millions of Americans. All should be made aware of their rights, privileges, and responsibilities resulting from these new amendments. The House passed these amendments on July 18, 1955, but the Senate did not act on them until July 17, 1956.

Women's benefits: Under the new amendments, women otherwise eligible for benefits will be able to receive them after reaching age 62, instead of age 65. This is perhaps the most far-reaching of the new changes. Many widows have been left in dire circumstances waiting until they reach age 65; they will now be able to receive full benefits at age 62. Many working women have found it difficult to continue in employment until age 65 but have had to carry on until they could receive benefits at age 65. They will now be able to retire at age 62, although their benefits will be less than they would be if they continued working until age 65. Many men over 65 have had to delay retirement until their wives also reached 65, so that they would receive both his and her benefits. Such couples will now be eligible for benefits if he is age 65 and if she is 62, although the wife's benefit will be reduced if she elects to receive it prior to age 65. Women electing benefits prior to age 65 will be able to receive them for the month of November of this year.

This lower retirement age for women demonstrates the increasing interest in a general lowering of retirement age requirements to a more realistic level. Although this Congress did not drop the social-security age for men, such legislation will surely be carefully considered by the new Congress which will convene in January.

Farm coverage: The amendments of 1954 extended social-security coverage to farm operators for the first time, beginning with their income for 1955. When this extension was approved, most of us in Congress believed it would clearly include all farm operators who exercise any substantial part of the management of the farm. Purely rental income from real estate has always been excluded from the social-security tax. It was believed, however, that farm owners who participate in the decisions concerning production, buying and selling stock and produce, and other management policies would clearly be covered. During 1955, as farmers began to make inquiries about social-security coverage, we began to fear that the 1954 amendments were not being properly interpreted by the Social Security Administration and the Bureau of Internal Revenue, which collects the tax. When the House approved the new amendments in 1955, some language was included to clarify the status of farm operators. Early in 1956, when farmers filed their first social-security returns on their 1955 income, the confusion and misinterpretation became even more obvious. Congressman Ralph Harvey, the only Hoosier on the House Agriculture Committee, and I had had repeated consultations with the Social Security Administration and Internal Revenue Bureau about these problems. We decided it was necessary to spell out in legislation the obvious intent of Congress. The bill which the House had approved in 1955 was pending before the Senate. Working with Senator HOMER E. CAPEHART we composed a brief amendment which we believe will put the definition of farm operators beyond dispute. Senator CAPEHART introduced the amendment in the Senate, where it was accepted. Under it a farm operator may report his farm income if he participates materially in the production or in the management of the production of the farm. Those given coverage under this new clarification will be able to report all of their 1956 farm income for social-security credits.

Farm income reportable under social security has also been changed for small farmers and farm workers. A farmer whose gross income from farming is $1,800 or less in a year will be allowed to report and pay taxes on either his actual net earnings or two-thirds of his gross income. Under the latter option he has previously been able to report only one-half of his gross. A farmer whose gross income is more than $1,800 will report his actual net earnings, unless those earnings are less than $1,200, in which case he will be permitted to report $1,200.

Farm workers will be covered only if they earn $150 from one farmer in a year, or if they work for one farmer at least 20 days in a year.

Disabled workers: Many families have been economically wrecked when the wage earner has been disabled. Under the law, a worker over age 50, who has been working long enough to be covered, and who becomes permanently and totally disabled, will be eligible, after a 6-month waiting period, to receive the benefits he would have had to wait for until age 65. This will allow the family some income while the breadwinner is disabled. This provision will become effective January 1, 1957.

Dependent children: Dependent children of deceased workers presently receive benefits until they reach age 18. The new law would continue such benefits beyond age 18 to children who become mentally or physically incapacitated prior to reaching age 18, and to the mothers of such children. This provision will also become effective January 1, 1957.

Professional groups: Coverage is now extended to several self-employed groups, including lawyers, dentists, veterinarians, and optometrists. Such persons will be able to report their entire 1956 income for social-security credits.

Social-security tax: Effective January 1, 1957, the social-security tax will be increased from 2 percent to 2¼ percent for all covered employees. The tax on self-employment income will be 3⅜ percent effective January 1, 1957.

Public assistance: The formula by which the Federal Government matches State expenditures for old-age assistance, aid to the blind, and dependent children is changed and the maximum amount matchable is increased. It is not known at this time how this will affect increases in old-age pensions. Directors of public welfare from the various States will soon meet in Washington to study this new program.

It is difficult to explain these new provisions in sufficient detail to answer all questions about specific cases. Social-security field representatives will answer the questions of persons with specific problems. Seventh District counties are served by the following offices:

Greene, Morgan, Monroe, and Owen: 312 South Washington, Bloomington.

Daviess, Knox, and Martin: 214 La Plante Building, Vincennes.

Clay and Sullivan: 631 Cherry Street, Terre Haute.

Johnson: 36 South Pennsylvania Street, Indianapolis.

Gibson: Courthouse, 4th and Vine Streets, Evansville.

Representatives from these offices visit each county regularly.

As usual my office will be happy to assist Seventh District people in getting needed information concerning the social-security program or any other Government matter. My address is 1017 House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.

Your Congressman Reports

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. CECIL R. KING

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. KING of California. Mr. Speaker, as the 84th Congress adjourns, I wish to again make my report to the people I am honored to represent in our 17th District of California. For the past 14 years I have had the privilege of serving this district as its Representative in the Congress of the United States, one of the most populous and fastest growing constituencies in the country with perhaps more industries and varied problems than any other district. It includes two of the Nation's greatest ports of entry—our Los Angeles harbor and our Los Angeles international airport—as well as a major portion of the Navy's Roosevelt base on Terminal Island, the Army's Fort MacArthur at San Pedro, and the world-renowned Catalina Island. It also includes the greatest food-fish producing port in the world; the greatest aircraft production, with hundreds of subsidiary manufacturing concerns; one of the greatest oil-refining and export centers; one of the greatest shipbuilding centers during the war; and is one of the heaviest industrial areas in the West.

It will not be possible to discuss in detail or even touch upon all the bills considered, as the Democratic 84th Congress was one of the most productive in our history—in fact more bills were passed than in any other Congress, and we are proud of a constructive, substantial record of achievement.

As a member of the most important Committee on Ways and Means, having so much vital legislation before it, including social security, tax revision, reciprocal trade agreements, narcotics legislation, and the great highway program, the 84th Congress proved a very busy one for me. I will be obliged to confine my report to those proposals that have dealt largely with the general welfare of our people and in which my constituents have indicated their greatest interest.

SOCIAL SECURITY

From my first days in Congress, I have consistently supported the Social Security Act and have sought to liberalize it over the years. I derived considerable satisfaction from my part in the enactment of amendments to the Social Security Act that became law during the 84th Congress, as I was the original author of the amendment allowing women to receive benefits at age 62 rather than 65. I was also privileged to have made the motion providing benefits at age 50 to persons permanently disabled, which was enacted into law this session. Although these measures were opposed by the administration, I am pleased to say they are now a part of the social-security law, and considered one of the outstanding achievements of this Congress. My proposal granting increased benefits to the aged, blind, and dependent children was also included in the new social-security measure adopted this session, in addition to extension of coverage to lawyers and other self-employed groups.

There were, however, a number of proposed amendments which I regret were not approved by the committee. One of the most important was the increase in earnings allowed retired persons before forfeiting their benefits. I was not only in favor of raising the present limit, but introduced legislation and advocated that the limitation be removed altogether.

Despite misguided opposition to social security through the years, and the selfish, prejudiced attempt by reactionaries to tag it as a form of creeping socialism, the law is now an integral part of the American way of life. The sooner the law is perfected and made more adequate, the sooner will be abolished the fear of insecurity that attends the approach of later life, and the sooner we will be rid of the heavy burden of direct relief from local tax rolls. What greater bulwark against communism could there be than the contentment of a citizenry assured of a security in retirement that they have earned in their productive years?

NARCOTICS

I have been deeply concerned over the serious threat that confronts our Nation from the vicious narcotic traffic. In my long and continuing study of this pernicious evil, I have worked closely with Federal Narcotics Commissioner Harry J. Anslinger, who is recognized worldwide as the outstanding authority on narcotic traffic matters. I introduced appropriate legislation to strengthen enforcement and administration of the narcotic laws and am pleased to report the 84th Congress has incorporated my bills into law as amendments to our narcotic control laws.

Although narcotic agents are forced to deal with the most dangerous and unscrupulous criminals, I found no statutory authority for narcotic agents to make arrests or carry guns with which to protect themselves, such as the authority granted FBI agents. I therefore introduced H. R. 7018 which was enacted into Public Law 362 this session which, in addition to providing some measure of protection to our narcotic agents, grants Federal narcotic enforcement agencies the power to subpena witnesses and demand production of pertinent records in cases relating to narcotic violations. Narcotic agents inform me this authority helps them immeasurably in enforcement of our Federal narcotic laws.

One of the very important features of the new narcotics control law pertains to penalties applicable to the illicit sale of heroin to juveniles. The law provides that any adult selling or furnishing heroin to any person under 18 years of age may be fined $20,000 and shall be imprisoned for not less than 10 years, with a maximum penalty of life imprisonment, and upon recommendation by the jury a death penalty may be imposed. Effective enforcement of this new Federal law will be most helpful in eradicating the dope peddler who spreads his poisonous influence over the youth of our land.

To further aid narcotic and customs agents in their war upon the underworld, important provisions of my bill H. R. 3676, providing improved customs procedures and increased authority for customs officials with respect to narcotic violations were enacted into law as sections of the Narcotic Control Act of 1956. We on the west coast are most crucially confronted with the drug problem, as the major opium and heroin export centers are Tientsin and Canton, China. It is my firm determination to see that this vicious drug traffic is eliminated, and it is my hope that combined Federal, State, and local endeavors can achieve our common objective of ultimately abolishing the pernicious drug evil as a problem of national concern.

TAXATION

It was my hope that a reduction in the individual income tax rate could have been accomplished during this session, and I again introduced legislation calling for an across-the-board tax reduction credit. However, the unfortunate international situation, coupled with determination to bring about a balanced budget, precluded successful efforts during this Congress.

I believe the 85th Congress holds great promise for overall tax relief, as the Ways and Means Committee has established two subcommittees for this purpose. If the Congress remains under Democratic control, the Subcommittee on Internal Revenue Taxation will conduct an overall study of our entire income tax structure with the view toward removing existing inequities and providing a reduction in tax rates.

FULL EMPLOYMENT

The huge highway construction program which I was pleased to support will aid materially toward maintaining full employment. The pay-as-we-build measure adopted this session will save taxpayers at least $11 billion which would have been spent in interest charges had the bond financing program as advanced by the administration been approved.

While employment today is of paramount importance, we should always be mindful of the time when the productive years are over, and I was pleased to take an active part in passage of the bill increasing railroad retirement benefits. It was also with deep satisfaction that my bill which liberalized the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act was enacted into law. This legislation has been referred to as the model workmen's compensation bill, which provides increased benefits and other important improvements, and sets the scale of workmen's compensation payments for more than 400,000 longshoremen, harbor workers, and ship servicemen and repairmen. By extension of its provisions, it also served as the basic workmen's compensation law for many thousands of other workers under Federal jurisdiction.

EDUCATION

I have been an active advocate of every possible aid to education. One of the prime problems in our great State—and particularly southern California—is the extreme overburdening of local educational facilities with the constant influx of citizens from other sections of the country. It has been most gratifying to have taken an active part in having the benefits extended to federally impacted areas for school construction which have been of considerable benefit to a number of school districts within our own 17th Congressional District.

America's educational needs are well known to every parent who sends a child to an overcrowded classroom operating several shifts a day. They are well known to every overworked teacher responsible for handling a classroom jammed with children. I believe that every possible incentive should be offered to the teaching profession, particularly in the matter of adequate compensation, to encourage and insure the perpetuation of a high standard of education.

I was one of the authors and sponsors of the legislation enacted in the last Congress that has eased the tax burden on our retired teachers, and later retired firemen, policemen, and civil service were added as beneficiaries of this legislation. A number of school districts in our area have been included in the program of assistance to schools in crowded defense areas, and I am pleased to have been instrumental in having obtained Federal funds which eased the tax burden for these school districts.

VETERANS AND SERVICEMEN

Consistently through the years, as in this Congress, I have supported legislation in behalf of our veterans and servicemen and their dependents. I was very gratified to have my proposal enacted into law during this session of Congress extending the retirement income-tax credit to members of the Armed Forces. I was also pleased to support provisions which were enacted into law to grant educational benefits to children of veterans who lost their lives in World War II and Korea; social-security coverage extended for military personnel; increased pay of trainees under the Reserve program; legislation to provide medical care for the dependents of members of the Armed Forces; extension of Veterans' Administration program of guaranteed loans for home purchase or construction; increased pay of medical and dental officers in the armed services and Public Health Service; authorization of loans for the purchase of farm homes by veterans under the same terms as for residential housing; extension to 1960 of the unemployment program for veterans of the Korean war; extension of mustering-out pay provisions for Korean veterans; as well as the important increase in pay of all members of the armed services.

Leading veteran organizations have rated my voting record in behalf of our veterans at 100 percent, and I shall continue to work to expedite correction of inadequacies for their benefit and comfort.

SMALL BUSINESS

Recognizing the great importance of small business in our national economy and defense-production efforts for the preservation of our democratic system of free competitive enterprise, I have consistently supported and protected their interests, and have continuously encouraged subcontracting practices to our small businesses by large corporations having defense contracts.

I have assisted in the establishment of industries in our area—both large and small—and through the years have devoted my best efforts to aid the businesses of my district where discrimination or other inequitable treatment was evident, and have succeeded in enacting corrective legislation for their relief.

During the closing weeks of this session, I was successful in having one of my excise tax revision bills approved by both Houses of Congress and enacted into law. My bill removed the 10 percent tax on admissions of 90 cents or less. This measure will greatly aid many thousands of community motion picture theater operators throughout the country, of which more than one-half are in trouble, and make it possible for them to remain in business. Since January of this year, 1,073 theaters have closed, and it is estimated that 5,500 theaters are operating in the red and 5,400 are operating at the break-even point. This exemption also applies to sporting events, concerts, and amusements generally.

I was also successful in having several of my bills enacted into law this session providing for the easing of certain restrictions and import duties which brought about material aid to several important local industries. It is my firm intention to devote continuing diligent effort to foster the welfare of our business community so that our 17th Congressional District will realize economic progress and job opportunity for all.

FISHING INDUSTRY

The world's largest fishing industry operates out of our port of Los Angeles. I have worked very closely with this important industry all through the years of my congressional service and am constantly in touch with the industry's local and Washington representatives on their problems.

Included in the numerous measures I have sponsored in behalf of our great fishing industry is my proposal for the protection of our fishing vessels on the high seas, and another of vital interest to the sports fishing and water-taxi craft operators which were enacted into law last session. Additional proposals I introduced in behalf of our fishermen during this session of the Congress—all of which have been opposed by the present administration—include H. R. 7238 which would grant fishing boat subsidies; H. R. 322 which would extend more favorable income tax treatment to our fishermen such as has long been accorded farmers; and my most recent bill, H. R. 11342, establishing a national policy for fisheries, is a companion bill to Senator MAGNUSON'S S. 3275 which was enacted into law during the closing days of this Congress in a modified form.

Following my efforts with appropriate officials in the interested executive departments, with regard to the plight of our domestic tuna industry, effective action was taken to double the duty on imports of canned-in-brine tuna where such imports were in excess of 20 percent of the domestic peak.

The National Fisheries Institute lists me a leader in the House of Representatives for championing the welfare of the fishing industry.

SHIPPING

The shipping industry is of vital importance to our port and to the 17th Congressional District. I have long been associated with those interested in shipping and our United States merchant marine, and served for several years on the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House of Representatives. I authored, and was successful in securing enactment into law, legislation providing relief for the shipping industry from the imposition of certain unfair and arbitrary duties. This legislation was enacted, keeping in mind the highly competitive conditions American shipping meets from foreign lines.

I was also the sponsor of a successful legislative effort providing for a program of merchant ship construction in American shipyards, as well as legislation to promote and maintain domestic ship-construction and ship-repair yards, in addition to the law providing that 50 percent of all cargoes originating in the United States be carried by American shipping.

My bill on behalf of our Los Angeles harbor gained Federal assistance for the dredging and improving of the east basin to enhance the usefulness of our $8 million terminal, which is rated the largest and most modern passenger-cargo terminal in the world. A recent resolution by the board of harbor commissioners expressed their appreciation of my efforts in successfully obtaining Federal funds to cover reimbursement for dredging the east basin in the sum of $485,000 and a Federal contribution of $245,000 toward cost of removal of the west basin drawbridge.

NATURAL RESOURCES

I have remained alert at all times in my determination to protect and preserve our vast national forests and parks that have been set aside for the enjoyment of all our people, to insure against the incessant attempt at encroachment for selfish privileges by special interest groups. I am also alert to the attempts of certain private power interests to acquire for personal profit the remaining great water and power potentials, and I am co-author of the resolution creating the National Conservation Commission.

The American people are quite properly concerned over indications that we as a nation may be abandoning some of the proven conservation policies that in the past have done so much to preserve our irreplaceable natural resources.

It was very gratifying to have the proposal, of which I was author, passed by the Congress this session, authorizing Federal participation in the cost of protecting our shores, having for its purpose prevention of damage to public and private property and promoting and encouraging the healthful recreation of the people.

We need firm national conservation policies putting foremost the public's stake in preservation of our great natural resources for useful purposes in generations to come.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA WATER

I am pleased to be considered one of the leaders in Congress in the fight to protect southern California's water rights. Water represents to the people of southern California a basic necessity to insure the needs of its thriving, ever-growing population, industry, and agriculture. Southern California has been confronted since the turn of the century with the problem of an adequate water supply. Very critical complications are presenting themselves due to the threatened encroachments from other States that are parties to the Colorado River compact, because of the machinations of land speculators and promoters who seek to deprive southern California of its contractual rights and its fair share of the water of the Colorado River.

The Los Angeles County flood-control district has expressed its great appreciation for my assistance in securing Federal appropriations which approximate $20 million for Los Angeles basin flood-control projects.

POSTAL AND FEDERAL WORKERS

The 84th Congress enacted several laws to improve civil-service employment and liberalize retirement benefits of Federal workers. Benefits upon retirement have been substantially increased, as have family survivorship benefits, and all other phases of retirement and survivorship benefits have been liberalized under the new legislation.

The pay increase granted by Congress last year for civil-service workers and postal workers was much needed legislation, but, in my opinion, fell short of the amount necessary to compensate them for the increased cost of living which is at an all-time high. I have always supported improved and just compensation for our Federal workers and believe the general unattractiveness of Federal pay scales has been the paramount reason that many civil servants are leaving Government services for private industry, where they secure wages more in line with the increased cost of living.

REDONDO BEACH HARBOR

I am pleased to report that success has finally been achieved in my efforts to provide Redondo Beach with a small boat harbor which will not only give this city and the surrounding area a priceless asset, but will protect the shoreline from the devastation caused by winter storms which eroded away a once beautiful beach, and encroached into the very streets of the city, causing serious damage to public utilities and property.

Initial success came in 1950, when I brought the plight of Redondo Beach to the attention of Congress and the President. I was successful in gaining approval for the project; however, the Korean conflict precluded construction of such nondefense projects by the Government. In 1954 I obtained an appropriation of $50,000 for further planning and engineering to bring the harbor to the construction stage. This was one of the first appropriations by the Federal Government for a nondefense project following the Korean war. In the first session of this Congress, I was successful in securing an appropriation of $1,500,000 to start actual construction of the harbor; and in this session of Congress, gained approval of an additional $250,000 to insure earlier completion of this much-needed shore protection and boat haven.

CONCLUSION

Being mindful that the voters of my district have reposed trust and confidence in me for many years, my energies and efforts have been dedicated to fulfilling my responsibilities. My overall voting record is one of the best in the Congress, attested to by the records of the Clerk of the House of Representatives. Confronted with the difficulty of having to serve the better part of each year 3,000 miles distant from my constituency, I have conscientiously endeavored to serve you and bring credit and progress to our district. My office staff and I take pride in the reputation our office has gained for promptness and efficiency in handling congressional services.

My files are replete with letters of appreciation from individuals and organizations for services rendered. I treasure these "thank you" expressions and encouraging good wishes, and shall always strive to justify your confidence and good will. The measure of success we have achieved has been with your guidance and encouragement that I have always welcomed in our partnership in public affairs.

Your Social Security

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN J. ROONEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Speaker, one of the outstanding achievements of this Democratic 84th Congress is the just completed House-Senate passage of the bill, H. R. 7225, amending the social security and public assistance programs. Following the action of the other body earlier today, this bill is now at the White House awaiting the President's signature.

In 1950 the Congress made extensions in the coverage of the old-age and survivors insurance program, raised its benefit levels and afforded coverage to most self-employed Americans, outside the professions and the farm industry. Again in 1954, the benefits were increased and millions of additional people covered, so that 9 out of every 10 American workers are now within the scope of the system, and 9 out of 10 of the Nation's mothers and children have rights to survivor payments in case of death of the head of the family. I am glad to have had a part in 1950 and 1954 in supporting and voting for these improvements of our social security system.

I also voted for the passage of the present bill, H. R. 7225. In my opinion, it is a splendid piece of progressive humane legislation. Throughout the Nation there has been deep concern and interest in its provisions.

I believe that one of the most important provisions of the 1956 amendments is the reduction in the retirement age of widows, working women and wives from age 65 to 62. For quite some time I have advocated reduction in the retirement age for women. When the bill passed this body last year, the retirement age for all of these categories of women was reduced from 65 to 62. When the bill came back to us from the other body a provision was made for reduction in the retirement age to 62 with full benefits for widows, but it provided further for actuarial reduction in retirement benefits for wives and working women if they decided to retire at age 62 rather than 65. In the case of wives, 75 percent of full benefits may be received by them if they begin receiving them at 62 and in case of the working women 80 percent of their full benefits if they retire at 62 instead of 65. As I have indicated, under the House version of the bill, all women were permitted to retire at 62 with full benefits. I am still convinced that this was by far the better plan. However, I am cognizant of the fact that this modified version of the bill was apparently the only proposal acceptable to the Senate.

I have all along favored legislation providing for the lowering of the retirement age for women from 65 to 60 and it is my intention to advocate and work for legislation in the future in this regard.

Another extremely important provision of the 1956 amendments is the provision for disability insurance protection for the permanently and totally disabled after 50 years of age. The inclusion of this most desirable provision firms up the protection of our social-security program and inaugurates what, in my opinion, is one of the most humanitarian steps which could have been taken by this Congress. Formerly, a worker who was insured under the system and who became disabled, regardless of his age, was compelled to wait until age 65 before attaining eligibility for any benefits. This was, in my opinion, neither sound nor fair. A breadwinner who is unfortunate enough to become permanently and totally disabled at age 50, and who has been fully insured under social security, should certainly not be compelled to wait for 15 years before entitlement to benefits.

There are approximately 250,000 people who may become eligible for benefits during the first year under this humane provision of the bill and this basic protection is extended to some 35 million insured persons. I, personally, would have much preferred not to see the age limit of 50 placed in the disability-insurance provision and it is my intention to work on improvement in this regard.

Provision is also made for the payment of benefits after age 18 to the dependent child of a retired or deceased worker if the child has been permanently and totally disabled since before age 18. The mother of such child will also be eligible for benefits under this provision so long as the child continues to remain in her care. This provision originated in the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives and, in my opinion, is one of the most desirable and commendable provisions in the entire bill. The problems faced by those unfortunate individuals who have to care for a physically or mentally handicapped child are extremely sad and their suffering is increased as the result of their concern as to what may happen should the family's income be cut off by death or retirement of the wage earner. This meritorious provision will certainly help improve such a situation.

Coverage is extended to many additional individuals, so that now our social-security program is almost universal in its coverage. Some 250,000 persons are aided, and perhaps many additional people, depending upon State and local action. Almost all self-employed professional people are now included under the coverage of social security except physicians who were left out at their request; coverage is made available to more State and local employees, and additional groups are brought into the system, such as employees of Federal home-loan banks, the Tennessee Valley Authority, and others.

Several improvements are made with regard to grants-in-aid for public assistance, aid to the blind, aid to the permanently and totally disabled, and aid to dependent children. The Federal share for such programs is increased, and the program for aid to dependent children is considerably broadened and improved. Federal support for research is provided, and Federal funds for child welfare are also increased.

I believe everyone will agree that the social-security laws have surely given our elder citizens some measure of protection in contrast to the situation which confronted them before the first social-security bill was enacted into law in 1935—21 years ago. I have long advocated lowering the retirement age for men and women to 60. While this legislation does not go that far, I feel that the current amendments constitute a well-won victory for the people of America.

Mr. Speaker, I have endeavored to briefly cover the major provisions of this humane legislation. It has afforded me great pleasure to support and vote for it. It is presently my intention to work for further improvements in our social-security system so as to afford adequate protection and security for all of our people.

The Importance of Highway Safety and the Meaning of Wisconsin's Great Highway Expansion Program

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALEXANDER WILEY

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, here is a grim fact: From January through July 1956 there were as many as 21 percent more traffic fatalities in Wisconsin than in the first 7 months of 1955.

This is the serious toll reported to the people of our State by R. C. Salisbury, safety director for our State motor vehicle department at Madison.

FIVE HUNDRED AND SEVENTY-EIGHT BADGERS KILLED ON ROADS ALREADY IN 1956

In all of 1955 we hit a tragic new high in traffic fatalities. Nine hundred and thirty-two Badgers were killed.

Already this year 578 Wisconsinites have been killed on the roads and highways. Each day the press, radio, and TV report more accidents on the streets and in the countryside.

Five hundred and seventy eight already dead in 1956 represents a shocking record. It gives pause to every Wisconsinite to think.

WISCONSIN'S FINE HIGHWAY OFFICIALS

Let me state quite clearly that my State, despite these statistics, has done a great deal in the direction of increased highway safety.

Wisconsin has always had a fine safety program. It has always had an excellent road system. More than 11,000 miles of State roads, well maintained. We enjoy too some of the finest highway experts and builders in the Nation in Madison and in our 71 counties.

Yet it is obvious from the above statistics that, despite our admitted progress, despite our high caliber of highway leadership, we still suffer from the heartbreaking accident toll which I have just mentioned.

I have prepared a statement on the issue of highway safety, and improved roads for my State—from the smallest secondary and feeder roads on State trunk highways to the most modern superhighways. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the final edition of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR WILEY

It has always been my approach to "accentuate the positive."

I am glad, therefore, to mention at the outset some of other fine groups which are working very constructively to increase road safety in our State.

Foremost are, of course, as I have indicated, the top-grade men heading up and staffing our State highway department, and our county road departments. They are as hardworking and dedicated a group as we would be proud to meet almost anywhere.

There are other praiseworthy individuals and groups as well. Right now, for example, Wisconsin's highly respected Council of Safety, in cooperation with the Wisconsin Oil Industry's Information Committee, and the Wisconsin Manufacturers' Association, is enlisting the support of many motorists at our State fair. Drivers are asked to sign a safety pledge and are given a car sticker signifying that they are cooperating in the "Save a Life" campaign.

This work is being spearheaded by Mr. James Bolton, director of industrial expositions for the Wisconsin Manufacturers' Association.

GREAT JOB DONE BY AAA

Simultaneously, full credit is due to another great job which is being performed by the always alert Wisconsin division of the American Automobile Association. Few, if any, groups in our country have worked longer, harder, or more effectively in the field than has the pioneering AAA.

In Wisconsin, courteous, enterprising AAA offices, under the leadership of Stuart Wright, have been in the vanguard of encouraging greater safety, whether it is through the wonderful school safety patrol, or excellent driver training of youngsters and adults, or pedestrian protection, or other worthwhile programs.

GOOD RESULTS IN PEDESTRIAN PROTECTION

On this last point, fortunately, good progress can be reported in protecting pedestrians on our streets and highways.

Since 1937, Wisconsin pedestrian deaths decreased—I emphasize—decreased from 270 a year to 141 a year in 1955. Thus, pedestrian deaths dropped 48 percent, while motor vehicle registrations climbed 66 percent.

This shows that we can, indeed, improve protection of life and property.

One of the keys to this program is through better traffic engineering. The vast city of Milwaukee, in particular, has done an outstanding job in this respect. It handles huge numbers of shoppers, office workers, factory employees, and other folks walking along the streets—particularly in rush hours. It protects their lives, while keeping the wheels of traffic moving effectively. Our Milwaukee police are entitled to a salute for this record, just as are our hard-working police officers, sheriffs, highway patrolmen and other law enforcement protectors, throughout the State.

WARNING AS LABOR DAY WEEKEND APPROACHES

The approach of any holiday is, of course, a particular reminder of the need for highway safety. With Labor Day weekend coming up, it is especially important that every one of us bear in mind the importance of slowing down so as to save a life—including our very own.

The tragic fact is that in 1955, throughout the 48 States, motor vehicle accidents were the No. 1 killer. They killed 26,725 men, and 8,861 women. This is a greater number than the total of battle deaths in Korea, which was 33,629.

WE KILL MORE ON ROADS THAN DIED ON ALL BATTLEFIELDS

Further, the amazing facts are that more people have been killed by cars since the first auto appeared on the scene than have been killed in all the conflicts which we, as a nation, have waged.

Thus, from America's Revolutionary War through the Korean war, 1,130,000 Americans have been killed as a result of wars. But the National Safety Council reports that since 1900 alone, traffic accidents have taken 1,149,000 lives. Certainly, there is a statistic which every American should ponder. We actually have slaughtered more of our citizens on the highways than were killed by our enemies on the battlefield.

THE INTANGIBLE COSTS OF ACCIDENTS

The list of the killed is not, however, the only toll. Actually, in 1955, 1.3 million Americans were injured in some way from motor vehicle accidents.

Insurance experts may be able to compute the staggering direct cost of these injuries and fatalities. But they cannot compute the intangible costs—the inestimable heartbreak, the suffering, the pain, represented in that 1.3 million figure of the injured and the 38,000 death toll.

FROM WHITE HOUSE COME SAFETY APPEALS

It is understandable, therefore, why at all levels of government, we are redoubling our efforts for highway safety. From the White House, from State capitols, from county courthouses, from city halls, are coming renewed appeals for cooperation in protection programs.

I am particularly impressed with the fine job—the constructive theme—which has been emphasized by Presidential Assistant Howard Pyle, former Governor of Arizona. Speaking with the full support of our great Chief Executive himself, Governor Pyle has sounded a timely keynote to curb the ghastly toll on the highways.

STUDY BY HOUSE COMMERCE SUBCOMMITTEE

Meanwhile, a House of Representatives subcommittee, under the chairmanship of Congressman KENNETH ROBERTS is making very important studies on the safety factors in American cars themselves.

NEW 40,000-MILE SYSTEM WILL FURTHER SAFETY

Fortunately, under the new Federal-State highway system, as authorized just a few weeks ago, we are going to have a very important means to further highway safety.

My readers are well aware of the general provisions of the new $28 billion, 13-year program. Under it, Uncle Sam carries 90 percent of the cost in developing the 40,000-mile interstate highway system.

Some folks may not be aware that in section 117, the Secretary of Commerce is authorized to make a full and complete study for the purpose of determining what action should be taken by the Federal Government to increase highway safety. The Secretary will submit a report to the Congress by March 1, 1959.

FINE GRASSROOTS LEADERSHIP FROM LOCAL OFFICIALS

Inherent in that section is the realization that Uncle Sam has a vital role to play. But it must never be forgotten that roads and road safety are basically a community job—a county job—in coperation with the officials of the 48 States.

I look, therefore, to Wisconsin's splendid highway department, and to our highway officials in the 71 counties of America's Dairyland for continued grassroots leadership.

WE ARE PROUD OF WISCONSIN ROAD OFFICIALS

We, of Wisconsin, pride ourselves in our excellent road program. Our highway officials, including engineers, are numbered among the best in the Nation. Thanks to their foresight, our detailed plans were long ready for the new Federal-State program. Efficiency, honesty, reliability, have been the hallmarks of construction by our State and county highway departments and by private contractors.

Like other States, we could use a lot more engineers, of course. But we are certainly not caught short, the way some States are, in their highway plans. Under State Highway Commission Chairman Harold L. Plummer, we are moving full speed ahead, and we are planning for up-to-the-minute revisions, as fast as proves necessary.

SUMMARY OF PROVISIONS AFFECTING WISCONSIN

I should like to include now a summary of some of the principal features and advantages of the Wisconsin phase of the Federal-State highway program.

The interstate system in Wisconsin includes a route from the Illinois line straight north into Milwaukee, a bypass around Milwaukee, a route west from downtown Milwaukee to Madison, a northwest route from the Illinois line near Genoa City to St. Paul, a route from Tomah on the west near La Crosse to Minnesota, and an extension from Duluth into Superior. A great share of the routes in Wisconsin will be built on new location. The total mileage has not been precisely determined, but it may reach nearly 500 miles. Milwaukee is the only city in Wisconsin with an interstate route through the heart of the city.

About 500 miles at a total cost of nearly half a billion in new work will call for additional common and skilled labor, new capital and equipment for contractors, and a large market for colcal sand, gravel, crushed rock. Oil and fuel to operate the machines will boost sales of local suppliers. The heavy industry in the State and the employment it provides will be enhanced by sales of highway construction equipment all over the Nation in addition to the sales for Wisconsin construction. Estimates have been made that this increase alone will amount to 200 to 300 percent in the peak years of the 13-year program for the National System of Interstate Highways. Milwaukee is the Nation's foremost center of manufacture for highway equipment.

Transportation will benefit the carriers as they bring in increased amounts of steel, cement, asphalts, products not generally originating in Wisconsin, and take out Wisconsin-made machinery and equipment for use in the rest of the country.

BENEFITS TO STATE WHEN COMPLETED

Manufactured products from Wisconsin centers of industry, Milwaukee, Waukesha, Racine, Kenosha, Eau Claire, Madison, La Crosse, Superior, will be in a better competitive position for out-of-State markets, as will the great Fox River Valley feeding into Milwaukee over an excellent new highway connecting there with the Interstate System. Excellent feeder roads, State and county trunks all along the I-system, will bring milk and dairy products into the I-system for faster arrival to out-of-State markets. Even now, Wisconsin ships more liquid out of the State by tank truck than is produced by the next three highest milk-producing States. Similar benefits will occur for pulp and paper products down from the central north.

The Interstate System will greatly enhance Wisconsin's position as a leading recreational State. The Interstate System passes through the Lake Geneva area, the Wisconsin Dells area, and skirts the bottom of the Indian Head country of northwest Wisconsin. Where the Dells, for example, is now about a 5- to 6-hour drive from Chicago, and varying greatly by congestion encountered depending on time and day chosen for the trip, Interstate System roads should cut this time by as much as 2 hours. Uniform speed, lower driving costs, much more comfortable travel with less strain, in addition to saving time, will bring many more tourists to Wisconsin attractions. The Northeast Lakeland, 200 miles away from the route of the Interstate, will greatly benefit from it to a marked degree, simply because Wisconsin will be so easily reached when the Interstate System is completed in the other States. More tourists will come, a lot more, and the excellent primary roads branching off from the interchanges on the Interstate System will bring many of these additional visitors into every part of the State.

Wisconsin roads now serving the areas to be reached by the Interstate System are the most congested in the State. Divided roadways planned for the Interstate System and limiting all access to interchanges a few blocks apart in Milwaukee to several miles apart in rural areas will eliminate much of the driving tension. Our own citizens using the Interstate System will get to work feeling fresher and will get home earlier and less tired from driving. Tourists will arrive relaxed. And with the Interstate System easily absorbing a great volume of the traffic in the State, the rest of our trunklines and local roads will be in a position to serve their normal traffic more efficiently.

On the Interstate System, sometime in 1957 will probably see the start of construction on a 60-mile section between Eau Claire and Hudson, and on a 26-mile piece between the Illinois line and Milwaukee.

Already under construction is a part of the Milwaukee expressways with more work to begin in 1957, and a portion of the Milwaukee-Madison leg in eastern Waukesha County.

WHY I AM COMMENTING IN THIS MUCH DETAIL

Let me point out that I am presenting these comments in this length because I feel that it is necessary that we take a truly broadgaged look at the whole highway scene.

SUPERHIGHWAYS ARE NOT ACCIDENT CURE-ALL

Let me mention, too, that superhighways in and of themselves are not accident cure-alls. A speedster who mistakenly thinks that he can casually operate at jet speeds along a 4-lane highway can be just as much of a danger as a man who has exaggerated notions of speed while operating on a limited 2-lane road.

Along superhighways there tend to be a considerable number of rear-end collisions, as cars attempt to overtake and pass other cars. There are accidents as well at entrances and exits to cloverleaf intersections. There are accidents, too, from following too closely behind the car in front of you—not realizing the enormous amount of space which you will require if you have to hit the brakes in an emergency.

At 40 miles per hour a car will go 44 feet between the time we see danger and the time we get our foot on the brake; then 84 additional feet to stop if our brakes are good. But at 70 miles per hour it will take 77 feet to get on the brakes, and then 256 more feet to stop. That is an enormous amount of driving room which we had better allow ourselves.

Wisconsin's speed limits—65 miles per hour in daytime and 55 miles per hour at night—will of course continue to be strictly enforced by our police departments, our sheriffs, and our judiciary.

BEWARE THE POOR CAR AND POOR DRIVER

Readers should note, too, that vehicles in poor driving condition—with bad brakes, improperly functioning headlights, and the like—are just as much of a menace or even more dangerous on a high-speed highway than on a less modern road.

And, of course, the negligent driver is a menace anywhere, particularly the man who has had "one too many." Alcohol and gasoline don't mix. The bleary-eyed fellow who mistakenly assures everybody, "I'm perfectly all right; I'm steady as a rock; I can stop on a dime—let's have another"—that fellow may end up in the hospital or morgue, and he may take some innocents with him as well.

Fortunately, Wisconsin's point demerit system should serve to rid us of that type of road menace by promptly denying him his license.

FULL COOPERATION NECESSARY

All in all, good roads are, therefore, an important device for greater highway safety, but they are not going, all by themselves, to solve the highway accident problem overnight.

Instead, we must all cooperate—every pedestrian, every driver—with city, county, State, and Federal officials, with fine organizations like the Wisconsin Council of Safety, the Wisconsin Division of the American Automobile Association, and others.

LANDSCAPING INCREASES ROAD BEAUTY

Fortunately, our improved highway system is going to contribute to our enjoyment of the beautiful Wisconsin countryside. This is especially important since tourism is Wisconsin's No. 2 industry. Along our estimated 483 miles of highways under the Federal-State system will be attractive trees and shrubbery. R. L. Williams, of Madison, State engineer of ways and landscaping with the highway commisison, estimates $200,000 is being spent yearly for roadside improvement work. Plantings along the roads not only furnish pleasant eye appeal, but help deaden noise and help screen homes and businesses from the rush of traffic.

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF THE AMERICAN CAR

Lastly, I point out that the American car remains as one of the key features of the American scene. The automobile has almost revolutionized American life, bringing untold benefits, economic and social. With 64 million vehicles already registered on the Nation's highways, it is inevitable that a safety problem results.

But in the years ahead, we are going to have 80 million, 90 million, and more vehicles—cars and trucks. We must, therefore, act now to establish sound patterns which will reduce the accident toll immediately, and in years up ahead.

Good highways are good business, and they are good protectors of life and limb, as well.

COOPERATION—FROM COUNTY TRUNKS TO SUPERHIGHWAYS

I pledge my continued cooperation with our highway experts—with the men striving to improve our road system, whether it be the smallest county trunk or the most modern four-lane superhighway.

A farmer transporting his goods to market, a vacationer heading for the muskies of the lake country, a truckdriver bringing in items for Wisconsin's thriving factories, a motorist commuting to work—all these are entitled to top roads and top protection.

House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs Statistical Summary and Accomplishments in the 84th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLAIR ENGLE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. Speaker, with the adjournment sine die of the 84th Congress, another Congress will have closed its official books; by that action Members are announcing to the world that they are heading home to stand or fall on the record of accomplishments during the 417 calendar days and 234 legislative days falling between convening on January 5, 1955, and—absent a special session—the July 27, 1956, adjournment.

As Members are aware, the measurement of the permanent record of accomplishments of the 84th Congress cannot be based solely on having attempted the physically impossible—listening to and observing the frequently simultaneous proceedings on the House and Senate floors, which consumed nearly 2,300 hours of total time, let alone attending the thousands of hours of proceedings in the 19 standing committees of the House and 14 standing committees of the Senate.

It is probable that perusal of the more than 60 million words contained in the some 25,000 pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of proceedings, and more than 12,000 pages of the daily Appendix, might well tend to confuse, rather than clarify, the picture of accomplishments during the 2-year period—since it is particularly under our Federal system that reasonable men can, may, and do differ as to cause and effect.

A more positive measure of accomplishment might be reflected by a study of the history and disposition of the 18,939 measures introduced during the 84th Congress—but again, such a study would challenge even the most energetic and industrious individual among us.

In the end, it appears that the answer to the question of performance by any given Congress can only be found in the laws actually written into the books. In the end, there has merged from the 167 years' accumulation of billions of spoken and written words, millions of pounds of paper consumed, and tens of thousands of hours of debate and discussion by Congresses which preceded this one—just 68 volumes of United States Statutes at Large, occupying roughly 30 linear feet of bookshelf space. Just as volume 1, United States Statutes at Large, at pages 23 and 24, serves to preserve for all time the text of the first act approved by the 1st Congress of the United States, so will volumes 69 and 70 serve to preserve for tomorrow and the future the positive record, the real accomplishments of the 84th Congress.

In short, with gavels sheathed, the smoke cleared, the vocal thunder sienced, the galleries emptied, and the final rollcall tallied, the 417 calendar days, 230 legislative days, 2,300 hours of House and Senate floor action, 37,000 pages of CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and daily Appendix, 18,939 bills, and more than 60 million words officially spoken or written in the 84th Congress—boil down to just about 14 pounds of paper, ink, goldleaf, cardboard, leather, thread, glue, and buckram, in two additional volumes of the official statutes.

Having in mind the foregoing, I would like to outline the contribution made by the committee which I serve as chairman, and refer to some of the factors which make possible our accomplishments during the 84th Congress.

COMMITTEE COMPOSITION

The Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs has broad responsibilities in the field of natural resources and the public domain, including administration and development of our national parks system, and in the field of human resources, with respect to the administration and welfare of our Indians and Indian tribes, and our fellow citizens in the Territories and possessions of the United States.

Reflecting recognition of the breadth of our assignment, the committee roster of 32 members shows representation from 19 States, Hawaii, Alaska, and Puerto Rico. A substantial portion of our legislation deals with matters directly affecting the development and economy of the West and our offshore areas, which perhaps accounts for representation from 14 of the States west of the Mississippi River—Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota, Texas, Utah, and Washington—and 5 east of the Mississippi—Florida, Michigan, New York, North Carolina, and Pennsylvania.

This geographic distribution of the membership results, I believe, in a balanced legislative approach in the national interest and, at the same time, retains the regional know-how which permits full understanding of the matters considered. For example, this distribution means that—

Members come from States, Territories, or possessions embracing approximately three-fourths of the land areas, continental and offshore, of the United States.

Of the 17 States of the reclamation West, 13 have members serving on the committee.

Of the 11 mining States of the West, 9 have representatives on the committee.

More than 320,000 of the approximately 405,000 Indians of the United States and Alaska have a direct voice by reason of the areas represented.

The achievements of the Congress just ended—and I believe the statistical references which follow emphasize this—were made possible only through the cooperation and diligence of all of the 32 members of our committee. But for the energy and leadership of our subcommittee chairmen—Chairman WAYNE N. ASPINALL, Irrigation and Reclamation Subcommittee; Chairman LEO W. O'BRIEN, Territories and Insular Affairs Subcommittee; Chairman WALTER ROGERS, Mines and Mining Subcommittee; Chairman GRACIE PFOST, Public Lands Subcommittee; and Chairman JAMES A. HALEY, Indian Affairs Subcommittee; and the continuing cooperation, guidance, and counsel of the ranking minority member and former chairman, Dr. A. L. MILLER, of Nebraska, and his colleagues, we would have been unable to perform our mission.

STAFF ORGANIZATION

Again during the 84th Congress our professional and clerical staff have met a high standard of performance in committee activities, in their service to members. The professional staff, composed of George W. Abbott, counsel; Sidney L. McFarland, engineering consultant; George H. Soule, minerals and lands consultant; and John L. Taylor, Territories and Indians consultant, have all made a substantial contribution to the achievements of the committee.

The clerical and stenographic staff headed by Nancy J. Arnold, chief clerk of the committee, and made up of Nelda Boding, Eve Fatzinick, Gertrude Harris, and Laura Ann Moran—supplemented during a part of the sessions just ended by Geraldine W. Eaker and Linda Glavey—complete the staff organization without which the committee legislative and administrative workload could not be met.

BROADENED LEGISLATIVE RESPONSIBILITY

A brief reference to some readily available statistics will serve, I believe, to sustain an assertion that the responsibility of the legislative branch had broadened immensely in its complexities in the past 100 years, and that the statistical work output of the 84th Congress approaches an all-time high, with a major contribution by our committee.

Between the convening of the 1st Congress in 1789, and the adjourning of the 83d Congress in 1954, a grand total of 31,782 public laws had been written into the Federal statute books—an average or roughly 383 public laws per Congress.

The 26th Congress, which sat from 1839 to 1841, wrote 55 public laws into the books, for the all-time low total, while the 84th Congress, with 1,028 public laws enacted, is second only to the all-time high total compiled by the 70th Congress which served 1927–29.

Of the 1,028 public laws enacted by the 84th Congress, the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs accounted for 191—which means that just under 1 of 5 bills which became public law originated with our committee. In sharp contrast, just 100 years ago, the total number of public laws enacted—by the entire 34th Congress, sitting 1855–57—was 157.

Finally, and put another way, the overall statistical comparison reveals that bills which became public law, processed by 1 standing committee alone—the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs—equal or exceed in number the total output of any 1 full Congress of the 36 Congresses which sat between 1789 and 1861, excepting the 27th Congress—1841 to 1843—with a total of 201 public laws.

While I believe that such comparisons are of great interest from a historical standpoint, I hasten to add that I leave to others the conclusions to be drawn from their examination.

While a more detailed breakdown and description of the measures acted on by our committee in the Congress just adjourned will be carried in a committee print now being compiled, I wish to point here to some of the landmark legislation handled.

I. PUBLIC LANDS, LAND RESOURCES

Through its Public Lands Subcommittee, the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs has legislative responsibility for utilization, conservation, and development of more than 459 million acres of public lands and associated resources in the United States and Alaska, together with in excess of 24 million acres embraced within more than 180 units of the national park system, and nearly 160 million additional acres of lands within national forests created from the public domain.

THE NATIONAL PARK SYSTEM

During the session of Congress just ended, our committee reported, and the Congress approved, legislation providing for the establishment or recognition of six new units within the national park system: Virgin Islands National Park, St. John-St. Thomas Islands, V. I.—Public Law 925; City of Refuge National Historical Park, Island of Hawaii, T. H.—Public Law 177; Pea Ridge National Military Park, Ark.—Public Law 744; Booker T. Washington National Monument, Va.—Public Law 464; Mikveh Israel Cemetery, Philadelphia, Pa., as a unit of Independence National Historical Park—Public Law 1009; and Horseshoe Bend National Military Park, Ala.—Public Law 800.

Four laws enacted direct studies of the desirability of bringing into the park system the proposed Brooklyn Monument, N. Y.—Public Law 75; historic properties in Boston, Mass., and vicinity—Public Law 214; Fort Clatsop, Oreg., as a national monument—Public Law 590; and historic properties in New York City and vicinity—Public Law 341.

In keeping with its policy of continuing reevaluation of existing units of the park system, the full committee and Congress voted to abolish Fossil Cycad National Monument, S. Dak.—Public Law 891; Castle Pinckney National Monument, S. C.—Public Law 447; Old Kaasan National Monument, Alaska—Public Law 179; and Verendrye National Monument, N. Dak.—Public Law 846; approve construction of a sewage disposal system—Public Law 454; and to permit certain land exchanges to ready Colonial National Historical Park, Va., for the Jamestown-Williamsburg-Yorktown celebration in 1957—Public Law 448—to exclude certain surplus lands from Acadia National Park, Maine, and thus make them available for recreational purposes for local governmental subdivisions—Public Law 755; provide recognition of the 50th anniversary of Devils Tower National Monument, Wyo.—Public Law 287; add certain lands to Pipestone National Monument, Minn.—Public Law 593; consolidate Zion National Monument and Zion National Park, Utah—Public Law 695; redesignate Bedloe's Island in New York Harbor as Liberty Island—Public Law 936; relocate Trenton Massacre National Monument, Nebr.—Public Law 453; designate the General Grant Tree, King's Canyon National Park, Calif., a national shrine—Public Law 441; complete acquisition of non-Federal lands with the Cape Hatteras national seashore recreational area, North Carolina—Public Law 1000; authorize additional road construction in Grand Teton National Park, Wyo.—Public Law 275; and to revise the boundaries of Theodore Roosevelt National Park, N. Dak.—Public Law 438.

Two other public laws will contribute measurably in administration of the park program—Public Law 127, providing broader authority in managing the various museum properties within the system, and Public Law 712, to reduce substantially the number of proposed park concession awards required to be transmitted to the Congress prior to execution.

CEMETERIES LEGISLATION

Two measures dealing with national cemeteries were approved: One authorizing burial in national cemeteries of the remains of Public Health Service officers who served during World War II and the Korean war—Public Law 501; and the other amending a 1954 act so as to provide for erection of appropriate markers in national cemeteries for individuals who die or are killed while serving with the Armed Forces during peacetime, as well as those whose death occurred during wartime from reasons other than contact with an enemy and whose remains have not been identified, have been buried at sea, or have been determined to be nonrecoverable—Public Law 651.

PUBLIC LAND ENTRY, USE

Five measures enacted into law will help to assure fuller utilization and development of public lands and their resources: Public Law 171, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to acquire rights-of-way and existing connection roads adjacent to public lands when needed to provide access to timber on public lands under his jurisdiction; Public Law 76, bringing uniformity into the laws governing entry under the Desert Land Act by permitting maximum entry on mineral lands up to 320 acres, the same maximum allowable for many years on nonmineral lands; Public Law 247, requiring recording of all "paper" in the form of scrip, lieu selection, and similar rights outstanding as claims for rights to public lands by reason of more than 40 acts of Congress between 1815 and 1922 authorizing issuance of such "paper"; Public Law 39, extending to an additional 80,000 acres of land within Coconino National Forest, Ariz., present statutory authority providing for supervision of mining locations so as to preserve to the maximum public recreation and timber values while mineral resource development goes forward; and Public Law 834, suspending for 3 years from March 1, 1956, the requirement that entrymen under the Desert Land Act must reclaim and continue to reclaim entered land and put it in shape to produce crops—this in the face of the existing crop surpluses in several basic commodities.

LAND TITLE, CONVEYANCE

A number of measures enacted into public law after reporting by the committee reflect a continuing policy of attempting to equitably resolve historic land title disputes, remove Federal clouds on title by reason of erroneous surveys or faulty recording, and to assist local governmental subdivisions in carrying out their public functions which require use of real property.

Among acts in this category are those which provide legislative authority in Interior for the management and disposition of the Federal interest in approximately 20,000 acres of reconveyed Choctaw and Chickasaw Indian lands scattered in small tracts throughout a 6,000 square-mile area in eastern Oklahoma—Public Law 215; settling substantial title uncertainties to lands bordering the Indian River, Fla., by authorizing patent issuance to long-time occupants—Public Law 258; clarifying the law relating to granting of school sections to the States so as to pass title notwithstanding outstanding mineral leases at the time of survey, an act principally of interest to the State of Utah, but also applicable in California, Arizona, and New Mexico—Public Law 699; conveying land to the Lake County School District, Oregon, for school construction purposes—Public Law 456; extending for 5 years a 1950 act authorizing conveyance of certain public lands in Miles City, Mont., for essential city-planned industrial development—Public Law 191; removing narrow use restrictions on 154 acres of land deeded in 1923 to the ctiy of Chandler, Okla., and conveying the land for public utilization—Public Law 241; authorizing conveyance under the Recreation Act of certain lands in Phillips County, Mont., substantially improved and long utilized for public recreation by the local American Legion post, to the post—Public Law 589; to quitclaim to the city of Saginaw, Mich., all rights of the United States, if any, in a 640-acre key urban tract in the city and thus remove a 137-year-old cloud on the title to the lands involved—Public Law 444; to convey to the city of Henderson, Nev., upon payment of fair market value, 6,859 acres of arid, undeveloped public lands adjoining and confining this World War II federally-created, and now third-largest city in Nevada—Public Law 522; authorizing the State of Arizona to convey to an agricultural improvement and power district, a State political subdivision, for use as a building site, approximately 29 acres of land previously conveyed under restrictive covenants precluding the proposed public use—Public Law 36; removing a cloud on title resulting from a pre-1900 fraudulent survey to approximately 240 acres of lands located within the exterior boundaries of Stanislaus National Forest, Calif., which lands have for a number of years been improved and occupied by some 70 claimants, and treated as private lands by Federal administering agencies—Public Law 449; authorizing transfer to the State of Wyoming in the Camp Guernsey, Platte County, area 7,680 acres of land for National Guard and Air National Guard purposes, with reversion if not so used—Public Law 77; and quitclaiming Federal interest to certain real property in the city of Pensacola, Fla., where the United States had presumably acquired title when Florida was acquired in 1819, but in fact was in private title some 6 years earlier—Public Law 499.

II. MINING, MINERAL RESOURCES

The House Mines and Mining Subcommittee—reflecting its responsibility for mining interests generally, mineral land laws and the claims and entries thereunder, geological survey, and mineral resources and petroleum conservation on the public lands—during the 84th Congress considered, and the full committee and the Congress approved, several landmark pieces of legislation in the evolutionary Federal program for maximium development, utilization, and conservation of the minerals and materials resources of the public lands of the United States.

MULTIPLE SURFACE USE ACT

Probably the most significant change in the mining laws of the United States since adoption by Congress of the first general mining laws, in 1872, is the Multiple Surface Use Act of 1955, Public Law 167. Put succinctly, it operates to amend historic law so as to permit the use of the surface and subsurface of the same tracts of public lands for prepatent prospecting and mining activity at the same time management and utilization of forestry products, forage crops, grazing, fish and wildlife, wilderness, water, scenic, and related resources go forward; its provisions will also assure that existence of a mining claim cannot, prior to patenting, be used to block access to adjacent lands—all without limiting or interfering with prospecting and mining activities on the claim proper.

POWER WITHDRAWAL, COAL RESERVE ENTRY

Another public law put on the books by the 84th Congress, after lengthy committee consideration—the Mining Claims Restoration Act of 1955, Public Law 359—opens to entry approximately

7 million acres of public lands, all in the West, withdrawn or reserved for power development. Approximately 95 percent of these lands had been closed to mining development for 45 years, since around 1910. Its enactment is one more legislative step in the drive to encourage search for, and development of, the strategic and critical domestic minerals and materials resources so vital to our economy.

Similarly, in the area of compatible resource uses, the Congress approved legislation providing for entry and location of mining claims on the discovery of a valuable source material on public lands classified as or known to be valuable for coal—Public Law 357. This law was found necessary to clear title complications to a large number of mining claims located in the States of South Dakota, North Dakota, and Montana in good-faith compliance with the mining laws, and to further the exploration and development of uranium-bearing lignite coal deposits considered by the Atomic Energy Commission as an important potential source of uranium.

CONSERVATION OF ANTHRACITE

As a major step in conservation of the all-important anthracite coal resources in Pennsylvania, Congress enacted Public Law 162, which provides for a Federal-State program, and authorizes up to an $8.5 million Federal contribution to the State on a matched-fund basis, to meet the capital cost of a program designed to control and drain water in anthracite coal formations. Effecting of this program will not only conserve irreplaceable natural resources and strengthen the national security, but will prevent injuries and loss of life, and preserve public and private property constantly threatened by huge quantities of water in subsurface coal workings.

DOMESTIC MINERALS PROGRAM

Pending development by the Executive agencies of a recommended long-range domestic minerals program, the committee moved in the 84th Congress to respond to an acute need for interim assistance which would help to decelerate the rapidly eroding domestic mining industry—an erosion brought on by the flow of raw materials from foreign mines, price manipulations in world markets, and the destructive effects brought about by the dumping of foreign production on American markets.

After assurance from the Executive that domestic purchase programs for high-grade manganese, chromite, mica, beryl, metallurgical grade fluorspar, and antimony were being extended, Public Law 733 was enacted to establish programs for the purchase of tungsten concentrates, 1.25 million short ton units; acid grade fluorspar, 250,000 short ton units; nonferrous asbestos, up to 4,000 tons, specified grades; and columbium-tantalum bearing ores and concentrates, 250,000 pounds, combined pentoxides, from mines in the United States. Initial appropriations of $21 million were voted by the 84th Congress to meet the maximum anticipated cost of the program—$92 million—with purchase authority terminating on December 31, 1958.

III. WATER RESOURCE UTILIZATION, DEVELOPMENT

In the field of water resource utilization and development so immediately vital to the Reclamation West, and so essential in the long run to our Nation's economic strength, the 2-year legislative period just ended stands out in two major respects: first, it marks a reversal of the trend which in the past several years brought the Federal reclamation program to a virtual halt; second, it stands not only as a reversal of that trend, but goes into the books as the Congress which approved 35 separate pieces of legislation authorizing the most far-reaching reclamation program to come out of a single Congress since the Federal program was initiated 54 years ago.

This monumental program, statistically, means this: against a $367 million program in 1950 which had dropped in 1954 to less than $150 million, and saw the 83d Congress authorized several small projects with an estimated total cost of about $56 million—and against all-time total accrued appropriations up to June 30, 1953, totaling slightly more than $3 billion—the 84th Congress authorized appropriations for new construction in excess of $1.3 billion.

Against 7.1 million irrigable acres ready to be served on Federal projects after 51 years, in 1953, this legislation provides for ultimately bringing—from 10 to 20 years hence—471,000 acres of new land under irrigation, and furnishing supplemental water to an additional 805,000 acres. It will result in creation of the long-range base for production of the food and fiber needed to meet the demands of a projected population in 1975 of as many as 220 million people.

This legislation adds to the 4.4 million kilowatts of installed hydroelectric capacity at Federal projects existing in 1953, an assurance of an additional 1.5 million kilowatts, and this additional power potential will furnish over 6.7 billion kilowatt-hours of electric energy annually to the farms, cities, and industries of the West. Additional benefits resulting include flood control, stream pollution control, recreational benefits, stabilizing municipal and industrial water supplies, and preservation and propagation of fish and wildlife benefits.

A total of 9 new projects were authorized to be constructed in a total of 11 of the 17 States of the reclamation West.

COLORADO RIVER STORAGE PROJECT

To initiate development of the last of the Nation's major undeveloped river basins—the upper Colorado—the committee reported and the Congress approved Public Law 485, to authorize construction of the $760 million Colorado River storage project in the States of Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, New Mexico, and Arizona. Construction of the four main-stem storage units initially authorized—Glen Canyon, Flaming Gorge, Curecanti, and Navaho Dams and Reservoirs, with a combined storage capacity of about 32.5 million acre-feet—will operate to provide holdover storage to meet interstate compact apportionment commitments and to permit the upper basin States to make full use of their apportioned share of the water; produce an estimated 5.5 billion kilowatt-hours of electric energy to meet the ever-expanding power needs in the area and contribute to the overall financial feasibility; assure sound financial bases for the 11 participating—that is, reclamation—projects initially authorized—central Utah, Emery County, Florida, Hammond, Labarge, Lyman, Paonia, Pine River extension, Seedskadee, Silt, and Smith Fork—and future additional participating projects.

TRINITY PROJECT, CALIFORNIA

Legislation—Public Law 386—authorizing construction of the Trinity River addition to the Central Valley project, California, constitutes the third major leg of Federal participation in Valley development. The $225 million Trinity Dam and Reservoir on the Trinity River, a tributary of the Klamath River in northwestern California, will have a storage capacity of 2.5 million acre-feet. From this reservoir an average of about 700,000 acre-feet will be diverted annually to the Sacramento River Basin, and this amount, when coordinated with system operation, will provide about 1.2 million additional acre-feet of water annually for use in the Central Valley. In addition to fish, wildlife, and recreational benefits, the Trinity project will ultimately generate more than 1 billion kilowatt hours of electric energy annually at the dam's powerplants.

WASHOE PROJECT, NEVADA-CALIFORNIA

The $43.5 million Washoe project—Public Law 858—will regulate East Carson and Little Truckee Rivers flowing out of California into Nevada to supplement the present irrigation water supply for about 45,000 acres and furnish a full water supply to about 5,000 acres; will serve, when coordinated with flood control works existing and to be constructed by the Corps of Engineers, to protect the Reno area from repetition of several devastating floods in the last few years; will generate approximately 96 million kilowatt-hours of energy annually for the Reno area, and substantially restore fish, wildlife, and recreational benefits at Pyramid Lake.

WASHITA PROJECT, OKLAHOMA

An area that has been repeatedly hard hit by alternate drought and flood conditions over a number of years, the Washita River Basin in southwestern Oklahoma, will benefit from enactment of Public Law 419 authorizing construction of the $40.6 million Washita project. This project will furnish flood protection, vitally needed municipal water, irrigation water in an area which has seen crop production drop 50 percent in the past 20 years, and related benefits.

AINSWORTH, FARWELL UNITS, NEBRASKA

Northwest central Nebraska—through construction of the $26 million Ainsworth dam, reservoir, and delivery system, on the Snake River—Public Law 531; and central Nebraska, through construction of the $30.5 million Farwell unit—Public Law 952—on the Middle Loup River—both units of the Missouri River Basin project, will have provided in these key agricultural areas important irrigation, flood control, fish, wildlife, and recreation benefits. The Ainsworth unit ultimately will provide irrigation water for some 34,000 acres of land, while Farwell will provide water for about 52,500 acres.

CROOKED RIVER PROJECT, OREGON

Authorization of the $6.6 million Crooked River project, Oregon—Public Law 992—will operate to furnish assured water supplies for irrigation of approximately 20,000 acres of land, make available an additional 51,000 acre-feet of water annually for other lands, to to provide protection against floods which have in the past resulted in extensive damage to the city of Prineville and the surrounding area.

LITTLE WOOD RIVER PROJECT, IDAHO

Expenditure of $1.9 million for the Little Wood River project in Blaine County, Idaho—Public Law 993—will result in construction raising the height of an existing dam, increasing storage capacity from 12,000 to 30,000 acre-feet, and thus provide—in addition to flood protection, fish and wildlife benefits—a supplemental water supply for irrigation of 9,550 acres of land which presently experience critical water shortages every year.

VENTURA PROJECT, CALIFORNIA

The $27.7 million Ventura River project, California—Public Law 423—involves primarily the storage of water for irrigation, municipal, and industrial uses, and will meet the urgent need for an additional firm water supply for both agricultural and municipal uses because of the rapidly expanding population in this southern California coastal area.

WAPINITIA PROJECT, OREGON

Finally, legislation was enacted—Public Law 559—to authorize the $500,000 Wapinitia project in north-central Oregon, providing for construction of a dam on Clear Creek, a tributary of the White River, to assure supplemental water for 2,100 acres currently suffering from an inadequate water supply.

MEASURES NOT APPROVED

Three measures reported by the committee, but not enacted, had as their purpose authorizing project construction in three other areas: H. R. 4719, authorizing construction of the $484 million multipurpose Hells Canyon project, on the Snake River, Idaho-Oregon, was never taken up on the House floor after counterpart legislation was defeated in Senate floor action; the $156-million Fryingpan-Arkansas project legislation, proposing a self-contained multipurpose development on the Arkansas River in southwestern Colorado, passed the Senate but the rule on the House measure, H. R. 412, was defeated in the House; and House Joint Resolution 672, clearing the way for construction of a 230-kilovolt transmission line from Fort Randall Dam, S. Dak., to Grand Island, Nebr., was reported but failed of enactment.

Three measures constituting important supplements to reclamation law were reported and enacted into law, while several others amending existing law became public law.

SMALL PROJECTS ACT

The Small Reclamation Projects Act, Public Law 984, is probably the most important supplement to reclamation laws since the Reclamation Project Act of 1939. Applicable to the 17 western reclamation States, the new law provides for cooperation between the Federal Government and State or local public agencies in the development of small reclamation projects. It permits up to $5 million Federal participation in any single proposed locally planned, constructed, operated, and maintained reclamation project, such Federal funds to be made available in the form of loans for project benefits traditionally reimbursable under Federal reclamation law—irrigation and related benefits, such as power, municipal and industrial water supply, and drainage—or grants for benefits traditionally nonreimbursable because supplying public benefits—flood control, stream pollution control, fish and wildlife benefits—so long as the project requesting Federal assistance does not exceed in total cost $10 million.

DISTRIBUTION SYSTEMS ACT

In a similar vein, legislation applicable only to Federal reclamation projects, Public Law 130, as amended by Public Law 520, authorizes loans to local irrigation districts for construction of distribution systems, thus reducing overall costs to the districts by less complex local planning and associated costs, and while Public Law 575 is designed to facilitate completion of drainage systems and other minor construction work on authorized reclamation projects by authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to contract with water users' organizations for the accomplishment of such work.

ADMINISTRATION, REPAYMENT LEGISLATION

The committee also reported, and Congress approved, legislation clarifying repayment provisions of existing reclamation law by removing several major objections directed against the water-service contract or utility-type contract written under existing law, particularly in the Central Valley, Calif., and the Missouri River Basin project area, Public Law 643; amending existing law to provide that excess lands in Federal reclamation projects acquired by foreclosure or inheritance may receive water temporarily, but not more than 5 years, Public Law 690; resolving a question raised as a result of an Arizona Supreme Court decision holding that percolating waters are not subject to the doctrine of prior appropriation by declaring—Public Law 226—that entrymen under the Federal Desert Land Act in Arizona who had depended on percolating waters for reclaiming their entries are granted a waiver of the Federal requirement that such entries "shall depend upon bona fide prior appropriation"; providing a financial boost to organizations short of funds upon project completion by authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to acquire movable property with funds appropriated for reclamation project construction and to transfer such property to the organization when it assumes project operation and maintenance, thus accelerating the date of local takeover, Public Law 924; and striking from existing law an archaic and offensive provision prohibiting employment of Mongolian labor in the construction of Federal reclamation projects, Public Law 517.

Five measures cleared the way for execution of repayment contracts in connection with Federal projects, delayed for various reasons, and assuring sound businesslike operation of Tule Lake Irrigation District, California—Public Law 877; Yuma Mesa Irrigation and Drainage District of the Gila project, Arizona—Public Law 394; Yuma County Water Users' Association, Arizona—Public Law 633; Riverside Irrigation District, Idaho—Public Law 849; and the Toston Irrigation District, Montana—Public Law 374.

SPECIFIC PROJECT ACTS

Seven measures enacted into law relate to specific projects and are designed to transfer from Interior to Army the administrative jurisdiction over the construction, operation, and maintenance of the Wilson Dam and Reservoir, Kansas, and from Army to Interior similar responsibility from the Red Willow Dam and Reservoir, Nebraska—Public Law 505; modify the boundaries of the Yuma Auxiliary Project, Arizona—Public Law 409; authorize construction of a sewerage system for the construction camp serving Glendo Dam and Reservoir, Wyoming—Public Law 283; authorize amendment of certain contracts with the city of Rapid City, S. Dak., for furnishing municipal water in connection with the Rapid Valley unit, and thus permit the city to issue bonds for constructing water system improvements—Public Law 964; quiet title to certain land in the city of Carlsbad, N. Mex., in the Carlsbad Irrigation District, where the improved lots involved were transferred by the district to the United States in 1905 as project repayment security, which obligation has been discharged—Public Law 762; designate the reservoir above the Monticello Dam, Solano project, California, as Lake Berryessa—Public Law 494; and legislation to repeal a provision included in a 1938 act as an antispeculuation measure in connection with the Arch Hurley Conservancy District, Tucumcari, N. Mex., which provision has served its purpose and has subsequently worked hardships on parties involved in normal land transactions—Public Law 277.

Two other measures in separate categories were acted on, but were not finally approved: S. 3338, which would have required that rates for power and energy marketed to preference customers by the Southwestern Power Administration—in Missouri, Kansas, Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Louisiana—not be revised before July 1, 1957, a measure aimed at permitting further study before a proposed 40-percent rate increase took effect, meantime benefitting farmers in the area hard hit by drought conditions and depressed farm prices, was vetoed by the President; and H. R. 11685, providing for acquisition of Navaho Indian lands required in connection with the construction and operation of the Glen Canyon unit, Colorado River storage project, failed to get action in the House.

INTERSTATE STREAM COMPACTS

Three pieces of legislation became law which grant the consent of Congress to certain States to negotiate and enter into compacts relating to waters of interstate streams; the compacts, States, and streams involved are Red River compact, Public Law 346, Arkansas, Louisiana, Oklahoma, and Texas; Klamath River compact, Public Law 316, California and Oregon; and a California-Nevada proposed compact involving the Truckee, Carson, and Walker Rivers—Public Law 353.

Finally, the 84th Congress enacted Public Law 111, which extends the saline-water research program through fiscal 1963, and increases the amount authorized to be appropriated from $2 million to $10 million.

IV. TERRITORIAL, INSULAR AFFAIRS

The House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, through its Subcommittee on Territorial and Insular Affairs, is responsible for legislation affecting Alaska, Hawaii, Guam, American Samoa, the Trust Territory of the Pacific, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands, and the coordinate responsibility of exercising a continuing oversight of the administration of these areas by the Department of the Interior.

Statistically, this responsibility involves more than 2,000 islands in the Pacific and Atlantic Oceans, the Bering Sea, and the Caribbean Sea, and the approximately 4 million inhabitants of these offshore areas. In terms of legislation, during the 84th Congress, a total of 49 public laws were enacted.

ALASKA MENTAL HEALTH

After several years of failing to secure enactment of predecessor legislation, the committee acted on, and Congress approved, one of the most significant of all the Territories measures reported: The Alaska Mental Health Enabling Act, Public Law 830. By its provisions: responsibility for the Territorial mental health program is vested in Alaska; grants-in-aid amounting to $6.5 million for construction of facilities, and $6 million over a 10-year period to implement the program prior to full assumption of financial responsibility; and authority is granted the Territory to select up to 1 million acres of otherwise unappropriated lands over a 10-year period, with income therefrom to be first applied to meeting the expenses of the mental health program; and necessary transitional provisions are included.

Enactment of this legislation represents not only a major step toward fuller self-government in the Territory, but in a very real sense speaks loudly for the ability of Members of Congress to arrive at a sound conclusion in the face of an antienactment campaign earmarked by assertions embracing gross misinformation, half-truths, patent untruths, scurrilous and abusive language, and personal attacks directed at the committee, its members, and Members of Congress at large.

GUAM OMNIBUS ACT

The Guam Omnibus Act, Public Law 896, is designed to carry out the recommendations of the Commission on the Application of Federal Laws to Guam, and among the 25 Federal statutes made applicable to this unincorporated Territory are those extending certain educational, public health, opium and marihuana, agricultural, and library provisions to the area, together with a provision bringing the Governor's salary into line with that paid the Governor of the Virgin Islands.

HAWAII GENERAL MEASURES

A number of measures relate to governmental and fiscal matters in the Territory of Hawaii and operate to: reapportion the membership of the Hawaii Legislature—Public Law 895; increase the annual salaries of the Chief Justice and Justices of the Supreme Court of Hawaii, as well as the salaries of circuit court judges—Public Law 500; extend from 4 years to 7 years terms of the Chief Justice and Justices of the Supreme Court of Hawaii, and from 4 to 6 years the terms of circuit court judges—Public Law 508; authorize the issuance of not in excess of $50 million in highway revenue bonds, payable from highway vehicle fuel tax receipts—Public Law 716; amend existing law respecting territorial debt limit so as to make it clear that the ceiling is $95 million, or 10 percent of the assesed value of property, whichever is higher, and to ratify and confirm acts of the Territorial Legislature, thereby in effect declaring $17.7 million in authorized Honolulu city and Hawaii county school bonds to be within such limitation—Public Law 720; authorize the city and county of Honolulu to issue general obligation bonds in the amount of $14.5 million for construction of a municipal auditorium, Kalihi tunnel and approaches, park and playground construction and improvements, and sewage, flood control, and drainage facilities—Public Law 694; establish, with attendant redesignation of existing positions, the position of post-auditor in the Territorial Government, his functions to somewhat parallel those of the Comptroller General of the United States on the Federal level—Public Law 906; and legislation directing the National Science Foundation to investigate the need and feasibility of locating a geophysical institute in the Territory—Public Law 909.

HAWAII LAND USE

Extended hearings held by a special subcommittee in the Territory of Hawaii in 1954 served as a sound base for consideration and final action on several measures involving land utilization and land resource development: return to the Territory of 69.90 acres of land comprising part of Fort Armstrong and Kakaukukui, Honolulu, for conversion from spasmodic and limited military use to concentrated essential usage for warehousing, dockage, and freight handling facilities along the Honolulu waterfront—Public Law 894; authorization for acquisition by the Territory of littoral rights to certain tidelands abutting Waikiki Beach to permit initiation of construction by the Henry J. Kaiser interests of a multimillion dollar hotel and tourist attraction to be known as Crescent Beach—Public Law 199; ratification of Territorial legislation providing a practical method of disposing of small public land remnants resulting from eminent domain proceedings and abandonment of all or portions of existing but unused public roads, streets, and other rights-of-way—Public Law 478; authority for amendment of restrictive covenants in patents to tracts of not more than one-half acre so as to broaden permissive use—Public Law 481; and to permit construction of a church—Public Law 476; authorizing sale, under special circumstances, of certain public lands at Weliweli, Island of Kauai—Public Law 839—and Kaneohe Bay, island of Oahu—Public Law 900—to private individuals; making unnecessary a requirement for readvertisement of sale where public lands have once been offered for sale for residential purposes and not sold—Public Law 482; authorizing sale of 682 scattered and landlocked remnants of Territorial public lands—approximately 240 acres—with preference to abutting landowners without prohibitive expense of public auction—Public Law 869; amending existing law to increase the number of qualified farmers who may secure homestead lands in Hawaii—Public Law 903; permitting a number of eleemosynary organizations composed of persons of Japanese ancestry to file claims for lands conveyed by them to the Territory of Hawaii during World War II—Public Law 542; authorizing exchanges and sales of public lands within or adjacent to the Puna district, county of Hawaii, to persons whose lands were destroyed by volcanic action during March–April, 1955—Public Law 844; and legislation providing for establishment of the 180-acre City of Refuge National Historical Park, Island of Hawaii—Public Law 177.

HAWAII-ALASKA WATER RESOURCES

Three measures deal with water resources development in Hawaii and Alaska: Authorizing the Hawaii commissioner of public lands to include in future conveyancing instruments future Territorial rights to enter on and to assess such lands for irrigation project development—Public Law 477; implementing the Hawaiian Irrigation Act of 1953 by giving clear statutory authority for orderly planning and construction of essential Territorial irrigation projects—Public Law 899; and Public Law 322, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to utilize more fully the Bureau of Reclamation facilities in Alaska to investigate and report to Congress on projects for the conservation, development, and utilization of water resources in the Territory.

ALASKA GENERAL MEASURES

As in the case of Hawaii, several Alaska measures enacted into law relate to performance of governmental functions: Public Law 154, making members of the Territorial legislature eligible to qualify and to serve as delegates at the constitutional convention during November-December 1955; Public Law 201, making adjustments in boundaries between the second and fourth judicial districts; and Public Law 908, authorizing an increase in the amount retainable by United States commissioners from fees collected; Public Law 56, correcting a technical deficiency so that Alaska will be able to obtain full benefits of the Employment Security Administration Financing Act of 1954; Public Law 904, extending for 2 years, or until December 31, 1958, authority for the Territory to acquire, without reimbursement or transfer of funds, personal property surplus to the needs of the Federal Government; and Public Law 923, directing Interior to select a site for port-of-entry facilities on the Alaska Highway nearer to the Alaska-Canadian border than the present one, 97 miles distant.

ALASKA LAND, RESOURCES, USE

Very substantial accomplishment in the direction of assuring further resources utilization and future economic development is reflected in enactment of additional Alaska measures: Public Law 213, eliminating the former requirement that an 80-rod space be reserved between public land entries on navigable waters, thus permitting fuller utilization of key shoreline areas; Public Law 158, authorizing road-building activities on through highways within the boundaries of Alaska municipal corporations; Public Law 163, authorizing renewal of a lease of Annette Island Airport, southern gateway to Alaska, by the Civil Aeronautics Administration; Public Law 884, providing for establishment of the Alaska International Rail and Highway Commission to develop comprehensive recommendations for location of rail and highway facilities deemed most feasible economically and from a security standpoint for connection of the continental United States with Alaska; Public Law 232, permitting the Alaska Railroad to execute 55-year leases for location of industrial warehouses on railroad property, thus qualifying under national bank and other loan requirements; Public Law 507, authorizing Federal construction of camp grounds, parking areas, and other public recreation areas, including necessary access roads thereto, in Alaska; Public Law 516, authorizing issuance of $12.5 million in bonds to finance additional needed public improvements; Public Law 625, permitting export and sale of walrus hides by Alaskan indigenes, and prescribing regulations for taking of walruses by non-indigenes for purposes other than food and clothing; Public Law 698, making unnecessary both a presurvey final proof and postsurvey final proof of compliance with homestead requirements where entry is made on originally unsurveyed lands; Public Law 892, permitting disposal of lands restored from highway, telephone line, and pipeline withdrawals, and permitting abutting landowners to acquire extension of their present holdings; and Public Law 931, broadening the homestead law in Alaska to permit sale or other conveyance of allotted Indian, Aleut, or Eskimo homestead lands.

PUERTO RICO, VIRGIN ISLANDS MEASURES

Finally, in the Caribbean area, Public Law 692 transfers from Interior to Agriculture responsibility for servicing Puerto Rico hurricane relief loans, and to the Public Housing Commissioner the duty of servicing the sales contract of the Falansterio Apartments in San Juan; Public Law 925 authorizes establishment of the Virgin Islands National Park; and Public Law 186 directs the transfer of 60 acres of lands on St. Croix, V. I., to the Department of Agriculture for use in the Department's extension and research program.

V. INDIAN AFFAIRS

The Indian and native—Eskimo and Aleut—populations of the United States and Alaska approximates 435,000; Indian landholdings and reservations subject to varying degrees of Federal control total approximately 52 million acres in some 28 States. With 189 measures proposing Indian legislation refered to the committee, and in turn to the Subcommittee on Indian Affairs, the committee made what I believe to be substantial progress in its continuing effort to aid effectively in the management and conservation of Indian human, natural, and economic resources and funds, to assist in improving individual and tribal economic conditions, and to resolve difficulties arising from claims against the United States.

While the bulk of the 50 Indian measures enacted into public law deal with specific areas or tribes, landmark legislation of general significance was approved.

INDIAN VOCATIONAL, EDUCATIONAL TRAINING

Heading the list, and having far-reaching effect on the future welfare of our Indian citizens, is Public Law 959, authorizing a program of vocational training for adult Indians living on or near Indian reservations. With up to $3.5 million in Federal funds authorized to be appropriated annually, Public Law 959 is aimed primarily at improving the job skills of Indian workers in the 18–35 year age group, and provides authority for the Secretary of the Interior to contract with State and local agencies for the training, and to provide trainees with necessary transportation and subsistence.

In similar vein, and looking to a revitalized program in the field of Indian education, Public Law 702 directs the Secretary of the Interior to conduct a study and investigation of Indian education in the United States and Alaska, and to report to the Congress on findings made.

INDIAN CLAIMS ACTS

Public Law 767, extending the life of the Indian Claims Commission for five years from the previously established expiration date of April 10, 1957, will permit the Commission needed time to tackle the job of disposing of 750 pending claims, while Public Law 717 provides for partial settlement of certain claims of the Uintah and White River Bands of Utes, by quieting in the tribes title to the mineral estate in more than 36,000 acres of land for which compensation is being claimed in the Court of Claims.

TERMINAL TRIBE MEASURES

Termination or adjustment legislation for three small tribal groups in northeastern Oklahoma, following tribal requests for terminal legislation, resulted in Public Law 887, affecting the Wyandotte Tribe; Public Law 921, the Peoria Tribe, and Public Law 943, the Ottawa Tribe. Three additional acts, Public Law 715, Public Law 721, and Public Law 718, will implement and facilitate the termination program for the Menominee Indians, Wisconsin, by amending the 1954 Termination Act to improve timber stands and resource management generally, and to relieve the tribe of costs incurred in developing management plans.

Public Law 920 corrects certain deficiencies in the 1954 Uintah-Ouray, Utah, Terminal Act, dealing with distribution of tribal property, while Public Law 696 transfers to the Kanosh Band of Indians, Utah, title to 600 acres of tribally-used land, in order to implement that group's terminal program.

INDIAN RESOURCES UTILIZATION

Significant legislation in Indian resource utilization and development legislation approved by the 84th Congress includes Public Law 255, the Indian long-term leasing act, permitting Indian owners of restricted lands to lease all or part of their holdings for a period of up to 25 years, for specified purposes, and should operate to add substantially to income received; Public Law 390 providing long-term lease authority during a 2-year trial period, applies only to unassigned lands of Mohave and Chimehuevi Indians, Arizont; Public Law 47, withdrawing from general mining law entry some 2.7 million acres of lands within the Papago Indian Reservation, Ariz., and conveying assets of very substantial value, the unappropriated mineral estate, to the tribe; Public Law 188 authorizing the Yakima Tribe, Washington, to purchase, sell, and exchange trust lands in heirship status, thus providing for blocking up to achieve more economic operation and improved management; Public Law 263, authorizing the State of Utah to effect exchange of state-owned mineral lands lying within the exterior boundaries of the Uintah-Ouray Indian Reservation, for mineral-bearing public domain lands outside, to the mutual advantage of both the Indians and the State; Public Law 252, supplemented by Public Law 686, authorizing the Pueblo Indians of San Lorenzo and Pojaoque, New Mexico, to sell certain lands to the Navaho Indians, making needed funds available to the former, permitting land-consolidation for the latter; Public Law 187, authorizing the Yakima Tribe, Washington, to lease to the State some 200 acres of tribal land for preservation of historic Fort Simcoe; and Public Law 480, transferring improved Federal lands used for educational purposes to the Pueblo of San Lorenzo, New Mexico.

INDIAN LAND CONVEYANCE, USE

Included in other enactments involving land conveyances or land use are Public Law 772, which restores to tribal ownership—without cost to the tribe—818,000 valuable acres of "open" and undisposed of lands on the Colville Indian Reservation, Wash.; Public Law 450, which simplifies the obtaining of loans from commercial sources by Indian landowners, by permitting encumbrance of trust or restricted property, subject to approval of the Secretary of the Interior; Public Law 736, which conveys to the Seminole Tribe, Florida, beneficial ownership of approximately 27,000 acres of land, a major contribution to the land and economic base of this tribe; Public Law 991, which is designed to provide authority for conveyance to Indian tribes of any Federally owned buildings or improvements on tribal or "administrative reserve" lands no longer needed for their original purposes; Public Law 857, which permits the subsurface storage of oil or gas on restricted Indian lands, assuring an additional source of income in several tribal jurisdictions; Public Law 261, providing for conveyance to the State of Federal and Standing Rock Sioux Indian tribal lands containing the original burial site of Chief Sitting Bull; Public Law 592, authorizing, at tribal request, partition or sale of inherited interest in allotted lands of the Tulalip Indian Reservation, Wash., to pave the way for location of a major oil refinery thereon, with attendant economic benefits; Public Law 539, directing issuance to holders of individual exchange assignments on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, Mont., patents to lands embraced therein; Public Law 572, directing transfer of 9 acres of Hualapai Indian Reservation land, Arizona, to a school district for school purposes; Public Law 443, providing for conveyance of the Lower Lake Indian Rancheria, California, to Lake County, for an airport; Public Law 252, to convey 15 acres of Hoopa Valley Indian Reservation land, California, to a school district for use as a school site; and Public Law 563, providing for the sale of 10 acres of land owned by the Agua Caliente Band of Mission Indians, California, for the same purpose.

INDIAN TRIBAL FUNDS

Several measures involving Indian tribal funds will permit direct individual financial assistance by providing for fund distribution, or will simplify administration of funds programs: Public Law 202, providing for distribution of funds of the Creek Indian Nation, Oklahoma; Public Law 281, dealing with distribution of $2.1 million to members of the Kaw Tribe of Indians, Oklahoma; Public Law 278, providing for quarterly—as against semiannual—per capita payments to members of the Shoshone-Arapahoe Tribes; and Public Law 794, extending for 2 years the time during which payments of tribal funds to members of these two tribes are authorized to be made; Public Law 553, to segregate, on the basis of approved membership rolls, some $4.2 million in trust funds held for the Three Affiliated Tribes, North Dakota; Public Law 560, authorizing a $100 per capita payment to members of the Red Lake Band, Chippewa Indians, Minnesota; and Public Law 769, providing for payment and distribution to some 125 families of the Pine Ridge Sioux Indians, South Dakota, as reimbursement for damages suffered as the result of the establishment of the Pine Ridge Aerial Gunnery Range in 1942.

MISCELLANEOUS INDIAN MEASURES

Other Indian measures give authority, in Public Law 837, to the Secretary of the Interior to charge purchasers of Indian timber for special services such as scaling, cruising, and marking, provided by Bureau of Indian Affairs personnel; Public Law 348 extends the period of restrictions against alienation or encumbrance of lands belonging to the Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes—Cherokee, Chickasaw, Choctaw, Creek, and Seminole—Oklahoma; Public Law 546, extends until 1965 the authority of Interior to contract with the Middle Rio Grande Conservancy District, New Mexico, for the payment, on a reimbursable basis, of operation and maintenance charges assessed on approximately 117,000 acres of Pueblo Indian lands; Public Law 926 declares that the United States holds in trust for the Pueblos of Zia and Jemez, N. Mex., some 77,000 acres; Public Law 956 deals with administration of the Red Lake Indian Forest, Minn.; Public Law 203 repeals provisions of existing law providing for recoupment of certain public school construction costs attributable to the Indians attending schools in Minnesota, South Dakota, Montana, Washington, and California; Public Law 568, relieves the Navaho Tribe of reimbursing certain costs of maintaining highways across the Navaho Indian Reservation, Ariz.-N. Mex.; Public Law 570, recognizes about 4,000 Indians of mixed blood presently residing in North Carolina as Lumbee Indians; and Public Law 912, which commends the organization known as the Memorial to the American Indian Foundation for undertaking to establish a permanent memorial in New Mexico to the North American Indian.

FIELD, SPECIAL HEARINGS

During the Congress just ended, and in order to lay a sound base for understanding of pending legislation or development of needed new legislation, the committee, through its subcommittees, conducted a number of field or special hearings.

The Subcommittee on Irrigation and Reclamation held hearings in the field on the Mid-State and Red Willow projects in Nebraska; Wapinitia project, Oregon; Coulee Dam municipal development, Washington; Tule Lake project, California; Washoe project, Nevada-California; Boulder City municipal development, Nevada; inspected existing or proposed irrigation projects in Nebraska, Wyoming, and Idaho; attended the National Reclamation Association meeting at Lincoln, Nebr.; and, with members of the House Public Works Committee, made an inspection trip of flood-stricken areas of northern California.

The Subcommittee on Territorial and Insular Affairs held extensive hearings throughout the Territory of Alaska, described by Delegate BARTLETT as "the most extensive and intensive congressional inquiry in Alaska's history." Special subcommittees held hearings at Portland, Oreg., on operation of the Morningside Hospital for Alaska mentally ill, and in the Virgin Islands to inspect the proposed Virgin Islands National Park and to take testimony with respect to proposed changes in the Virgin Islands Organic Act.

Field hearings on Indian matters were held on the Seminole, Fla., Cherokee, N. C., Flathead, Mont., Crow Creek, S. Dak., Lower Brule, S. Dak., Pine Ridge, S. Dak., and Rosebud, S. Dak., Indian Reservations; at Muskogee and Anadarko, Okla.; Tucson, Ariz.; Browning and Great Falls, Mont.; Bismark, N. Dak., and Pierre, S. Dak.

Mines and Mining Subcommittee or special subcommittee members held hearings in Washington on the coal research program and on progress of the defense minerals program, and attended the annual meeting of the American Mining Congress at Las Vegas, Nev., while a staff employee inspected uranium and lead-zinc operations in Colorado, and manganese mines and ore-buying depots in Arizona and New Mexico.

In addition, a special research consultant formerly associated with the Bureau of Reclamation, Mr. Eugene D. Eaton, was retained to complete the preparation of a badly needed compilation of material relating to the Central Valley project, California.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS

As it must in every Congress, the committee and staff devoted hundreds of man-hours to legislation or projects which fall under the hearing of unfinished business.

A partial and necessarily incomplete list of major projects for consideration in the 85th Congress includes investigation into, and development—or reintroduction and reconsideration—of legislation involving: Alaska statehood; Hawaii statehood; water rights settlement legislation; implementation of the President's Water Resources Policy Commission recommendations or alternatives; Territorial control of Alaska fisheries resources; Alaska land grants; possible revision of the Virgin Islands Organic Act; evaluation of Department of Defense security program in the Pacific Islands; native claims in Alaska; law and order on Indian reservations; evaluation of Indian relocation program; evaluation of public information regarding Indians and the overall Federal Indian program; centralizing in a single, permanent, Federal agency the responsibility for information and activities relating to Antarctica; policy respecting the comprehensive long-range National Park System program known as "Mission 66"; returning to Congress the direct control over withdrawal and reservation of public lands for defense purposes, and requiring strict compliance with State or Territorial fish and game laws within such reservations; authorizing a Federal program to develop recreational, wildlife, and related public benefits in national forests and woodlands; payments in lieu of Federal taxes; policies respecting sale and disposition of federally generated electric energy and power; and a comprehensive, long-range domestic minerals program.

CONCLUSION

I have said, Mr. Speaker, that the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs processed nearly 1 of every 5 of the bills which became public law in the 84th Congress; I believe that statement, and the foregoing summary of legislation help to support the assertion that committee members and staff were kept busy.

Between the opening day of the 84th Congress, on January 5, 1955, and the adjournment sine die at the end of the second session on July 27, 1956, 417 calendar days elapsed, while Congress was in session a total of 230 House legislative days. There were a total of 294 working days—Mondays through Friday—during that period.

During those 417 calendar days, 294 working days, or 230 legislative days of the 84th Congress, our committee convened a total of 352 separate meetings—257 of them subcommittee meetings, and 95 meetings of the full committee. I believe those figures speak for themselves.

Committee output does not just happen, Mr. Speaker. It takes the energy, leadership, initiative, and cooperation of many individuals to fulfill the legislative mission; the Congress just ended has demonstrated how successfully that mission can be fulfilled. I am proud of the contribution of the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, am grateful for the opportunity to again have served as its chairman, and sincerely believe the committee has contributed more than its share of what will serve as the permanent record of accomplishments of the 84th Congress—the official United States Statutes at Large.

A Report to the People of the Seventh Congressional District in Missouri

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. DEWEY SHORT
OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, we are fast approaching the close of the 2d session of the 84th Congress. In all probability we will adjourn sine die before this day is over.

In evaluating the legislative actions of this Congress there naturally will be honest differences of opinions. Bitter partisans will naturally claim too much while their opponents will admit too little in the way of accomplishments.

However much Republicans and Democrats may differ, I believe all reasonable Members will avoid extreme views by claiming that the work of this Congress was all good or all bad. A true appraisal will show, I believe, that this Congress passed much good legislation, defeated some bad, but perhaps could have written a better record. One must never be satisfied with his present achievements.

AGRICULTURE

More than 2 years ago, on Monday June 28, 1954, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I made the following remarks:

We all recognize agriculture as our basic industry and that dairying comprises the most important segment of it. I firmly believe that dairy products should be supported under the same system as basic commodities. It is manifestly unfair to force the dairy farmer to pay inordinately high prices for grain and feeds supported by high fixed Government subsidies at the same time he has his milk, cheese, and other dairy products sold on a lower flexible scale.

Actually, the basic crops—wheat, cotton, corn, rice, tobacco, and peanuts—account for only about 23 percent of the Nation's total farm income. Yet nine-tenths of the $6.5 billion committed to price-support operations is tied up in these basic commodities.

During 1953 Missouri farmers received $705 million for their livestock and livestock products while crops returned only $310 million. This works a distinct hardship on our Missouri farmers because only 14 percent of Missouri's farm income is supplied by the so-called basic commodities. No one branch of agriculture should be favored over another.

During the middle of this session Congress attempted to return to the high fixed 90 percent parity price supports on the so-called basic commodities. That would have increased the prices for grains and feeds for the dairy farmers and poultry raisers in my district. That bill would have worked a tremendous hardship on farmers in the Ozarks and would have further added to the surpluses and storage costs from which we have been suffering. I voted against the passage of that obnoxious and harmful measure—when we had $8 billion of surplus agricultural commodities and were paying almost a million dollars a day storage on them.

President Eisenhower wisely vetoed the measure and I voted to sustain his veto. The Committee on Agriculture immediately brought in a revised farm bill which provided for a soil bank, whereby the Secretary of Agriculture enters into contracts with producers for a minimum period of 3 to 10 years, under which the producer receives payment for taking parts of his surplus croplands out of production and puts them to conservation uses. The cost of the program is limited to $450 million annually but $1,200,000,000 were set aside for the soil bank.

While I do not consider this, by any means, the final solution to our farm problem, I did reluctantly vote for this bill and gladly for several other constructive farm measures.

To further relieve the economic stress of the farmers, the Congress voted to exempt farmers from paying Federal excise taxes on gasoline and other special fuels used on the farm. This will result in a savings of $60 million in tax relief annually.

Congress voted to extend for 2 years soil conservation payments of the Federal Government to our farmers and appropriated $250 million for the next fiscal year for this purpose providing a maximum payment of $2,500 to any individual farmer.

Another benefit to the farmers of the Nation, as well as to our citizens generally, was the allocation of funds to establish certain research centers in various sections of the country for the purpose of studying the forestry program, eliminating animal and plant diseases, improving marketing methods, and improving machinery for the disposal of our farm products abroad. It opened wider the doors of our warehouses to provide food for needy people in our own country, and enacted legislation to protect the interest of small farmers and to improve the agricultural credit system with special emphasis on the well-being of family-operated farms.

We also enacted legislation and appropriations to expand and improve rural electrification and telephone service. We increased appropriations from sixty to seventy-five million dollars to provide milk in our school lunch programs for millions of schoolchildren.

We authorized the greatest appropriations for agriculture that any Congress in history has ever authorized. The total for all agricultural purposes for the fiscal year 1957 was nearly $2 billion. This is $1 billion more than was appropriated for agriculture during the last fiscal year. Of course, $1.2 billion of this year's appropriations has been earmarked to finance the soil bank program. The remainder of the funds will go to continue the work of the Agriculture Research Service, Soil Conservation Service, Watershed Protection and Flood Prevention Service, Marketing Service, Rural Electrification Administration, Commodity Credit Administration, Farm Credit Administration, and other assistance programs administered by the Department of Agriculture.

I was happy to support and vote for all these constructive measures and the present price of farm products and livestock shows that we are on the right road to a sound and stable agriculture. We are bringing production and consumption into proper balance without the artificial demands created by war.

HIGHWAYS

One of the major accomplishments of this session of Congress was the passage of the biggest roadbuilding program in our Nation's history.

Congress appropriated $33 billion to construct 41,000 miles of super interstate highways by 1969, and to improve primary and secondary highway systems as well as roads on Federal land.

The matching formula for the Interstate System will be 90 percent Federal and 10 percent State. Allocations for primary, rural, and urban roads will be made on a 50–50 matching fund basis. This gigantic highway construction program will take care of our rapidly increasing population and expanding cargo traffic. It will not only aid our domestic commerce, but builds up our national defense.

EDUCATION

Mr. Speaker, I have always believed that no nation is stronger than the intelligence and character of its citizenry. A great philosopher once said: "Nothing is great but man, and nothing in man is great but mind." The Father of Our Country spoke of the necessity for having an enlightened citizenry and we all, regardless of party, realize the inadequacy of our school plants over the Nation, and the dire need of more teachers, better teachers at higher salaries.

Notwithstanding this realization, the Federal aid to education bill was defeated because certain racial and religious considerations were injected into the measure. There are many of us who fear the ultimate possibilities of Federal interference or thought-control of our State and local school systems should any improper type of Federal aid to education bill be adopted. This question is fraught with grave danger and we need no better examples than Hitler, Mussolini, and Stalin.

The Congress must move with great care and caution in extending Federal aid to education, but I was happy to vote with other Members of both parties for legislation authorizing the expenditure of $7,500,000 a year for a 5-year period—the funds to be allocated to States matching grants for educational aid and rural library service. This bill will serve to improve if not equalize educational opportunities in this regard for our rural citizens.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Mr. Speaker, I have always and consistently supported social security and have helped literally thousands of our old people in getting their pensions. I am glad that in the last Republican-controlled Congress we expanded social security to bring more than 10 million additional citizens into the program. At this session of Congress we approved major innovations in the social-security program which would give additional benefits to about 1,225,000 workers in this Nation.

The two major changes in the act would allow, first—totally disabled persons to obtain cash benefits at age 50, and second—reduce the retirement age of women workers from 65 to 62. The measure also extends old-age and survivors insurance coverage to about 200,000 lawyers, dentists, and other self-employed persons who have been excluded from social-security coverage.

VETERANS

My record on veterans' legislation has been clear and consistent ever since I came to Congress. Always I have supported and voted for the benefits for the veterans of all our wars and their dependents.

Ours is a grateful Nation, and the Congress appropriated $4.7 billion for all veterans' benefits—an increase of $20 million over the amount appropriated for the 1956 fiscal year and $8 million more than was recommended by the President.

This Nation has the greatest veterans' program of any nation in the world. This program includes education and training, insurance, housing, compensation and pensions, medical services, and many other benefits for veterans and their dependents.

This Congress appropriated $51,635,000 for hospital and domiciliary facilities of the Veterans' Administration for the next fiscal year. In spite of the fact that the veterans' hospitals of this Nation represent an investment of more than $2½ billion, many of the buildings are in need of repair or replacement, and it is difficult to understand why we have to wait so long to get disabled veterans hospitalized.

Of particular interest is the fact that during this session of Congress we passed legislation which will allow 10,000 more widows of World War I veterans to be eligible for veterans' pensions. The House passed a bill that would take care of the veterans of World War I who have been overlooked or neglected.

Under the House bill all veterans of World War I upon reaching the age of 65 would automatically draw a pension of $90 per month, but the Senate has taken no action on the measure.

The Congress did approve legislation which provides assistance to children of veterans of World War I, World War II, and Korea who died from service-connected disabilities. Monthly payments to the children range from $110 for full-time training to $80 for three-fourths and $50 for half-time training. This measure will provide educational benefits to more than 150,000 children of soldiers who died in the service of our country.

FEDERAL EMPLOYERS

Mr. Speaker, I was happy to vote for legislation increasing pay and granting additional benefits to all classified Government employees to meet the sharp rise in the costs of living. Particularly was I happy to vote increases and benefits for our postal employees, who have always been my good friends and to grant retirement benefits to all employees at the Federal medical center at Springfield, Mo., and other similar institutions throughout the country.

Mr. Speaker, I have tried to be of assistance to other people outside the Government service. I supported the original Railroad Retirement Act, and was happy to vote for amendments liberalizing it.

I also supported Senate bill 3879, a bill enabling automobile dealers to bring suit in Federal district courts against manufacturers not acting in good faith in complying with terms of franchises.

Without injury to members of our medical profession, I have succeeded in getting recognition and establishing standing for the doctors of dentistry, osteopathy, and optometry, all of whom can now receive commissions in our armed services. It has been my privilege and pleasure to address the national associations of these three branches of our healing arts, and I am pleased with the fine letters of appreciation and commendation received from their associations. Osteopathy and optometry are at last getting the consideration and recognized dignity that they deserve.

Mr. Speaker, the Eisenhower administration established the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, giving it Cabinet rank. No other administration in our history has been so concerned over and helpful to the mental and physical health of our citizens. During the past 4 years the 83d and 84th Congresses have voted enormously increased appropriations for the control and eradication of heart, cancer, and all kinds of physical and mental diseases.

NATIONAL DEFENSE AND FOREIGN POLICY

Everyone knows that we are living in trying and troublesome times. The cold war is still on and the conflict between Christianity and communism, freedom and slavery continues. The greatest guaranty of security for the free world against aggression is to maintain an adequate national defense.

When I became chairman of the House Armed Services Committee in the last Congress we were spending $53 billion a year on national defense. That was twice our national debt at the end of World War I. That is two-thirds of all the taxpayers' money today. By wise management and honest administration we have reduced that expenditure to about $36 billion a year without weakening our security. We still have nearly 3 million men in all our Armed Forces, and will maintain that approximate strength for the forseeable future—at least until 1960.

While more emphasis is being placed on scientific research and technologial development in this atomic and hydrogen age, we cannot depend altogether on nuclear power and guided missiles to protect this Nation. We will always need the Army, Navy, and Air Force, and must remain strong on land, sea, and in the air. Men will always be needed along with machines but manpower perhaps can be reduced as we increase our firepower with new weapons in units of mobility, speed and flexibility.

At this session of Congress $34,656,727,000—or more than half of the taxpayers' money, $508,877,000 more than the budget estimate—was appropriated for our Defense Department. Our expenditures for the present fiscal year will be more than the amount appropriated because we have several billion dollars in unexpended funds and balances.

We have a well balanced defense and this administration will never weaken the security of the Nation in order to balance the budget. However, we must realize that no nation can have military might without economic strength. Destroy one and you will destroy the other.

Our firm but considerate foreign policy has ended the shooting war in Korea, avoided a war in Formosa and Indochina, successfully stopped the spreading of communism in Guatemala, helped settle the knotty problem in Trieste, and thus far succeeded in preventing a violent eruption of world conflagration at Suez and in the Near East. It has required patience, perseverance, endurance, understanding, broad vision, and strong leadership to chart the course of our ship of state through the many troubled waters to the harbor of safety and peace. Much nonsense, distortion, and misstatement of facts have been recently made by cynical critics who would better serve their Nation by cooperating with this administration in its mighty efforts to maintain peace among ourselves and all nations. Much more I will have to say about our national defense and international relationships when I return home to tell the people first hand.

SEVENTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT, MISSOURI

Mr. Speaker, neither time nor space will allow me here and now to discuss fully many of the issues that will confront us in the campaign this year. In closing I do want to express my deep appreciation and heartfelt thanks to the good people of the Seventh Congressional District of Missouri for their unfaltering confidence and steadfast friendship over the many years it has been my honor and privilege to serve them.

For nearly a quarter of a century I have been a Member of this body and my people well know that for 8 of the 24 years I have represented them in Congress I was the only Republican from Missouri. For 20 long years I have struggled under the New-Fair Deal, most of the time a lone wolf against great odds.

However, under this Republican administration in the past 3 or 4 years I am glad to see Table Rock Dam, an $87.5 million project, started, and it is now almost half completed. Fort Crowder, near Neosho, has been made a permanent military post, and we are now building two permanent barracks there and 66 housing units.

After a long, hard struggle Fort Leonard Wood has been made a permanent military installation and is destined to become one of the outstanding training centers in the Nation. While it is not in my congressional district, it has a vital economic impact not only on my district but on the entire State of Missouri. I was happy to work for the reactivation of Whiteman Air Force Base at Knob Noster near Sedalia, which is a B–47 base of our Strategic Air Command. Neither is this installation in my district, but I was glad as chairman of the House Armed Services Committee in the last Congress to get $22 million allocated for military housing there, and in the session just closed I got an additional $3 million as a backlog added. My efforts also were put forth to expanding and developing our Air Force Base at Grandview, near Kansas City, Mo.

After many weeks and months of hard work we got established and built at Joplin the Pacific Mercury plant, now manufacturing wiring and cables for the Boeing B–52 bomber.

One of the great enterprises to come to southwest Missouri will be a guided missiles plant being built by Aerojet at Fort Crowder, but it will be developed and operated by the Rocketdyne division of the North American Aviation, Inc. The first unit of this plant will cost approximately $10 million and will ultimately employ around 3,000 people.

It was my pleasure recently to dedicate a new armory at Anderson. A new armory is assured for Carthage, and we are hoping to get one at Springfield in the not distant future. It must not be forgotten that we already have a splendid Naval Reserve training unit at Joplin, one at Drury College, Springfield, and I also worked hard to get established the ROTC unit at Southwest Missouri State College at Springfield.

Marshfield will get a new post-office building and Lockwood has already moved into their new post-office building.

Dropped into my lap when Springfield and Greene County were added to my congressional district was the O'Reilly Hospital, which was closed by the Veterans' Administration in the former administration on the President's orders. I have been pleased to help the Assemblies of God Church in establishing Evangel College there and pray for its continued growth and success.

I am sure Carthage will not forget the flood-control levee which I have worked for during several years—and which is now becoming a reality. I know I will be pardoned if I remind the people at Diamond and in Newton County that I introduced the original bill for the George Washington Carver National Monument and later former President Truman, then a United States Senator, introduced a companion bill in the United States Senate, and we got that legislation through under the Roosevelt administration. Quite an accomplishment for this Ozark Hillbilly Republican.

It is my intention, if returned to Congress, to introduce a new bill for the creation of a national park or memorial at Wilsons Creek at Battlefield, south of Springfield. This project has a personal interest for me since my Grandfather Short fought in that battle to preserve the Union. He lost that battle, but won the war.

Mr. Speaker, these are some of the things we have done recently for southwest Missouri. I would not be so conceited or selfish as to claim credit for these accomplishments, but I think I can humbly and truthfully assure the people I represent that these installations and activities would not have been accomplished without DEWEY SHORT. The only reason I succeeded is because of the many friends—Democrats as well as Republicans—that I have made during the past 24 years I have been a Member of Congress. Seniority counts in this body and a newcomer here is like a freshman in college. It requires time, training, experience, and friends to get things done, I care not who the man is or to what political party he belongs. He might be the richest, smartest, and best man in the country but he will have to serve 2 or 3 terms in the Congress before he can become effective.

God has been good to me and my people have been very kind. I know that they rejoice with me in the Dewey Short scholarship that has been established by Aerojet, giving some bright, energetic, and ambitious young man in our district a chance to acquire a 4-year course of education in engineering at the school of his choice. After his graduation he will be in a position for a brilliant career with Aerojet or some other great company.

Mr. Speaker, recently my colleagues on the Armed Services Committee in the House, along with some other personal friends, raised a fund to have a portrait done of me, which will hang longer than I am on this earth in the room of the House Armed Services Committee. Naturally, I am deeply touched and shall forever remain grateful to you and others who participated in the unveiling ceremonies of that portrait. I know I do not deserve all the fine, complimentary things said about me on that occasion, but I am naturally pleased to know that long after I have left this body my friends from back home when they visit the Nation's Capitol, can get a look at this Ozark hillbilly's portrait hanging on the wall near the portrait of our fine colleague and beloved friend, Chairman CARL VINSON, of Georgia.

I trust no one will think I have been boasting unduly, but this is an election year, Mr. Speaker, and "He that tooteth not his own horn, the same shall not be tooted."

Accomplishments of the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WARREN G. MAGNUSON
OF WASHINGTON
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a report on the accomplishments in the 84th Congress of the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of which I am chairman.

There being no objection, the report was ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President, in reporting to you a year ago on the work of our committee in the 1st session of the 84th Congress I predicted that the 2d session, just concluded, would be busier and result in more legislation than the 1st session.

That prediction has been borne out. In fact, Mr. President, our committee has done about twice as much work this year as we did in the 1955 session. We reported to the Senate last year 46 measures as compared to 82 bills this year. The Senate passed 43 of our bills last year and approved 77 of them this year, while the President signed 24 of our bills last year and 71 this year.

Last year we held 21 days of open hearings in the full committee as compared to 65 days of such hearings this year, while our subcommittees in 1955 held open hearings on 30 days as compared to 84 days of such hearings this year. Here is a table showing exactly what we did in the 84th Congress:

Committee activities as of July 12, 1956

Number of bills (Senate and House), resolutions, and amendments referred to committee	295
Number of bills reported by committee	128
Number of bills passed by Senate	120
Number of Senate bills pending in House committees	13
Number of Senate bills reported by House committees	63
Number of Senate bills passed House	59
Number of bills signed by President	95
Number of bills vetoed by President	1
Number of routine nominations referred to committee and confirmed	1,673
Number of major nominations referred to committee and confirmed	32
Number of executive meetings of full committee and subcommittees	56
Number of days of open hearings conducted by full committee	86
Number of days of open hearings conducted by subcommittees:
Communications Subcommittee	4
Surface Transportation Subcommittee	8
Aviation Subcommittee	27
Merchant Marine Subcommittee	33
Subcommittee on S. 2060	1
Subcommittee on S. 2643	6
Subcommittee on Freight Car Shortage	5
Subcommittee on International Air Agreements	5
Subcommittee on Merchant Marine Training and Education	7
Subcommittee on Automobile Marketing Practices	19
Total	114
Total	200

I would be remiss if I did not, first of all, extend my appreciation to the members of our committee for their fine cooperation during the past 2 years. Republicans and Democrats worked as a team and cooperated in producing the legislation that met your approval.

I especially want to tell the chairmen of our subcommittees of my gratitude for their unselfish cooperation in moving along the various bills which were referred to them. They worked long hours and participated in tedious study by our staff of the various bills until they were in shape to put before the full committee.

The Honorable JOHN A. PASTORE, Democrat, of Rhode Island, conducted most of the hearings on the bill to amend the Natural Gas Act, many of the hearings on the overall study of television as chairman of our Communications Subcommittee and advanced our 3-year study into the subject to the highest point we have yet reached. I conducted some of the hearings on each of these subjects.

The Honorable A. S. MIKE MONRONEY, Democrat, of Oklahoma, chairman of our Subcommittee on Aviation, deserves much credit for his work in the field of aviation. Under his skillful guidance, a legislative proposal, which I had the honor to cosponsor, reactivating our neglected airport program, was carried to a successful conclusion. And as chairman of a special Subcommittee on Automobile Marketing Practices, Mike has been accorded nationwide recognition for the work he did which already has brought about voluntary changes in automobile marketing by the manufacturers that will benefit the dealers and the public.

The Honorable GEORGE A. SMATHERS, Democrat, of Florida, as chairman of our Surface Transportation Subcommittee, held long hearings on the trip-lease bill, his study of the International Air Agreements situation has had a beneficial effect for the Nation's airlines and his work with other transportation matters has been of great aid.

My own Subcommittee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries held hearings on and reported to you 66 bills which you approved.

We enacted much important legislation of which our committee is proud. We believe the bills we approved, and which the Senate and House enacted, will help ease the burdens of many of our Government agencies, solve conflicts in operations between the agencies and public, and provide safer air, truck, railroad, and shipping operations.

Mr. President, your Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is proud of the fact that we initiated legislation, and are happy that you approved it, to construct a nuclear-powered merchant marine vessel. Congress approved a total of $22 million for construction of a specialy designed hull in which will be fitted a nuclear engine that will be designed under the auspices of the Atomic Energy Commission and bring the completed cost of this first step in peaceful use of the atom to more than $40 million.

When Congress approved this expenditure it made it possible for the United States to be the first country to put the atom to use in international commerce, and that will do more to encourage the peaceful use of atomic power than any step that has been taken. The cost is large, but, Mr. President, the experience and know-how this country will gain from building the ship and the engine will be worth far more in the future than the dollars it will cost.

My committee and I also are proud of the passage by the Congress and approval by the President of legislation we initiated to establish a sound and comprehensive policy to aid the Nation's fishing industry recover from administration neglect which has caused it to face ruin because of lack of needed aid and the free importation of fish which is in competition with products of our fishermen.

We, through congressional approval, have provided a revolving fund of $10 million from which loans can be made to fishermen, boatbuilders and processors. The good effects of this legislation, which sets up a new division within the Department of the Interior to supervise commercial fishing and encourage and aid sports fishing, will be enjoyed by fishing interests through the entire Nation and also will give our commercial fishermen high level representation in all international conferences affecting the fishing industry. The voice of our fishermen and their reaction to proposals for international agreements will be heard for the first time in future international negotiations.

Our legislation also provides for rehabilitating the Alaska salmon industry which has dropped to the lowest point in history because of neglect, overfishing, predators, and human indifference to the declining salmon runs. And, we hope, will bring new life to the Pacific tuna industry.

We reported favorably and you approved the trip-leasing bill, also a report urging construction of a second airport in the Nation's Capital where congestion in the present facility is becoming more dangerous each day. Our committee has repeatedly warned the administration officials that a serious disaster may occur at the National Airport unless prompt action to relieve the congestion. Enabling legislation authorizing and directing the Secretary of Commerce to construct this facility has been on the books since 1950.

Early in 1955, your committee reported out a resolution to establish a joint committee to study the air navigation facilities in the United States. This measure died in the House. Later, during hearings on a bill to make the CAA an independent agency, considerable evidence on this problem was heard. The committee staff attended the CAB hearing on the Grand Canyon crash, and we plan further inquiry into this whole navigation picture, looking to a system of navigation that will be geared to the jet age rather than the DC–3 age.

We also initiated the legislation to require the Civil Aeronautics Board to grant permanent certification for feeder airlines in the United States, Alaska, and Hawaii. This legislation will enable the feeder lines to expand and provide better service for airminded American travelers.

The chairman of your committee also sponsored legislation which was enacted into law providing stiff penalties for the sabotage of airplanes, and for the elimination of fraud by radio aimed at fraudulent stock promotion schemes originating in foreign countries, also legislation to set up safety standards for the transportation of migrant farm workers. We also were successful in piloting through the Congress bills to construct new fish hatchery facilities in several States.

As a result of hearings held last fall on the west coast and Alaska, reports have been filed recommending numerous steps to be taken to assist Alaska and the west coast States with their transportation and fishery problems.

We took other important steps we hope will help alleviate the constant boxcar shortage which causes so much distress and loss to our grain growers and other shippers every year during harvest season. We will have more boxcar inspectors to expedite return of boxcars after they are unloaded. The Interstate Commerce Commission and the railroads have promised their unstinted aid in this effort.

Mr. President, we have worked hard this year to try to solve the problem of better television service to the people of the Nation. The committee has felt such service is for the benefit of all of our citizens and we are determined that they get it.

After 3 years of work by your committee on the television subject, we are watching closely a proposal of the Federal Communications Commission which promises results, though it is expected to take as much as 7 or 8 years to make effective a program that will give good TV service to all parts of our Nation.

Our committee also has taken an active interest in the subject of international communications and probably will go thoroughly into this field in the next session of Congress.

The 84th Congress—It Emphasized Interest in People and Accomplished More Than Any Congress Since Social Security Was Passed Under F. D. R.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. WILLIAM J. GREEN, JR.

OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this is inventory time for the 84th, a Democratic Congress, as it adjourns. The U. S. News & World Report, certainly no Democratic organ, describes the 84th as "a Congress that did a lot." In the Democratic manner we put people ahead of other considerations. We put America's welfare above all else. We approved 103 of President Eisenhower's 225 requests, but while we were highly cooperative, we knew when to say "No." The Democratic 84th Congress will be remembered for its enactments designed to help the average man and woman. Here are a few of them.

WHAT DID WE DO FOR WORKERS?

Minimum wages were raised from 75 cents to $1 per hour, over the Eisenhower suggestion of 90½ cents. Again, over his objections, we reduced from 65 to 62 the age at which women are eligible for social-security benefits and made the totally disabled eligible at age 50. We effected a pay raise for postal workers and for civil-service employees not in the top pay brackets.

WHAT DID WE DO FOR PUBLIC HEALTH?

We provided $90 million in grants to build medical research facilities in nonprofit institutions, over a 3-year period. We extended for 2 years the Hill-Burton Act, a hospital construction program, and authorized grants for training nurses and public-health specialists.

Provided $34½ million for polio vaccine.

Extended the Water Pollution Control Act and authorized $500 million to be spent in matching funds to help communities build sewage disposal plants, with a limit of $50 million per year.

WHAT WE DID FOR THE MILITARY AND OUR NATIONAL DEFENSE

My committee in the House is Armed Services. In 1955 we passed the draft law which extended the Selective Service Act of 1948 until July 1, 1959. Authority to draft doctors was extended to July 1, 1957. In this day of a highly mechanized Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Air Force, career men as specialists are a downright first requisite. The 84th Congress provided pay increases ranging from 6 to 25 percent for career officers and enlisted men.

The Ready Reserve was authorized to reach a strength of up to 2.9 million men.

Established reserve obligations up to 11 years for men between 17 and 35, and authorized a new 6-month training program for up to 250,000 men between 17 and 18½.

The Defense Production Act was extended to June 30, 1958, which directed promotion of geographical dispersion of industry. This would prevent our Nation being taken out of a war by a well-aimed enemy bomb on Detroit, Philadelphia, or other strategic industrial center.

WHAT ABOUT THE FLOODS WHICH HAVE BEEN VISITING PENNSYLVANIA?

No conceivable engineering program could circumvent or give real alleviation to the floods which have devastated our area since we have lately been visited by hurricanes almost annually. It has been said that the huge volumes of waters which descend from the skies flow through the age-old channels which nature has carved out over the centuries. Insurance is the immediate answer. The 84th Congress passed S. 3732, authorizing a $7.5 billion Federal flood insurance and loan program.

The disaster-insurance rate was materially reduced.

WHAT DID WE DO FOR ROADS?

We passed a huge road building program after we rejected the Eisenhower plan which would have floated bonds and been costly to you and me but fine for the bankers. The 84th Congress authorized a roadbuilding program which will employ more than $30 billion in Federal-State funds over a 13-year period. Rather than the banker plan a modified pay-as-you go scheme will provide most of the costs through a tax on gasoline and other items purchased by the people who use the highways.

WHAT ABOUT THAT DELAWARE RIVER CHANNEL?

Delaware Valley, USA, is very much with us. Philadelphia is no longer just one of America's big cities. It is a center which projects into adjoining States and northward and westward and to its south. Modern personal and mass transportation have wiped out the municipal boundary lines, if not on the map, at least in influence.

So manifest is this to all, that both Republican and Democratic Members of the Philadelphia area joined in the fight to deepen the Delaware Channel to Trenton.

The Eisenhower administration took the unique view that the States affected and even private industry should share the cost. This plan was so unprecedented in our national history and Philadelphia was to be the guinea pig. Our national defense was involved along with the shipment of iron ore from Venezuela, sugar from Cuba and oil from many foreign nations. The 84th Congress refused to make an experimental laboratory of the Delaware River ports by forsaking its traditional responsibility for navigable rivers and harbors. We asked for $95 millions. We got $6 million which will start a 35-foot channel to Trenton. We had asked for 40 feet to take the large draft vessels of today.

It had been argued by the opposition that the channel was of particular benefits to the United States Steel at Morrisville. As a matter of fact, employment and small business throughout Delaware Valley are the beneficiaries. United States Steel interests us because it hires many workers, a number of them living in northeast Philadelphia. These deeper channels pay for themselves in bigger income tax returns and in customs collected at the ports. Sixty miles of waterfront will be opened for industries which will dot both sides of the Delaware now that raw materials can be delivered to dockside and the finished product shipped.

HOW DID THE 84TH, A DEMOCRATIC CONGRESS, DO IN FOREIGN POLICY?

Working with a Republican President and Secretary of State we demonstrated that we were American before we were Democratic and that politics ended at the shoreline. The records will show that we backed the Eisenhower foreign policy more completely than Members of his own party. This is because he followed the FDR-Truman line in foreign affairs.

In his quest for foreign aid, President Eisenhower was giving unspoken endorsement to the wisdom of the Marshall plan. When he showed an inclination to keep on arming Tito the 84th Congress balked. There was no inclination on the part of the 84th Congress to build Nasser's Aswan Dam on the Nile and thereby thwart our chances of selling cotton now stored in our warehouses. The 84th Congress had a feeling of "Love thy neighbor as thyself, but not more than thyself."

In an explosive age, the 84th gave full cooperation to the administration in foreign affairs. We have been a party of responsibility over the decades and participation is ingrained. Along with the late Senator Vandenberg, President Franklin D. Roosevelt set up the bipartisan foreign policy. Men like John Foster Dulles were given such high assignments as handling the Japanese Treaty. Other Republicans held high posts in the Department of State. This befitted the Government of a nation which believes utterly in the two-party system. It vanished in the past 4 years.

We have had Democratic cooperation without any visible Democratic participation. Democratic criticism of the administration's foreign affairs has been held to a minimum. But now we are in a campaign year and it is proper that the weaknesses of the Eisenhower-Dulles record be exposed in the national interest. Our foreign relationships have degenerated. Friends have become enemies. New dictatorships are on the rise. The Communist orbit is ever widening. The 1952 promises of General Eisenhower and Mr. Dulles have become mere words. America, the alleged world leader, itself suffers from lack of achieving leadership.

The Democratic 84th Congress has acted as an invaluable check on the Republican administration. Although we have not thwarted the legitimate measures proposed by the President he has been made ever mindful that the utmost scrutiny was being maintained by the 84th Congress in the best constitutional tradition of checks and balances. In the 1954 congressional elections he predicted a "cold war" if a Democratic Congress were elected. After the Nation elected a Democratic Congress he quickly apologized for the prediction. In many instances his measures would have failed of passage but for Democratic support.

DOES THE LACK OF PROSPERITY ON THE FARM AFFECT PHILADELPHIANS?

If you are old enough to remember President Hoover's administration, you know that depressions begin with lowered farm income, spotty unemployment like we have now, and an active and fluctuating stock market. These conditions existed through Harding and Coolidge and became the Hoover depression with accompanying apple selling and breadlines. President Eisenhower can well become the Coolidge of his day. As in the Coolidge administration we hear voices saying that the old order has passed and that a new era of endless economic expansion is at hand. How remindful of the same Pollyanna phrases uttered when the Harding and Coolidge administrations set up the suffering under Hoover. Economic laws are immutable. Big business spawned the Hoover panic with "the new era talk." That same big business came, hat in hand, to F. D. R. to be bailed out.

When farmers' incomes are greatly reduced, as they have been under Eisenhower, less Philco radios and TV sets and washers and refrigerators are sold. Fewer Exide batteries are purchased. Smoke does not issue from stacks along Lehigh and Allegheny Avenues. Merchants on Frankford and Kensington and Germantown Avenues sell less and maybe go out of business. And all of this could have had its beginning on the farms of Kansas or Nebraska or California. Such is the interdependent nature of our national economy. The causes should be stopped before they ruin our national business health.

HAVE THE INVESTIGATIVE BODIES OF THE 84TH CONGRESS ACTED AS A CHECK ON THE EISENHOWER ADMINISTRATION TO THE BENEFIT OF THE NATION?

Decidedly yes. The Dixon-Yates grab was identified despite White House secrecy. An executive of the First Boston Co., due to finance the Memphis Power & Light Utility in the TVA orbit, was found to be simultaneously the Budget Bureau adviser. This "conflict of interest" was disclosed and the deal was called off when the city of Memphis decided to build its own utility. Many of us liken this attempt to the infamous Teapot Dome scandals of the Harding administration. Alert investigation by the 84th Congress killed Dixon-Yates before it got completely off the ground.

The numbers game that was played with Federal employees, alleged to be guilty of Communist affiliations, was exposed by the 84th Congress. Disclosure of the political racket of Red hunting began with the Army-McCarthy hearings. It was carried over by the Eisenhower administration to prove that many dangerous subversives were hired by the Truman administration. Various numbers of "guilty" employees were said to have been discharged from Government service. The 84th Congress revealed that some of these had resigned for various reasons, in no way associated with Communist connections. Many were just plain, ordinary alcoholics. Most were in jobs that were in no way sensitive, such as doing clerical work for the Veterans' Administration. Records were being faked to support false political premise, heard much in the 1952 elections. Reputations were being sacrificed on the altar of political expediency. The Eisenhower security program proved to be too much for his Republican appointee, former Senator Cain. He resigned rather than be a part of making a political football of our Nation's security.

No Congress in these crisis years could accomplish all it hoped for. The greatest disappointment was the failure of the school construction legislation which became ensnarled with the segregation problem. Both of these issues have had their trial run in the 84th and will be met and decided as a result of these preliminaries.

The Egyptian crisis over the Suez Canal has been developed by urging Britain to withdraw her troops. The only democracy in the vital Middle East, Israel, has been treated like a stepchild. Nasser has said that he stands ready to shed the last drop of Egyptian blood. Hitler was just as generous with German blood. These little Caesars run to a pattern. What Chamberlain was to Hitler, Dulles without an umbrella has been to Nasser. The Eisenhower-Dulles team has practiced the art of losing friends. Massive retaliation talk had scared nobody. There are about 30 depressed areas in Pennsylvania. When you hear "peace and prosperity," have your mind stray to the Suez Canal and to the many unemployed in the textile and coal industries in our State. The people out of work are our people. The Democratic Party always puts its emphasis on people.

Mr. Speaker, let me thank here and now the people I represent in the House of Representatives. They have sent me to Congress five times. Most of them realize that being a Congressman is as much a business as any other calling and that there is no substitute for experience.

In the words of the poet:

A man must serve his time at any trade save censure.
Critics all are ready made.

Report to the 15th Congressional District of Ohio on the 84th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. JOHN E. HENDERSON

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, in these final hours of the 84th Congress, I wish to review some of the legislative actions which are regarded as especially important to the people of the 15th Congressional District of Ohio and to discuss as well some of the things which I have done in pursuance of their interests in Washington.

The 15th District is composed of Guernsey, Monroe, Morgan, Muskingum, Noble, Perry, and Washington Counties. In representing the people of these counties in the Nation's Capital it is necessary to argue for or against legislative proposals which will be of benefit or harmful to them and to the Nation. It is also necessary to represent their interests in the interpretation of existing laws and regulations by the departments and agencies of the Federal Government. In this regard I have received several thousands of communications from individuals and groups seeking aid during the past 2 years. In pursuing these matters with all the vigor at my command, it has been a source of great satisfaction to me that I have been able to render assistance in many instances.

INDUSTRIALIZATION

One of the most distressing problems in southeastern Ohio has been the need to attract new industries to provide greater job opportunities and to stimulate improved economic conditions throughout the seven counties. This requires cooperative action in Washington with local groups seeking to reverse the three-decade trend whereby we have not prospered in accordance with the growth or prosperity of the rest of the country. I pledged 2 years ago to assist these groups in every possible way.

As a first step early in 1955, I requested that the Department of Labor classify all of the counties of the 15th District so that official recognition could be made of the unemployment situation there and to enable our area to take advantage of the Federal Government's program to encourage industrial development through the placement of Government contracts in such areas and the construction of defense plants in regions suffering high, chronic unemployment. Unless this official classification was made, our area could not participate in such special programs regardless of how much employment actually existed. Early in January 1955 only Perry County was accorded these privileges.

The 15th District was not regularly surveyed because none of the so-called "labor market areas" within it possessed sufficient population to meet the standards for regular classification which had been established by the Department of Labor. A special request was required.

In due course, all seven counties were found to have unemployment exceeding 6 percent of the available labor force and were accorded special privileges with relation to defense contracts. This also conferred upon the seven counties a great new advantage since companies which would construct plants that the Government deemed essential to national defense would be given special Federal tax privileges.

Under this labor classification, the Olin-Mathieson Chemical Corp. investigated the advantages of a Monroe County site and elected to locate its huge new integrated aluminum plant there. This $120 million plant marking the entry of Olin-Mathieson into the aluminum industry has immense economic implications for the entire 15th District. It will provide the basic aluminum metal which will be the source of supply for many new aluminum fabricating plants which will locate throughout our area. I have also been assured that Olin-Mathieson's present plans include a vast expansion of its facilities in Monroe County even before construction of the first plant is completed.

With a general pattern of industrial expansion developing in Cambridge, Zanesville, Marietta, and in all of the seven counties, actual and prospective employment opportunities have received a tremendous impetus.

In recognition of this fact, new labor surveys made by the Department of Labor late in 1955 resulted in the finding that unemployment in our seven counties had decreased markedly and that the region no longer suffered sufficient unemployment to justify a distressed labor area classification.

Despite these findings, I believed that some small areas in the 15th District might still deserve special consideration for advantages provided under Defense Manpower Policy 4, especially where classifications of several counties into one labor area might prove to be unrealistic. Therefore, several months ago, I began a series of conferences with the Department of Labor and the Office of Defense Mobilization pertaining to this issue. As a result of my representations, I am informed that Defense Manpower Policy 4 will be amended shortly to permit certification largely at the State level of counties not regularly classified. This will allow tax amortization privileges for new defense plants. The amendment will be of benefit to our own area as well as to others in the Nation.

I am continuing my efforts to call the attention of American industry to the advantages of locating new plants in the 15th district. At this time I am in contact with over 50 corporations in carrying out this program.

PROTECTING LOCAL INDUSTRIES

Unemployment in the 15th district has traditionally resulted from the effects of our trade policies allowing low tariffs on the products of cheap foreign labor. This is particularly true in our potteries, glass plants, coal mines, and tile manufacturing plants. I, therefore, opposed the extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Acts before the Ways and Means Committee and on the floor of the House of Representatives. Although the act was extended last year, opposition to low tariff policies is growing in the Congress.

I also opposed H. R. 5550, the bill which would have permitted the United States to join an international organization known as the Organization for Trade Cooperation. This move would have, in effect, delegated much of the control over United States tariffs to the international organization. Fortunately, the opposition to this measure, although small at first, gathered strength in the Congress, and because of this fact the bill was never brought to the floor of the House, although it received the approval of a majority of the members of the Ways and Means Committee.

I have also undertaken a survey to learn the specific effects of foreign imports on our pottery, glass, tile, and coal industries. With this information, I intend to dramatize the need for greater tariff protection for these industries.

DILLON DAM

Two years ago, I pledged to work for the resumption of construction of the Dillon Dam on the Licking River above Zanesville. This dam was intended to provide the final link in the comprehensive flood control plan for the Muskingum River Valley. After an expenditure of nearly $9 million, work on the dam has been stalled since 1950. No funds were requested from the Congress by the Corps of Engineers to continue the construction because of strong local opposition near the site of the dam. In the meantime, the flood threat to Zanesville and the Muskingum Valley persisted.

With the excellent cooperation of the people of the Muskingum Valley and of both of our Senators, we were successful this year in obtaining an appropriation of $1.5 million to resume construction. I am now informed by the Corps of Engineers that with this expression of congressional approval, it will press for funds to complete this valuable project at the earliest practicable date.

MUSKINGUM CONSERVANCY DISTRICT

This year a levy of special assessments against thousands of residents of the Muskingum Conservancy District would have been required had the Federal Government not made its final payment on the United States' debt for properties in the District acquired many years ago. No appropriation request for this purpose was contained in the Federal budget. Therefore, with Congressman FRANK T. BOW, representing Ohio's 16th District, we were able to prevail upon the Bureau of the Budget to submit a request to Congress for a supplemental appropriation of $425,000 to pay this debt to the Conservancy District this year. The appropriation was approved by the Congress and the President and the payment is now being made. Thus, a special levy on landowners in the Muskingum Conservancy District was prevented.

AIR TRANSPORTATION

The need for better airport facilities and air transportation service is vital to the increased requirements of air traffic developing in the 15th District. This year, I was able to obtain approval for the construction of two new radio navigation facilities important for safer and better air navigation in bad weather. These omni-range radio stations will be built at a cost approaching $100,000 by the Civil Aeronautics Administration of the Department of Commerce. One will be built at Newcomerstown to direct planes flying over the District. The other is to be built at the Zanesville airport to provide safer instrument landings for planes there.

Unsatisfactory routes of the commercial airline serving the Zanesville airport have been an annoyance and inconvenience to residents of the district. To assist Lake Central Airlines in its efforts to gain approval of more favorable routes from the Federal Government, I recently appeared before the Civil Aeronautics Board to urge that it approve Lake Central's application to extend its route to operate from Zanesville to Erie, Pa. It is my understanding that the Board is favorably disposed toward this application.

LOW INCOME FARMERS

Although I was anxious for the passage of soil bank legislation, the elimination of agricultural surpluses, and the other means recommended by the President for dealing with the immediate problem of low market prices for farm commodities, I strongly supported the President's program for raising the income levels for family farmers. This program was long-range in character, yet it contained much which would be of benefit to southeastern Ohio. It involves a concentrated effort, using the resources of the Department of Agriculture to help farmers in low income areas to help themselves. The program did not receive the approval of Congress until this year—and then only half-heartedly, but the Department had already undertaken those parts of it which did not require Congressional action.

I urged the selection of counties of the 15th District where experiments in the rural development program could go forward and I was pleased that Monroe County was finally selected as the only such "pilot" county in Ohio. Within the near future, I understand that another county in the district may be selected for this program.

GENERAL LEGISLATION

Our seven counties are vitally affected in some way by virtually every legislative proposal before the Congress. Therefore, I believe the record of this Congress is of keen interest to southeastern Ohio. This record seems to me to be one which can be regarded with mixed feelings. It has accomplished much which will aid and assist the people of southeastern Ohio. Other legislation has not been favorable or has been disproportionately costly.

In casting my vote on the many issues brought before the House in these 2 years, I have carefully weighed each proposal against my convictions that the Federal Government must be responsive to the needs of the people. At the same time, I believe the vitality of local and State government has waned in this country. I have opposed the further absorption by the Federal Government of the proper rights and privileges of local and State Government. I believe we can best pursue our goal of a dynamic democracy operating for the common good if a maximum number of governmental functions are carried out at the level most responsive to the will of the electorate. Where all citizens are accorded the right to vote without undesirable obstructions, the local and State levels are, by all odds, the proper and most responsive forums for the expressions of people's will.

Our Federal Government has in the past several decades swelled to colossal proportions. Too often, there has been a costly tendency in the country to look to Washington for many decisions which could be better made in each of the 48 States. This tendency has been expensive and is directly related to high Federal taxes and the astronomical national debt. The past 4 years have seen an encouraging reversal of this process which I believe is very much in the interest of all of our people. The national budget has been balanced through effective management and favorable fiscal policies without sacrificing the services our citizens receive from their Government in Washington. With this, a relatively small but notable reduction in the national debt has been made. If such balances continue, we can justify needed tax reductions which will affect all our people. On the other hand, policies which cause us to spend ourselves into even greater debt will delay the day when taxes can be safely reduced. Every dollar spent by the Federal Government must eventually come out of the pockets of our citizens into the hands of the tax collectors.

DEFENSE AND FOREIGN AID

Our largest single expenditure has been the cost of maintaining our arsenal of defense in readiness should we need to defend ourselves. In 2 years, the 84th Congress has appropriated over $66 billion for this purpose. The foreign-aid program received a total of almost $6.5 billion in these 2 years.

In the belief that the defense of the United States is the paramount consideration of our time, I supported the defense appropriations bills as they were referred to the House of Representatives. I did not support the foreign aid bills since I am convinced that this decade-long program requires redefinition to prevent the kind of free spending that has characterized it in the past. If aid is given to countries abroad by the American taxpayers, I believe we must be assured that we are investing in genuinely friendly countries who are sincerely anti-Communist, but who lack the means to defend themselves from Red encroachment. We cannot buy friendship abroad and our tax dollars are too urgently needed by our people at home to try to scatter funds over the globe to assist foreign nations in ill-defined programs of dubious or indirect value to the United States.

HIGHWAY ACT

The Federal Highway Act of 1956 was one of the outstanding bills passed in this Congress and will provide badly needed highways for our Nation over the next decade. This costly program will be paid for through added gasoline taxes on motor vehicle operators who will receive the greatest benefits from the new highway sytem. I supported this legislation.

SOCIAL SECURITY

The broadening of social security benefits this year will aid many citizens of the 15th District, particularly as it will apply to benefits for disabled persons at age 50 and to women at age 62.

VETERANS AND SERVICEMEN'S LEGISLATION

Legislation extending the World War II home loan provisions of the GI bill and the extension of medical care to dependents of servicemen were among several notable pieces of legislation enacted in this Congress. All laws relating to the service-connected disability or death compensation for servicemen, veterans, and their survivors were also simplified and codified for the first time. Legislation to provide pensions for World War I veterans and increased compensation for veterans with service-connected disabilities was enacted by the House of Representatives but was not considered by the Senate.

CIVIL RIGHTS

A similar fate overtook the civil rights legislation recommended by the President when the Senate failed to act after the passage of a bill to guarantee civil rights by the House of Representatives.

SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION

The Federal aid for school construction bill was defeated in the House. I opposed this measure because I am convinced that Ohio's need for new and better schools should be taken care of in Ohio. I believe we should not invite Federal interference in our school system. We can maintain control over our schools and obtain a 100 percent return on the money we spend for them. Under this bill, Ohio taxpayers would have paid heavily increased Federal taxes and, in return, would have received back far less than its investment in the Federal program.

We need new school buildings, but I believe we must meet this problem at home. We must pay for the schools either way, but we shall lose much if we send our money to Washington first to have it returned to us in lesser amounts and with Federal strings attached.

COMMITTEE WORK

In my work as a member of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee, a great number of measures were considered. A total of 685 bills and resolutions were referred to the committee. Over 350 were considered either in whole or in part. Ninety-six hearings were held and eight investigative reports published. Forty-four bills were favorably reported, 38 of which became law.

The committee's work, among other things, resulted in a new classification and pay system for the postal field service, the rewriting of the Civil Service Retirement Act, the readjustment and rewriting of laws relating to the pay of Federal workers, and a new postal-rate bill.

Investigations by the committee have resulted in strengthening Federal Civil Service procedures and the stricter control on eliminating obscene and objectionable literature from the mails. In cooperation with departments and agencies, the work of the Manpower Subcommittee, of which I am a member, has resulted in recommendations for better utilization of Federal employees which will lead to reductions in the Federal payroll estimated at $500 million annually.

Second-Class Citizens in Uniform

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. THOMAS J. DODD
OF CONNECTICUT
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. DODD. Mr. Speaker, I want to make my position very clear at the outset. I am heartily in favor of American partnership in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

I am in favor of this Nation entering into foreign commitments that follow logically from its undoubted position as leader of the free world.

And I certainly am in favor of dealing with our allies as free men deserve to be dealt with, honorably, candidly, and respectfully.

But I am unalterably opposed to using our vital NATO partnership, our necessary foreign commitments, and the national honor of our allies as the excuse for undercutting the constitutional rights of Americans, least of all the rights of the men we send overseas to protect the free world against Communist aggression.

That, in my view, is precisely the effect of the NATO Status of Forces Agreement.

Under the terms of this outrageous agreement, the United States permits an American serviceman stationed abroad to be tried in foreign courts, before foreign judges and juries, and under foreign rules of legal procedure for alleged crimes allegedly committed on foreign territory. And to serve his sentence, if convicted, in a foreign jail.

DENIAL OF CONSTITUTIONAL PROTECTION

The agreement does, to be sure, list certain safeguards. There is to be a prompt trial, competent legal advice, and consultation with American representatives for any American serviceman tried in a foreign court.

But these safeguards cannot truly be enforced by the United States. They guarantee nothing. They are simply promises by foreign governments.

They carry no assurance that an American serviceman accused of a crime in a foreign country will receive the full protection of the guarantees embodied in the United States Constitution and in the rules and procedures of American jurisprudence.

He may even be accused, tried, and convicted of a crime that does not so much as exist in the eyes of American law.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the very fact such so-called safeguards had to be spelled out at all, lends substance to the fear that an American serviceman cannot count on receiving full justice at the hands of foreign judges and juries.

AN IRRESPONSIBLE AND IMMORAL AGREEMENT

The Status of Forces Agreement offends against both morality and good sense.

It is immoral because it makes second-class citizens of the very men to whom we owe the greatest of obligations, the men we send abroad to defend this Nation and the entire free world against the aggressive designs of Communist imperialism.

As I said in a floor debate last year:

> Our people are entitled to the protection of the Constitution of the United States when they are abroad to defend us and our friends. When we ask them to go out of this country not of their own choice but at the command of the Government, I see no reason in the world for not making doubly sure that their constitutional rights are protected.

And this agreement also offends against good sense. It assumes that our posture in the world should be one of timidity with respect to the principles and the free institutions that have made this Nation great.

It smacks, too, of the subservience that the present administration often shows to the least whim of our allies, and of its retreat before the least hint that so-called world opinion will be offended by our bold adherence to principle. I sometimes suspect that such world opinion is simply a handy extension of the soft minds and faint hearts of the appeasers among us. I suspect that it is a "red herring" drawn across the path of moral conviction.

I must, in conscience, go on record against such immoral senselessness.

THE BACKGROUND OF THE STATUS OF FORCES AGREEMENT

The United States entered into this agreement in June 1951. It was ratified as a treaty by the other body on July 15, 1953.

I think it is especially important to note that, before ratification, the other body held but 3 half days of hearings in which a score of high administration officials appeared to testify. The other body heard but one critic of the agreement.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not mean to suggest that the other body acted irresponsibly in this matter.

But I do mean to suggest that, on the record, it neither studied nor exhaustively debated the many ramifications of this agreement; that it acted primarily on the advice of administration officials whose testimony reveals scant regard for the effect of the agreement on the constitutional rights of American servicemen; and that, to put it bluntly, it ratified a bad agreement.

We owe a great debt to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Bow], for seeing to it that the basic issues involved here were brought forcibly to the attention of the American people. On May 18, 1955, he proposed a joint resolution urging the President to seek immediate revision of the agreement or, at least, to let it lapse as scheduled, in July 1958.

The Bow resolution—House Joint Resolution 309—further expressed the sense of Congress that criminal jurisdiction over American forces abroad should never again be granted to foreign countries.

I am squarely in favor of the sense and substance of the Bow resolution.

ADMINISTRATION ARGUMENTS IN FAVOR OF THE AGREEMENT

When as a consequence of the proposal of the Bow resolution the House Committee on Foreign Affairs held extensive hearings in the summer of last year, those of us on the committee heard testimony on both sides of the question. And we heard some curious arguments, indeed, from those who supported the Status of Forces Agreement.

We heard, for example, that the agreement actually provides more protection to American servicemen abroad than they would otherwise have, that it actually guarantees their constitutional rights.

Such an argument begs more questions than it answers. What is meant by more protection, more than what? Surely not more than the Constitution itself. And surely not more than some alternate agreement which would have reserved criminal jurisdiction over American forces to American authorities.

But this agreement, we were also told, was the best we could get from our NATO partners. It was the best they would agree to. Perhaps it was the best, but only in the absence of a firm stand that this Nation will never default in its obligations to its citizens, home or abroad, civilian or military.

I wonder if our negotiators ever proposed some sensible compromise plan.

Without spelling out the details, perhaps the agreement might have provided for a review panel made up of both American and foreign judges to check over every criminal case involving American servicemen to make absolutely sure that their rights as Americans had not been abridged. We on the committee heard of no such compromise proposals.

FOREIGN COURTS VERSUS UNITED STATES COURTS-MARTIAL

We heard, moreover, the curious argument that the Status of Forces Agreement substitutes foreign courts not for United States civil courts but rather for United States courts-martial and, thus, that the rights of American servicemen are further protected by this agreement.

Does this argument mean to imply that United States courts-martial are not conducted in accordance with the Uniform Code of Military Justice, as revised by Congress in 1951?

Does it mean to imply that courts-martial are not as a consequence conducted in accordance with basic principles and practices of American justice?

With the single exception of no-jury trial, courts-martial are in fact surrounded with every normal guarantee of fair, impartial justice, and with adherence to every cherished principle of American jurisprudence.

I can go one step further: Courts-martial even involve mandatory appeals procedures, right on up to the President himself if the crime carries with it capital punishment.

Most important of all, courts-martial are American courts. Every recourse open to the American citizen is open, as well, to the servicemen who feels he has been denied justice.

How can this protection be seriously balanced against that afforded by French courts, for example, where the defendant is presumed guilty unless he can clearly prove his innocence, courts that have been described even by French critics as "aiming to convict the guilty, and not to protect the innocent"? The comparison falls apart on the most cursory analysis.

THE PRECEDENT OF INTERNATIONAL LAW

Then, too, we on the committee heard much dispute about the precedent, in this matter, of international law. There is, of course, a major school of competent international legal authorities who subscribe to the view that the flag and the Constitution go wherever our Armed Forces go and that this agreement, therefore, flies in the face of accepted legal practice.

But even assuming, Mr. Speaker, that this is not the case, even assuming for the sake of argument that the status of America's NATO army is unprecedented in international law and custom, I am convinced that the Status of Forces Agreement is still wrong in principle.

Our NATO forces are not an army of occupation, they are in Europe as the guardians of freedom. They are there not on suffrance but at the specific request of our NATO partners. They are the symbol of our determination as a Nation to help halt the forces of Soviet Communist despotism.

How, then, can we ask the members of this army of freedom to forego the guarantees of their own freedom?

THE FLIMSY PRETEXT OF RECIPROCITY

We also heard administration officials make much of the argument that the agreement is reciprocal. They insisted that the Status of Forces Agreement is of positive benefit to the United States because, under its terms, NATO forces in this country are subject to the jurisdiction of American courts.

This is an argument built of equal parts cheesecloth and begged questions.

In the first place, the numbers involved are of the order of 100 to 1—100 Americans in Europe for every 1 European soldier in the United States.

In the second place, whereas our forces are a semi-permanent military establishment, most of the Europeans in this country are here on short training missions, excluded by diplomatic immunity from the jurisdiction of American courts.

In the third place, therefore, who can be so gullible as to credit the notion that our Government entered into this agreement in order to insure its control over such visiting soldiers?

NATO is a partnership, to be sure, and a keystone of the United States defense system, but the movement of troops is almost wholly one-way, from the United States to Europe. And problems involving the status of NATO forces in foreign areas are almost wholly, from our point of view, those of the nation that sends troops abroad rather than those of the nation that welcomes them.

I want to be consistent in my position, however. If the price of retaining full control over our NATO forces and of guaranteeing them the protection of the Constitution is to waive all jurisdiction over NATO forces in this country, then that is a price I am willing to pay.

JURISDICTION IS USUALLY WAIVED ANYWAY

Finally, those of us on the committee heard the argument that foreign courts waive jurisdiction in a great majority of cases and that, for all practical purposes, the Status of Forces Agreement cannot do very much damage to the rights of American servicemen.

This is a doubly self-defeating argument. It has in it the ring of a last-gasp defense.

It implies that the privilege of trying Americans in foreign courts is so lightly regarded among the NATO countries that they usually waive their jurisdiction. Yet we are asked to believe, at the same time, that in order to station our troops overseas we had to enter into this agreement. These two arguments are flatly contradictory.

In essence, though, it makes no difference how many Americans run the risk of being denied their rights as American citizens. This is, to me, a matter of clear principle. And in matters of principle, numbers are of no consequence. Denial of rights is as indefensible in one case as it is in a thousand.

We do not, as a nation, guarantee our people their most basic rights only sometimes and at the convenience of other countries. Guaranties of impartial justice are as firm as our national honor is precious to us and should remain so, certainly not least to the men we send abroad to defend it.

These are the arguments we heard from those who defended the NATO Status of Forces Agreement before the Foreign Affairs Committee. They are weak and contradictory arguments. And they are basically immoral.

They take no account of the fact that, under this agreement, we draft our young men, send them overseas, and then fail to guarantee them either their rights as citizens, under the Constitution, or their rights as members of the Armed Forces, under the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

A SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENTS AGAINST THE AGREEMENT

Let me briefly review the arguments that have weighed heavily on my decision to oppose the Status of Forces Agreement.

Despite a specific reservation to the contrary when the other body ratified this agreement, it was used as the pattern for a like agreement with Japan before even a half year had gone by. And if the courts of France and Turkey and Greece and the other NATO countries are foreign to American law, how much more so are those of Japan.

Under this agreement, one indiscreet remark by an American boy about the government or rulers of a foreign country, and he may be hauled into court on criminal charges. This would be true in Turkey and Greece, and even in Great Britain.

It is entirely possible that an American soldier may be tried by Communist judges and juries, before a Communist-influenced public, and made the pawn in a game of calculated anti-Americanism. Such a situation could be almost an everyday occurrence in France or Italy.

No matter how many safeguards are written into the agreement, the fact remains that the courts, along with their judges, procedures, customs, and language, will all be foreign, and foreign as well to the experience of nearly all American servicemen.

Prisons in Europe and Japan often fall below the absolute minimum of American standards, and yet at this moment American soldiers are jailed there under the terms of this agreement.

Although our diplomats and Foreign Service representatives, many of them of draft age, are covered with diplomatic immunity wherever they go, this agreement puts our servicemen at the mercy of foreign systems of justice.

WHAT SHOULD WE DO ABOUT THIS AGREEMENT?

These are the reasons, Mr. Speaker, for my unalterable opposition to the principle of the NATO Status of Forces Agreement.

I say "to the principle" deliberately because I feel that however mistakenly and with whatever indefensible lack of responsibility to our servicemen abroad, this Nation has undertaken a solemn international obligation from which it cannot now withdraw.

To abrogate it now would throw into confusion the present status of our NATO forces. It would make us appear to the world both weak and vacillating. It would suggest that our word is not absolutely trustworthy and that we treat our obligations lightly.

We would only compound a bad situation by unilateral action now.

Fortunately, this agreement will be effective for but 2 more years. We must, I feel, let it run its course.

But we must also, in my view, learn the lesson of our experience.

This Nation must never again, any time in the future, enter into such an agreement as this one. I shall fight for this principle with all my heart and mind.

This Nation must never believe that it can bargain away the most fundamental of all the constitutional rights of American citizens and still maintain its world position as the bulwark of human freedom.

This Nation, when it sends its men abroad to defend this position of leadership, must send them as first-class citizens with every one of the constitutional protections that are their due. It should not do so arrogantly, but rather with justifiable pride in those institutions that have made us both free and great.

There are the issues, Mr. Speaker, that I see involved in the NATO Status of Forces Agreement. And there is my stand.

"Increase Wisconsin's Milk Checks—We Are With You, Senator, in Your Fight"

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALEXANDER WILEY

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that in the final edition of the RECORD there be published a statement by me on the subject of the Grassroots Viewpoint of Wisconsin Dairy Farmers.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICA'S DAIRYLAND PRAISES ALEX WILEY'S EFFORTS

"Dairy parity must be raised."

"The farmer must get a break from his present cost-price squeeze."

"Conditions are serious in America's dairyland."

This is the voice of rural Wisconsin.

It is what folks on the rural routes throughout the Badger State have been writing to me about.

Into my office each day come hundreds of letters. They come from individual farmers and from their wives and sons. The letters come particularly from our elderly farmers, who are thinking of retiring. Why? Well, obviously because they cannot make enough, despite all their hard work, to make it worth while to continue.

FARMER ONLY MAKES 50 CENTS AN HOUR

Do city people know what a farmer and his family actually make on the average despite all their labor and all their heavy investment? Only around 50 cents per hour. That is a terribly low return. It doesn't amount to a fourth of what city people are getting on the average for their 40-hour week (plus city folks' paid vacation, time and a half for overtime, etc.).

"MR. BENSON, GET BUSY"

So naturally, letters of deep concern from farmers continue to pour into my office.

Most of these letters say, in effect: "Senator WILEY, we know that you are deeply interested in our welfare. Well, now, we ask you to work still harder so as to get Secretary of Agriculture Benson 'on the beam' and raise dairy parity support."

That is exactly what I am trying to do.

SENATOR WILEY'S EFFORTS TO RAISE DAIRY PARITY

It is why I have always voted to raise dairy parity. It is why I have written to Mr. Benson, time after time, stating that "$3.25 for 3.5 test milk for manufacturing purposes is absolutely too low a return."

The dairyman isn't getting enough for his fluid milk. And he is getting a particularly raw deal—a particularly inadequate return—for his manufacturing milk. Remember, over 80 percent of Wisconsin milk is nonfluid milk. But nonfluid milk isn't getting even the minimum $3.25 per hundredweight support today.

That is why family-size farms are closing. It is why our farm population keeps shrinking.

COSTS GOING UP, UP, UP

What does the farmer face?

Higher and higher costs, higher prices on that part of the feed which he must buy.

Higher and higher labor costs (if he can even get labor at all).

Higher machinery costs.

Higher repair costs, gasoline costs, fertilizer costs. Higher costs on money which he must borrow—if he can get credit.

NOT ENOUGH MILK, CHEESE CONSUMED

Meanwhile his milk check isn't rising. Consumption of dairy products is not increasing sufficiently. We Americans don't drink enough milk. Our youngsters don't and our adults don't, unfortunately. And we don't eat enough cheese. We don't get enough body-building, vitamin-rich other dairy products.

This situation must be remedied. Uncle Sam has to "get on the ball" and help boost consumption of dairy products.

WILEY BATTLES FOR FARMER

I pledge my continued efforts for that end. Good publicity for dairying and for America's dairyland has been my constant aim. "Drink more milk," I've told everyone—young and old, civilian and soldier, Senators and citizens.

But more milk drinking must be accompanied by more prodairy legislation.

Throughout my service in the Senate, I personally am glad to have battled for sound farm legislation night and day—52 weeks a year, for 17½ years in the Congress. I am humbly proud of the laws I've helped to write. That includes the Wiley Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Seaway law. It will provide a great boost for the Wisconsin farmer. The Wiley seaway law is what we in Wisconsin fought for during 30 long, hard years. It is the historic law that we battled for—against the railroads and the greedy eastern monopolists who tried to deny us of the Midwest an outlet to the oceans of the world.

Now, however, the oceans have been brought to our doorstep; 25,000-ton deep-water ships, rather than 2,500-ton ships (the present limit) will carry Wisconsin farm products inexpensively to the world. And we will be able to buy more inexpensively from the rest of the world. This is all due to the Wiley seaway law which has been praised by President Eisenhower and praised by Wisconsin's press.

WILEY SOIL BANK, GAS REFUND, SCHOOL MILK, ANTI-BANG'S BILLS

Other Wiley bills, likewise, I believe, have served our farmers. That includes the Wiley bill which I introduced and cosponsored time and again for 90-percent dairy parity.

It includes Wiley cosponsorship of the soil-bank law, the Wiley cosponsored bill for refund of gasoline taxes. I am especially proud of my school milk legislation, plus Wiley-sponsored appropriations against the dreaded Bang's disease, plus the Wiley amendment against oleo misrepresentation.

These half dozen major fights have been but a few of my hundreds of efforts down through the years.

BATTLING ENEMIES—FROM MASTITIS TO DEPRESSION AND WAR

Now, additional battles must be fought. Wisconsin is fortunately Bang's-free, but we must still defeat mastitis (which costs our dairymen $50 million a year), and we must fight other enemies of dairying.

I'm glad to say that I've always been available to battle on these and other issues for every farm organization which has ever called upon me. I've battled for our REA's, our marketing co-ops, our livestock associations, our dairy-herd improvement groups, our soil-conservation districts, and others.

Yes, I've battled, too, against depression, and I've battled against war, and I've battled against bossism. Depression, war, bossism—these are enemies which Wisconsin farmers and others rightly despise.

GRASSROOTS LETTERS HAVE PRAISED WILEY EFFORTS

I am proud to say, moreover, that in my files are literally hundreds and thousands of letters from Wisconsin farmers, expressing appreciation for my fight for the Wiley seaway law, and for other Wiley bills, as well as my fight for peace, for prosperity, and for progress.

FARMERS KNOW HOW IMPORTANT A SENATOR'S EXPERIENCE IS

The farmer remembers his friends. The farmer knows what it means to have a man battle faithfully for the farmer night and day. The farmer knows how important it is to have a man of experience in the Senate.

I personally am glad to have risen to be the second highest Republican in seniority in the Senate. Let me make this clear: I am not interested in that fact from any personal standpoint. What counts is not ALEX

WILEY. What really counts is the fact that Wisconsin at last has a high-ranking Republican Senator who is fortunately in a powerful position to serve the interests of his State and Nation.

Seniority in the Senate means strength for Wisconsin. Seniority means strength and power for the individual dairy farmer.

Had I not been senior in position, had I instead been low on the long list of 96 Senators, we might never have achieved the St. Lawrence Seaway law. We would probably still be struggling for it, as we did for 30 unsuccessful years.

SERVING PUBLIC INTEREST AS WALTER GOODLAND DID

Now, if a newcomer were to try to take my position, he would have no seniority. It would probably require 20 or 30 years for him to build up as much seniority as I now fortunately have.

I repeat—it is not ALEX WILEY personally that counts; it is the fact that he is in a high-up position to serve the public interest. That is what counts. Service is my aim, just as it was the aim of Wisconsin's great Gov. Walter S. Goodland—also a man of deep, independent convictions.

RURAL WISCONSIN SPEAKS

But now, let rural Wisconsin speak for itself.

Here are messages from Wisconsin grassroots farmers, exactly as these messages came to me. These are excerpts from what they have said on behalf of higher dairy parity and in kind comments on the work of their senior Senator; I am humbly grateful for their support.

From a letter from a farmer on route 1, outside Eldorado, Wis.:

"Senator, I heard your broadcast last evening.

"I was busy milking at the time * * *. You ask five important questions (which you wanted us to help answer). Question No. 1 about keeping a stable economy ties right in with agriculture. If agriculture can be stabilized and farm income brought in balance with other segments of our economy, I think then our whole national economy would be on sound footing. So, the question as you know, is how to help agriculture. I think the soil bank is in the right direction. We must, however, reduce the price spread between producer and consumer, through co-ops and even direct subsidies."

From a farmer outside Chetek:

"I am going to vote for you this fall. I think your record in Congress is excellent. Your efforts on behalf of the seaway project, the school-milk program, and the dairy research laboratory at Madison plus other programs have been very commendable. I shall urge others to support you by pointing out your record in Congress to them. My best wishes in your forthcoming campaign."

From Hillpoint, Wis:

"Farmers just can't stand this low income and high outgo. They are at the breaking point—where they have been for months. The neighbor that joins me on the west has moved to town (closer to a big city) where he can get work. And the farm that joins us is having a sale this coming Friday. He is going to live there awhile, or until he can sell. Then he is going to do carpenter work near Madison. The wife of our neighbor on the east works in town and the wife of one of our neighbors on the north works in town. That isn't farming by any stretch of the imagination."

From a neighbor near my own dairy farm in Barron County:

"Dairying is in very bad shape, Senator, and I am sure you will do your part to help us. * * * Thank you for past favors."

From route 1, Winneconne, Wis.:

"It is time the dairyman got a decent wage, so his wife and children would not have to assist free of charge in order to produce enough for an adequate income."

From Spring Valley, Wis.:

"The farmers keep going broke in this part of the country. About one-third of the farm buildings are empty."

From a farm in Dane County:

"The Wisconsin farmer wants something done for him now. The soil bank may help in the long pull, but now is the critical time for the farmers of Wisconsin. All farmers should be treated equally. Dairy farmers are discriminated against and Wisconsin is principally a dairy State: My tenant had to quit—so now I am trying to hang on by hiring him on a salary basis, and I will take the loss."

From Merrill, Wis.:

"I have lived on this farm more than 56 years. But even the depression was not like this, even with a lot of debts."

From rural route 3, Jefferson, Wis.:

"I am confident that you have the best interests of the dairy farmer at heart."

From rural route 2, Oshkosh, Wis.:

"If something isn't done soon, the small farmer will soon fall out of the picture. Lots have already. I know you have always done your share to help us. So keep up the good work—please."

From Milton, Wis.:

"I have always regarded you as a Christian statesman eager for Wisconsin's welfare. I have kept my allegiance to you as a Senator and expect to vote for you. * * * The St. Lawrence Seaway project alone should assure your victory. It is a great thing for the Middle West. * * * Best wishes for your success."

From Rock County, Wis.:

"We have a dairy farm of 160 acres, which we own free and clear. We operate the farm ourselves, together with our 22-year old son. We are writing in regard to the dairy parity amendment in the present farm bill. It is the only portion of the bill that will give any manner of assistance to the Wisconsin dairy farmers. We are very appreciative of your efforts in our behalf."

Industrial Development in the Seventh District of Indiana

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM G. BRAY

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. BRAY. Mr. Speaker, each Member of Congress naturally desires prosperity and a sound economic condition in our country and especially in the district he represents.

In a free enterprise system such as we have in America, an individual Member of Congress or even the Government itself cannot cause business to locate or remain in any certain locality. While the Government has authority in locating defense establishments, such as Crane Naval Ammunition Depot, these establishments form only a very small part of the overall commercial activities which make prosperity in a country. An interested and an aggressive citizenry can help to provide the proper publicity and interest in a community which may attract industry to it. Certain branches of the State government, as well as both State and national officers, can assist. The citizens of the Seventh Congressional District have been showing great interest in industrial development and have been working with local service and citizens' groups in interesting new businesses in their localities. Localities within the Seventh Congressional District have become increasingly successful in attracting business to this area. Two departments of the State government have been working with these communities: the department of commerce and public relations under the Lieutenant Governor of the State and headed by Ed Beaman; and the Indiana Industrial Council, headed by John Mellett, with offices in the State library. Southern Indiana, Inc., an organization of several communities of southern Indiana, is also very active in industrial development. There have been more than a score of new businesses located in the Seventh District within the last 2 years, including those at Linton, Sullivan, Jasonville, Carlisle, Vincennes, Bicknell, Bloomington, Oaktown, Farmersburg, Princeton, Shelburn, and others. There are also groups in almost every locality working toward obtaining new industries. A few of these communities are Dugger, Franklin, Edinburg, Greenwood, Worthington, Bloomfield, Fort Branch, Oakland City, Mooresville, Martinsville, Brazil, Plainville, Washington, and many others. Much remains to be done, but we are definitely making progress. I have greatly enjoyed working with many of these groups.

A typical example as to what a community can do for industry occurred when gypsum development was begun in Martin County. Incidentally, Indiana University was helpful in the exploration and study which led to the development of this great industry. It took a united effort on the part of local people to get certain State lands made available for gypsum mining. I have never seen finer community effort and spirit than was shown in the effective activities of the people of Martin County in obtaining this most useful industry. Another community enterprise which is of untold benefit was the united effort of the people of Vincennes in obtaining Federal legislation for the Vincennes seawall. It was very gratifying to me to have an opportunity to work with the citizens of these communities in these very worthwhile projects. Space prevents my discussing other similar projects in the Seventh District.

Southern Indiana, especially the coal-mining area, suffered a severe drop in industrial activity during the last two decades as people began to shift from coal to gas and fuel oil for heating their homes. Thousands were thrown out of work and there has been genuine hardship in the area. Today, however, the industrial outlook for southern Indiana is very bright. The demand for electric power in the United States is increasing at a tremendous rate. Hydroelectric power from the large rivers in the Midwest has been developed to the limit; from now on we will be dependent on coal for our industrial power. Coal production in the United States has gone up 20 percent in the last year and will continue to increase. This will help the Seventh Congressional District in two ways: mining will come back with increasing importance, and new industries will locate where they can get ample and cheap power. That area will be near the great coalfields of Indiana. Coal is found in substantial quantities in 7 of the 11 counties of the district, enough coal to meet Indiana's power needs for a thousand years, and that favorable condition will benefit the entire Seventh District.

There are four great attributes that encourage industry to move to any locality: an available supply of capable labor; power and the facilities for increasing that power as needed; ample water supply and adequate transportation facilities. The Seventh Congressional District possesses all of these to a high degree. There is a strong possibility that a large chemical plant will locate in the area in the near future.

No area in the country has a better supply of workers than does the Seventh Congressional District. This is clearly shown by comparison of the labor force at Crane Ammunition Depot with that of Government installations in other parts of our country. I have investigated this matter and find that there is less absenteeism, less attrition, and a higher degree of productivity at Crane than at any similar installation in the country. This same area has an ample water supply and a glance at the map shows that no area has better railroad and highway transportation facilities.

A Congressman cannot send industry to any locality but he can work with the people in that community toward attracting it. I have met with the people of many communities in the Seventh District to assist in industrial development. Southern Indiana is definitely advancing, and I am always happy to lend every support I can to this advance.

Legislative Achievements of Congressman Patterson Praised by President Eisenhower, Vice President Nixon, Cabinet Members, and Others

---

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. JAMES T. PATTERSON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I was pleasantly surprised and deeply appreciative when President Eisenhower singled me out for special mention in connection with my modest legislative contributions to our national defense program. And I am also grateful to Vice President NIXON and Secretary of the Army Brucker for their commendation of my efforts in behalf of the Eisenhower national security program.

I wish to take this occasion to also thank Secretary of Labor Mitchell for his words of appreciation for my support of "legislation which benefits our working men and women and thereby our whole economy," and to Secretary of Agriculture Benson for what he described as "your consistent support of the Eisenhower administration's farm program"; and the kind words of Chairman Strauss of the United States Atomic Energy Commission. Furthermore, I wish to express my gratitude to House Republican Leader JOE MARTIN, Mrs. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS, ranking minority member of the House Veterans' Affairs Committee, and my many friends and constituents for their kind words of appreciation.

Following are the texts of letters mentioned:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington.

The Honorable JAMES T. PATTERSON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR JIM: Now that the Congress has adjourned I want to thank you most sincerely for the major contributions you made throughout the 84th Congress in behalf of our many programs to strengthen the Nation's defenses and to build an America stronger and better in every way. For your effective support, and especially for your leadership in respect to my proposal for an atomic-powered peace ship, I am grateful indeed. I wish you every success in your campaign this fall.

With warm regard.

Sincerely,

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER.

OFFICE OF THE VICE PRESIDENT,
Washington.

The Honorable JAMES T. PATTERSON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR JIM: As the 1956 campaign swings into action, I cannot help but recall our long association together and the steadily growing respect which you have so rightfully earned from your colleagues in both the House and the Senate.

You and I first came to Congress 10 years ago, and during that time I have come to regard you not only as one of my closest friends but, even more important, as one of the most outstanding men in the House of Representatives. Your steadfast devotion to the people you represent, your energy in protecting their rights above and beyond the boundaries of political partisanship, have created for you among your fellow colleagues a position of leadership.

It is impossible to look at the record of the past 4 years without realizing what a tower of strength you have been to the Eisenhower administration. Your great work as a member of the Armed Services Committee and the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy has helped give this Nation the greatest military power in its history and atomic legislation which will have far-reaching consequences in promoting the welfare of the American people in both the fields of defense and peace.

I am well aware of the fact that your congressional district suffered terrible devastation during the New England floods last year. But you met the challenge in a forthright manner, and it was largely through your vigorous efforts that the Federal agencies created a well-coordinated flood rehabilitation program.

I have also followed closely your work in behalf of flood control, flood insurance, and hurricane warning measures and feel that your contribution in these areas of legislation has been outstanding.

The continuance of the successful policies of the Eisenhower administration depends on the election of a Republican Congress in which the experience of men like you is a vital necessity.

With best personal wishes for another great Republican victory in November.

Sincerely,

DICK NIXON,
Richard Nixon.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington.

The Honorable JAMES T. PATTERSON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN PATTERSON: As a member of President Eisenhower's Cabinet, I want to express my appreciation to you for the position you have taken in support of legislation which benefits our working men and women and thereby our whole economy.

I particularly recall your support in the 84th Congress of the administration's proposal to increase the minimum wage and your support of President Eisenhower's 1954 proposals to amend the social security law, as well as your sponsorship last year of the District of Columbia wage collection bill which was enacted into law on August 3, 1956.

It has been a privilege to work with you in securing the labor surveys you have requested in your district's interest, and I am gratified that you believe that these surveys have paved the way for the people of your district, through their industries, to benefit from special provisions of the Government's contracting laws.

I am happy to learn that you have been renominated as the Republican congressional candidate for Connecticut's Fifth District and I wish you every success in the campaign.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES P. MITCHELL,
Secretary of Labor.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington.

Hon. JAMES T. PATTERSON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN PATTERSON: Now that the 84th Congress is drawing to a close, I wish to take this opportunity to thank you for your consistent support of the Eisenhower administration's farm program. Had it not been for the cooperation of Members of Congress like you we would never have been able to enact the Soil Bank Act of 1956.

I well recall your personal visit with me last fall after floods had ravaged many of the farms in your district. Furthermore I am sure you are aware of the fact that most of the recommendations contained in your September 28, 1955, letter to me were substantially carried out by the Department of Agriculture.

The farmers of the Fifth District of Connecticut must indeed be appreciative of your continued efforts in their behalf. I am happy to learn that you have been renominated and wish you every success in the forthcoming campaign.

Sincerely yours,

EZRA TAFT BENSON,
Secretary of Agriculture.

DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY,
Washington.

Hon. J. T. PATTERSON,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. PATTERSON: As the work of the 84th Congress is about to come to a close, I would like to express on behalf of the United States Army, my appreciation for your many courtesies and for your cooperation.

As a member of the Armed Services Committee and the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, you have accorded the Army a fair hearing and an unbiased audience on all occasions and your efforts to provide for our needs are sincerely appreciated.

On my own behalf, let me congratulate you on the dedicated and valuable service that you are rendering as a Member of the Congress.

With warm personal regards and best wishes,

Sincerely,

WILBER M. BRUCKER,
Secretary of the Army.

UNITED STATES ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C.

Hon. JAMES T. PATTERSON,
United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR JIM: With the adjournment of Congress for this session, I shall probably not be seeing you for some months. I write this, therefore, to tell you how much I appreciate the encouragement and help you have given to the atoms-for-peace program. It means a lot to those of us who spend all our time and strength in these endeavors to have the kind of intelligent and enthusiastic support which you have provided.

As I look at my calendar, I am reminded that just about a year ago I was with the President as he flew over the New England area, including your district, to see the flood damage at first hand. Since then, you have certainly done a great job of helping your own people.

For their sakes, as well as my own, I hope you will be back in Washington in the next Congress.

Faithfully yours,

LEWIS L. STRAUSS,
Chairman.

OFFICE OF THE MINORITY LEADER,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C.

Hon. JAMES T. PATTERSON,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR JIM: I do not want you to leave for home without expressing my deep gratitude for your loyal support of the Eisenhower program and your great assistance to me. Your renomination is a tribute to the fine service you have rendered your district and the country in a trying and difficult period.

Considering the fact that we did not have a majority, our record was a remarkable one. We have made it possible for President Eisenhower to go before the country this fall with a record of achievement that has contributed much to peace and prosperity. The country is on the march upward, and you have helped to make it so.

We face a hard campaign this fall. The opposition, realizing how difficult—if not impossible—it is to defeat President Eisenhower will concentrate on the candidates for the House and Senate. They believe this is where they can defeat the Eisenhower program.

Recognizing the perils ahead, Republicans must present a united front. After the primaries there can be no differences. United we will be able to advance our program—prosperity through peace instead of war, a stable economy, a balanced budget, and progress in the American way. The people of the United States, I believe, want President Eisenhower to have a fair chance in his splendid efforts for a better America. This requires a Republican Congress. The last 2 years should have taught the American people that a Republican Congress is necessary if he is to have a chance to adequately serve America and the world.

It has been a great pleasure to serve with you. You have had a hard job, and your work has been fortunate in having the benefit of your good judgment and your courageous service.

With kindest regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

JOSEPH W. MARTIN, Jr.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C.

Hon. JAMES T. PATTERSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR JIM: Although we are all very busy in these closing hours of the 84th Congress, I want to take time out to commend you for your outstanding contributions to this Congress and to the lives of all Americans. I can think of no one whose position on all worthwhile legislation is more valuable to Connecticut and to the whole Nation.

Your wonderful efforts in behalf of all veterans, particularly those who were disabled while fighting for their country, are unsurpassed by anyone in the Nation. When I was chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, you were always the first to help. This can be proven by the fact that legislation which you sponsored was so important that it became law under your name. Only a few Representatives, of all the hundreds, have received such a tremendous honor.

I know of your great military record during World War II, and I cannot commend you too highly for your courageous fight as a member of the Armed Services Committee which has resulted in our having the strongest national defense establishment in the world. Your work on the Atomic Energy Committee has been of vital importance to our security.

I am particularly grateful for your untiring efforts to bring relief to the sections of New England which were ravaged by last year's floods and hurricanes. My people as well as yours will never forget your long, hard struggles to relieve the suffering and to enact legislation to make such disastrous results impossible in the future.

My warmest personal regards to you and your family. I know you will continue to fight for your people as well as for the entire Nation, exercising the same high standards of integrity which have won you such complete respect from all of your colleagues. You are a great American and an outstanding Congressman. We cannot do without you.

Looking forward to seeing you again when the Eighty-fifth Congress convenes in January, I am,

Cordially yours,

EDITH NOURSE ROGERS,
Member of Congress.

CONNECTICUT STATE INDUSTRIAL UNION COUNCIL,
Waterbury, Conn.

Representative JAMES T. PATTERSON,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN PATTERSON: The letter dated February 6 to Secretary of State John Foster Dulles, regarding the advisability of constructive action by our Government to relieve Middle East tensions and to carry through with our commitments to free nations, such as Israel, has come to the attention of our organization.

We feel your signing of this letter was a sound action. We hope it will contribute toward a firming up of our Government's foreign policy so that the United States may exert maximum leadership toward the objective of ameliorating the serious Middle East situation.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN J. DRISCOLL,
Secretary-Treasurer.

CONNECTICUT FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Hamden, Conn.

Hon. JAMES T. PATTERSON,
Member of Congress, Congress of the United States, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR JIM: Thank you for your note of January 24 pertaining to the union amendment to the Commissioners' transit bill.

I am sure that the members of the A. A. Street Railway and Motor Coach Employees of America throughout the country will be grateful for your position on this important bill.

My best to you.

Sincerely,

JOE ROURKE,
Joseph M. Rourke,
Secretary-Treasurer.

FIRST DIVISION, NATIONAL POSTAL TRANSPORT ASSOCIATION,
Hartford, Conn.

Hon. JAMES T. PATTERSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Please accept our sincere thanks for your recent vote in supporting S. 1, the pay raise for postal workers. Almost 4 years without an increase in wages, in the face of increasing prices and economic pressure, should come to an early end.

Thanking you again, I remain,

Sincerely yours,

ALEX FEDEROWICZ,
President, Connecticut Branch, NPTA.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF LETTER CARRIERS,
Washington, D. C.

Hon. JAMES T. PATTERSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN PATTERSON: On behalf of the more than 100,000 members of the National Association of Letter Carriers, we want to express our thanks to you for your vote in support of S. 1, as reported by the conference committee.

In our opinion, this bill is a very fair compromise. It gives to the Post Office Department the major part of the reclassification program it requested, and it gives a fair increase in pay to the postal employees.

Two positions on reclassification and pay legislation were presented to the Congress. It is our opinion that the Congress did an excellent job in working out a compromise and we want to thank you for your support in this matter.

Sincerely,

W. C. DOHERTY,
President.
JEROME J. KEATING,
Vice President.
PETER J. CAHIL,
Secretary.
R. B. KREMERS,
Assistant Secretary.

FIRST DIVISION NATIONAL POSTAL TRANSPORT ASSOCIATION,
Washington, D. C.

Hon. JAMES T. PATTERSON,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The 47th convention of the First Division, National Postal Transport Association, in regular session assembled desires to commend Congressman PATTERSON for his efforts in maintaining an efficient postal service, and for his valuable support in our efforts to protect the public interest.

Sincerely yours,

HOWARD L. HAGAR,
Secretary.

NATIONAL TAX CAMPAIGN COMMITTEE,
COUNCIL OF MOTION PICTURE ORGANIZATIONS,
New York, N. Y.

Hon. JAMES T. PATTERSON,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN PATTERSON: In behalf of the 230,000 men and women engaged in this motion picture industry, I wish to tell you how deeply we appreciate the support you gave the King bill, H. R. 9875, which has just been signed into law by the President.

By helping to pass this legislation you unquestionably saved many of this country's movie theaters from extinction and made it possible for them and all other theaters to operate with some degree of hope for the future.

We hope that conditions will soon arise making it possible for our Government to remove the Federal admission tax entirely; but until that happy day we want you to know that we are grateful for your action in reducing this tax as much as you have.

With best wishes.

Sincerely,

ROBERT G. O'DONNELL.

THE AMERICAN LEGION,
DEPARTMENT OF CONNECTICUT,
Hartford, Conn.

Hon. JAMES T. PATTERSON,
Representative from Connecticut,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE AND DEAR SIR: We of the Department of Connecticut, the American Legion, wish and desire to express our sincere thanks for the interest and support you gave in restoring the 14 acres of property at the Veterans' Administration hospital, Newington, to that facility. We are most grateful for your assistance in this matter.

We certainly hope that conditions will not arise from a similar situation at the Veterans' Administration hospital located in West Haven, Conn., for us to have to call upon you.

We understand that a portion of that facility's property has been declared surplus. In order to get the proposed surplus property on the market, a portion of adjacent property which is used by the patients for recreational purposes may be linked with the surplus property.

If such a situation does arise, we will certainly be calling upon you. Sincerely hope nothing comes of this.

Again thanking you for your assistance and consideration of the welfare of our veterans, I am,

Sincerely yours,

CHARLES L. PARKER,
Department Adjutant.

VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS
OF THE UNITED STATES,
DEPARTMENT OF CONNECTICUT,
Hartford, Conn.

Hon. JAMES T. PATTERSON,
United States Representative
from Connecticut,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PATTERSON: Permit me to express my deep appreciation and heartfelt thanks to you for your very fine expressions to the President of the United States on June 1 concerning the recommendations of the Bradley Commission.

I know that you will join with other veteran organizations in opposing this heartless and discouraging report concerning the veterans of this great Nation of ours.

We will keep in close touch with you within the next few months to ask your assistance and cooperation on important matters concerning the veterans.

Very sincerely yours,

THOMAS J. BENNETT,
Department Commander.

DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS,
DEPARTMENT OF CONNECTICUT,
Hartford, Conn.

Hon. JAMES T. PATTERSON,
Member of Congress, Fifth Connecticut
District, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR JIM: In behalf of the Disabled American Veterans of Connecticut we wish to thank you most cordially for your prompt and courteous attention to our recent communication in regards to the objectionable questionnaire which had been sent out to veterans concerning their compensation.

We are appreciative of your assurances that our wishes in the matter will be given thoughtful and favorable consideration.

Very sincerely yours,

FREDERICK J. RUNDBAKEN,
Department Commander.

VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS
OF THE UNITED STATES,
DEPARTMENT OF CONNECTICUT,
Hartford, Conn.

Hon. JAMES T. PATTERSON,
United States Representative
from Connecticut,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PATTERSON: I am writing at this time to thank you for the interest and help you have given our organization, and the other veterans' groups in the recent action which rescinded the order of disposing of the 14 acres of land at the Newington VA Hospital.

It is gratifying to know of your continued interest in the welfare of the veterans of our State.

Very truly yours,

BERNARD N. BACHAND,
Department Commander.

DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS,
NATIONAL SERVICE HEADQUARTERS,
Washington, D. C.

Hon. JAMES T. PATTERSON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PATTERSON: I want to thank you for the many favors you have extended this office in the past, and particularly for the daily copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the session just ended.

I realize that you have many demands for this useful document and hesitate to request that you keep us on your mailing list. However, if you find it possible, it will be greatly appreciated.

Trusting that you can get some well-earned rest and recreation for the balance of the summer months I am,

Very sincerely yours,

OMER W. CLARK,
Director of Legislation.

CONNECTICUT FARM BUREAU ASSOCIATION, INC.,
New Haven, Conn.

Hon. JAMES T. PATTERSON,
United States Congressman,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: During the past several weeks we have had occasion to write to you several times regarding our position on the farm bill.

It makes us very happy to learn that your vote last Tuesday clearly indicates that you have the welfare of the Connecticut farmer at heart.

Once again we thank you.

Sincerely yours,

DAVID A. CLARKE, Secretary.

THE NEW ENGLAND COUNCIL FOR ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT,
Boston, Mass.

Hon. JAMES T. PATTERSON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN PATTERSON: As a gallery observer yesterday I hasten to congratulate you upon the magnificent way in which the flood-control survey amendment was handled.

May I say how pleasing it is to witness such a demonstration of New England congressional unity on a New England issue.

Thank you on behalf of our 3,300 members.

Sincerely,

WALTER RALEIGH.

CITY OF TORRINGTON,
Torrington, Conn., April 30, 1956.

Hon. JAMES T. PATTERSON,
Member of Congress,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR JIM: I acknowledge receipt of your letter dated April 27, 1956, in which you very kindly enclosed copies of correspondence with the United States Weather Bureau, concerning a flash-flood warning system for the Fifth Congressional District of Connecticut.

The interim report is very interesting and I know when this system is in operation it will be of great value to the Naugatuck River Valley and Connecticut in general.

We, in Torrington, appreciate everything that you have done and are doing to help us in getting back to normal and to be in a position to better control high waters when they come in the future.

With best personal wishes, I am

Sincerely yours,

BILL,
William T. Carroll,
Mayor.

THE AMERICAN BRASS CO.,
Washington, D. C.

The Honorable JAMES T. PATTERSON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR JIM: I wish to acknowledge and thank you for your letter of April 27 attaching a copy of letter dated April 20 from Brig. Gen. Robert J. Fleming, Jr., New England Division Engineer, Army Corps of Engineers, and a copy of letter dated April 26 from Mr. D. M. Little, Assistant Chief of the United States Weather Bureau.

You are to be complimented for your painstaking and ceaseless effort to obtain adequate flood protection in the Naugatuck Valley and I am deeply grateful for your thoughtfulness in keeping me advised of developments.

With very best personal regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

ELMER LANG,
Vice President.

CONNECTICUT PACKAGE STORES ASSOCIATION, INC.,
New Haven, Conn.

The Honorable JAMES T. PATTERSON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: It is my wish to express my appreciation for the stand you took in our behalf against H. R. 4697.

Your realization and understanding of the necessity of supporting small business is gratifying to both our association and myself.

Therefore your definite position against this measure is one that I think is important.

Respectfully,

NATHAN M. KASOWITZ,
President.

CARPET INSTITUTE, INC.,
New York, N. Y.

Hon JAMES T. PATTERSON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. PATTERSON: I want you to know that the carpet industry is highly appreciative of the support you gave Congressman HARRISON'S carpet wool bill when it was voted upon in the House on Monday, July 23.

While the necessary two-thirds vote was missed by a very narrow margin, the results of the vote were highly gratifying to our industry. To us it is a good indication that we will have an excellent chance in the next session of Congress to get the much-needed relief this bill will give the industry.

We are hopeful that we will have your continued support on this matter.

Sincerely yours,

PAUL M. JONES,
President.

THE ALDON SPINNING MILLS CORP.,
Talcottville, Conn.

Hon JAMES T. PATTERSON,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. PATTERSON: One of the members of our organization has written you commending the position you have taken on H. R. 5550. I wish to add my applause for the down-to-earth, courageous position you have taken against H. R. 5550. It seems unlikely that any straightforward-thinking Congressman can circumvent the logic expressed by you, and the effect H. R. 5550 would have on the Nation as a whole.

My hearty congratulations, and keep up the good work.

Very truly yours,
THE ALDON SPINNING MILLS CORP.,
ALFRED W. CAVEDON.

COUNCIL OF MECHANICAL SPECIALTY CONTRACTING INDUSTRIES, INC.

Hon. JAMES T. PATTERSON,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: The Council of Mechanical Specialty Contracting Industries, a nonprofit organization with subscribing members from all branches of the mechanical specialty contracting industry, in the interest of the 87,000 independent small-business men in this field appreciates your support and vote for the Federal construction contract bill, S. 1644.

All of our member companies are aware of your help.

With every good wish,
Sincerely,

GEORGE B. ROSCOE,
Executive Secretary.

Development and Conservation of Our Water

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. OVERTON BROOKS

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. BROOKS of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, water is something we take for granted if we have just the right amount of it. It is also something we view with concern when we have either too much or too little.

Americans are beginning to appreciate what it means to control our water resources. We are aroused by floods that sweep through the valleys of New England, or California, or the Mississippi Delta. We have sympathy when droughts sweep through the Midwest and Southwest creating duststorms and destroying crops. We don't want our basements flooded and our plants swept away or our homes swept away with loss of life. Nor do we want to sprinkle our lawns and gardens and crops on rationed water.

The National Rivers and Harbors Congress has existed for 43 years. I have been its president the last 2 years. Since its organization in Baltimore in 1901, it has been concerned with water control in the form of floods and in the use of water for traffic on rivers and seas.

In addition to this interest, the Rivers and Harbors Congress has kept abreast of new developments in water use and control.

After its May 11–12 convention, in Washington, the Rivers and Harbors Congress sought a comprehensive report on the water problems of the Nation. A questionnaire was sent to all the Federal agencies that are concerned with the matter. It is encouraging that the Federal Government is studying water control and water use from so many directions. Our questionnaire went out to 40 agencies. The replies constitute must reading for those of us who have long been concerned with these matters.

The departmental replies are not yet fully completed. But, already they constitute a textbook that gives us a wide comprehension of the activities of our Government in the field of water control, usage and improvement.

These are the questions that the Rivers and Harbors Congress posed in the questionnaire. Time will not permit all the replies to these specific questions, but I hope to give you some of the highlights. The questionnaire asked replies—where applicable—to the following:

First. Possible control of hurricanes, and techniques being used in reporting hurricanes.

Second. Artificial rainmaking through seeding of clouds and other methods.

Third. Conversion of salt water into fresh water.

Fourth. New weather-reporting devices such as the unmanned weather reporting stations now being anchored in midocean; and weather-recording balloons.

Fifth. The effect of fallout upon reservoirs and lakes which supply our cities with water.

Sixth. The prospect that atomic power may replace water power and steam power as a major source of energy.

Seventh. The possibility that atomic power may make our maritime fleet obsolete.

Eighth. The decline in the ground water level in most parts of the country.

Ninth. The problem of obtaining sufficient amounts of water for industrial purposes.

Tenth. Methods to reuse industrial water.

Eleventh. Stream pollution: What can be done to clean up our rivers and streams?

Twelfth. Tornadoes: Can they be predicted? Can they be controlled?

Thirteenth. Without breaching military secrecy, of course, what can be said about weather observations in the Arctic and Antarctic insofar as it affects weather in the United States?

Fourteenth. What are your views with regard to control of duststorms? Are we on the verge of another cycle of duststorms? How can we control them?

Fifteenth. What are your views about disaster insurance—flood, hurricane, tornado, dust-storms, atomic fallout, and so forth?

Sixteenth. Has your agency made any study of the effect of fallout on the fishing industry in such areas as the Chesapeake Bay, the Gulf of Mexico shrimp, the tuna off the Pacific coast, and so forth?

Seventeenth. Has your agency studied the effect of stream pollution on the fishing industry in various areas?

Eighteenth. Has your agency studied the effect of pollution fallout with regard to wildlife? For instance, have you studied the results that might occur if military firing ranges were established close to bird refuges or fishing grounds?

Now that the hurricane season has started, it is encouraging to know that this year, the Weather Bureau Advisory Committee on Weather Control has launched an exhaustive hurricane research program. Back in 1947, a tropical hurricane was seeded with dry ice from an aircraft, but the results were negative.

Subsequent observations of cumulus clouds were made for warning purposes, but without seeding. The Rivers and Harbors Congress was informed that seeding devices are being used in the present program while these destructive storms are in their formative stages.

Under a 1955 act of Congress, the United States Army engineers were charged with methods of "preventing loss of human lives and damage to property with due consideration of the economics of proposed breakwaters, seawalls, dikes, dams, and other structures, warning services, or other measures."

It is certain that the Weather Bureau and the armed services have greatly improved their hurricane warning systems. Warning itself is most important, for to be forewarned is to be prepared against loss of life and possessions.

Various agencies were asked about weather reporting in general, including not only hurricanes, but also tornadoes, droughts, and hailstorms. Their interest in this matter ranged from the Arctic to the Antarctic. What happens in these distant regions, especially in the Arctic, affects our weather, it was pointed out.

Of course, one of the most intriguing activities of man has been control of the rains and the weather. In answer to the questionnaire, the Weather Bureau's Advisory Committee made these interesting comments about artificial rainmaking:

Seeding individual clouds and storm systems with ground-based silver iodide generators. At times these operations may be supplemented by aircraft seeding with silver iodide or dry ice. Ground-based generators are used extensively in the United States and to some extent in many foreign countries.

Aircraft seeding of individual clouds and storm systems with dry ice or silver iodide dispensed from the aircraft. The Australians have reported increases amounting to 30 percent in precipitation over the mountains southwest of Sidney, but the operations have not been under way long enough to give statistically significant results. Because of the rugged terrain, the Australians have indicated that the use of aircraft is the most economical method of seeding in this area. The United States and other countries use aircraft for supplementary seeding only due to the high cost of operating aircraft.

The seeding of individual cumulus clouds, so-called warm cumulus in the subtropics, with water dispensed from an aircraft. Rainfall has been initiated by this method, but operations have not been extensive enough to determine whether this method is economically feasible. This research has been carried on quite extensively by the Department of the Air Force.

In Pakistan, cloud seeding has been carried out, using powdered salt to increase precipitation. Results to date appear to be inconclusive. The Japanese have reported using aluminum oxide occasionally with a fair degree of success. Quite recently Switzerland has reported a new nucleating agent, cupric sulfide. This powdered chemical is blown into the air and preliminary results indicate that it may have many superior advantages over silver iodide or any other nucleating agent.

Suppression of lightning and hailstorms. At present, extensive research is being conducted into the possibility of inhibiting lightning fires in the western forests and reducing the frequency of or eliminating destructive hailstorms. It is reasoned by some scientists that if lightning and hail-producing storms can be seeded with silver iodide or dry ice in the early stages of development, the storms will rain themselves out before reaching lightning or hail proportions. At the present time, Project Skyfire, now being conducted by the United States Forestry Service, is searching out breeding areas for cumulus clouds which produce lightning fires in the national forests and just recently experimental seeding operations have been conducted at San Francisco Peaks near Flagstaff, in Arizona, to develop techniques for seeding potential lightning-producing thunderstorms. More than 85 percent of the recent forest fires in Arizona and New Mexico have been caused by lightning strikes according to reports from the Forestry Service.

Hail suppression experiments are under way in several areas in the United States. Scottsbluff, Nebr., has an extensive program under way to prevent hail damage to sugar-beet crops. Condon, Oreg., has similar experiments to prevent damage to wheatfields and, recently, similar cloud-seeding experiments were started in the Hudson River Valley to prevent damage to the apple crop. A similar experiment is being conducted in Washington State where very extensive apple crops are grown.

These latter cloud-seeding experiments are being conducted for additional information which may result in more efficient methods of increasing precipitation.

The Tennessee Valley Authority reported that the President's Advisory Committee on Weather Control is considering an experimental rainmaking project on a selected watershed in the Tennessee River area. However, the TVA and other agencies point out that "serious legal questions" may arise where there is any change in precipitation brought about by artificial means.

The Interior Department's Bureau of Land Management reported that artificial rainmaking had been tried extensively over the public lands in the West. The Bureau commented:

The development of successful techniques in this field would be of tremendous benefit to the livestock industry in the Western States and to the local and regional economies dependent thereon.

From responses to our questionnaire, it would appear that more study should be given to the effect of fallout in the event of a nuclear attack. Interior's Bureau of Land Management said this was a matter of immediate concern to them. The acting head of the Bureau, Mr. Falch, said this:

The contamination of stock waters in the range country by atomic fallout could cause wholesale destruction of range livestock. I recognize also the serious effect such fallout would have on headwater sources of water supplying downstream domestic and irrigation needs of population centers.

The question of flood and disaster insurance was one that was discussed at our Rivers and Harbors Convention and also on the floors of Congress this year. In its resolutions last May, the Rivers and Harbors Congress took the position that Federal insurance was no substitute for flood protective works. In response to our questionnaire, the Department of the Army made this comment:

Insurance against flood losses would be beneficial in spreading the impact of specific flood events among a larger number of persons than those directly damaged. But insurance would not reduce the aggregate physical and economic loss nor would it ameliorate the distress and suffering and great indirect losses inflicted by catastrophic floods. Such insurance would not, therefore, provide a substitute for protective works. To be most effective flood insurance should be used to supplement protective works in situations where for any reason, physical or economic, such works are not feasible or cannot be provided immediately.

Flood insurance has not proved feasible on a commercial basis. Before a Government-sponsored program of flood insurance can be established, difficult technical problems in determination of flood frequencies, risks to individual properties, rate determination, etc., will have to be resolved. Thus, an exploratory experimental period appears desirable.

It should be anticipated that the availability of flood insurance, particularly on a subsidized basis, will encourage greater use of flood-plain property. But, as pointed out above, insurance will not reduce flood losses. Therefore, in order to avoid uneconomic flood-plain development and increased expenditures for protective works, the availability of flood insurance should be made conditional upon appropriate regulation of flood-plain development and use.

On the matter of conversion of salt water into fresh water, the Congress authorized a saline water conversion program in 1952. Here is the latest progress report from that agency, which is set up within the Interior Department:

The problem of saline water conversion is essentially a matter of reducing the cost of the water produced, whether accomplished by new processes or by improvement of existing processes. Technically, feasible methods of producing fresh water from either sea water or brackish inland waters have been known for many years, and are practiced on a large scale in various arid regions, but the cost of the water produced is far too high for general use.

The research under the program to date indicates gradual progress toward lower-cost production. Estimates of the probable cost of large-scale conversion of sea water show that it is approaching the maximum existing costs of municipal water in the United States and is considerably below the maximum being paid for industrial water, although still several times higher than that of currently used irrigation supplies. At the same time, economical improvement of brackish waters for many irrigation uses, which is inherently less expensive than conversion of sea water, is definitely in sight.

In view of the scope of the subject of water resource activities on the part of Federal agencies, I can cover but one more point, and that is:

The prospect that atomic power may replace waterpower and steam power as a major source of energy.

The Federal Power Commission, the Army engineers, the Tennessee Valley Power Administration generally agreed. They agreed that nuclear power would supplement rather than displace steam power and waterpower. The consensus was that atomic power would not become competitive before 1965.

The subject is so important, as we plan ahead for the best possible use of our water resources, that I quote the answers to our questionnaire:

The Federal Power Commission:

The staff of the Commission has from time to time studied the place of atomic power in the overall picture of power supply throughout the United States. Present indications of the staff are that atomic power will augment and become a large part of the future power supply, but waterpower and steam-electric power will continue to be important segments of the total.

The Tennessee Valley Authority:

TVA believes that ultimately nuclear powerplants will be more economical than coal-burning plants, and that, once their superiority has been clearly demonstrated, new installations will be nuclear. It is felt that nuclear plants are not likely to be competitive with coal-burning plants in this area much earlier than 1965, and that perhaps several additional years will elapse before nuclear power will represent a substantial portion of the total generating capacity.

TVA does not believe that the useful life of existing steam plants will be affected by the advent of nuclear power. It seems likely that nuclear plants will be most advantageously operated at high-load factor and that existing steam plants will be used for peaking. Thus nuclear plants are not expected to replace steam plants, but rather to supplement them; even this effect will not be substantial during the next decade. Since hydroplants have very low out-of-pocket operating costs, it is not expected that existing hydroplants will be replaced by nuclear plants.

The Department of the Army, United States Army engineers:

Atomic power should not be viewed as replacing water or steam power but rather as a new energy source arriving at a time when overall power shortages are predicted within the foreseeable future. Undoubtedly, atomic power will play an increasingly important role in meeting our future national requirements. However, it may be expected to complement instead of replace waterpower and steam power in meeting these pyramiding demands.

The Bonneville Dam Authority, Department of the Interior:

If all major hydropotential in the Pacific Northwest is developed as needed, it will supply the estimated energy requirements to about 1975. Due to economic feasibility and conflict of interests, such as migratory fish, navigation and irrigation, some of the hydropotential may never be developed, and some sites may be delayed for many years. If the projects now considered to be economically competitive are all developed when required, they will supply the estimated needs of the region to between 1970 and 1975. A certain amount of thermal firming capacity is desirable and should be in operation before that time.

Since the Pacific Northwest does not have large reserves of oil or gas, and the coal reserves are of relatively low quality, fuel cost for conventional thermal electric generating plants will be high, probably not less than 30 to 40 cents per million B. T. U. even in large quantities. We are convinced that the cost of producing electric energy through the use of nuclear fission will gradually come down, while the cost of hydroenergy will continue to increase after the low-cost sites have been developed. It appears at present that incremental hydro costs may reach the conventional-thermal level in this area in 15 to 20 years. By that time, several generations of power reactors will have been constructed and nuclear power should be competitive. Thus it appears that nuclear power is destined to supplement rather than replace both hydro and conventional thermal power resources.

These are but a few answers to our questionnaire and more will be reported as further replies are received. We are trying to make a composite picture of the water situation in the Nation.

We are encouraged by the amount of activity in the field of water use and control. We urge even greater activity in the future. Our water resources must be used and controlled to the extent of human wisdom and human capacity.

Reflection Is Good for the Political Soul

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ABRAHAM J. MULTER
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, 4 years ago a giant hoax was perpetrated on the American people. They were promised a new approach to government, one that truly was to represent them. In 1952, they were promised a world of peace and prosperity, lower taxes, higher wages, lower prices, and a balanced budget. The best business heads in America were to run our Government.

Two years went by, and the disillusioned American people went back to their own party, the Democratic Party, by electing a Democratic Congress. The administration moaned and warned of a partisan cold war, of a stalemate within the Government. President Eisenhower cried loudest. Let us now review what happened.

Whatever good there was in the President's program had more support in every instance from the Democratic Party than from his own Republican Party. The President, himself, presently admits that the Democratic Congress produced a substantial amount of worthwhile legislation.

In 1952 the American people were fooled into believing in a program that its authors themselves did not believe in. We hope in this election year they will not fall prey to the hoax that the elephant will again try to foist upon them.

Evaluation of the past will help us to spot the election year myths when they are presented by Republican campaigners.

THE ADMINISTRATION—ABSENTEE MANAGEMENT; WHO'S MINDING THE STORE?

We were promised a President who would be a guiding knight, an active and strong manager, a leader of our country, an expert in military affairs, and a friend of our foreign allies.

Instead we have an ailing gentleman, who had no experience in government, and who has shown no interest or desire to learn about his tasks. On several occasions he has told his press conferences about seeking the enactment of bills he had already signed into law. This disinterest or lack of knowledge cannot be attributed to ill health. Eisenhower's pleasing personality and past military achievements are no substitute for political leadership. There can be no justification for his delegating the authority and responsibility vested by our Constitution solely in the President.

The business managers of our Nation, such as Secretary Wilson and Secretary Humphrey, may be fine in business, but they have proved they do not belong in government. The promotion of the national well-being for the benefit of the many rather than the few is foreign to their philosophy.

It is not true that what is good for General Motors is good for the country. Profits of an automobile industry are not equivalent to the welfare of a people.

Our health program should not be measured with an eye to a balanced budget. Nor has Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey earned the right to act as an adviser to our Armed Forces. Defense and national security must not be impaired by a desire for a balanced budget.

THE CONSUMER, LABOR, AND THE FARMER—THE TIGHT SQUEEZE

The one problem common to the farmer, to labor, and to all of us, is that of the consumer.

Candidate Eisenhower promised us a lower cost of living. President Eisenhower will surely disclaim responsibility for a higher cost of living.

Consumers prices are at a record high. The National Consumer Price Index rose for the fourth successive time in a year. It has reached the highest peak in 5 years. Next month another rise is expected.

The Democratic farm program is based on the knowledge that general prosperity cannot be maintained while we continue to depress the farmer. President Eisenhower vetoed our Democratic farm price support bill and then quickly raised price supports himself. Apparently his sliding scale had slid too far, for farm income is down 30 percent in the past year.

Milk prices to the consumer have continued to rise. Secretary Benson decided to raise dairy prices just when manufacturers had warehouses filled with cheese and butter bought at the lower price level. The farmer who sold his milk at the lower price then had to buy it back as high priced butter. This apparently is the Republican idea of how to aid the dairy farmer. No wonder so many of these farm families spread oleo on their bread.

Milk prices no not worry Secretary Benson who finds that the little farmer is of no importance. Benson is more concerned with the three members of his Advisory Board whose firms have been indicted for monopolistic practices. Mr. Benson is apparently fully occupied in directing the administration's ever-changing farm policy. He first opposed and then supported a soil bank; he first opposed and then approved the plowing under of crops; first opposed and then approved the idea of farm policy as a political issue.

The present administration makes many boasts as to the increase in the size of the labor force. This increase is largely a result of our ever-increasing population. Of far greater significance is the fact that at least 2,900,000 people who want jobs cannot find them. In the past year one million persons have been added to our unemployed rolls. That represents a total of nearly 10 million American men, women and children who have lost their means of support. The billion dollar year that General Motors has just concluded does not help these people.

The Democratic Party sponsored a bill to help our unemployed learn new skills when their previous trades no longer offer employment. Retraining these people will help to relieve all of us of the burden of support. This is the type of constructive, positive legislation which brought our country to the prosperous state which it enjoyed to 1953 when Republican businessmen began to tear it down.

Candidate Eisenhower pledged himself to the amendment of the Taft-Hartley Act. President Eisenhower has consistently refused to live up to his campaign promises. Former Secretary of Labor Durkin offered the President 19 amendments, which were in accord with Candidate Eisenhower's promises. Eisenhower refused to go along with any of them. Instead he submitted to Congress a program which would toughen the Taft-Hartley Act. His Labor Secretary resigned and was replaced with another big-business man. Congress refused to go along with President Eisenhower's labor program as presented.

In an attempt to meet the increased cost of living, Congress has raised the minimum wage to $1 per hour over President Eisenhower's protest that 90 cents was adequate.

The Republican Party as represented by President Eisenhower may be a party of the people—but of and for a very few people.

BAD GOVERNMENT

During his 1952 campaign Candidate Eisenhower had much to say about corruption in Government and useless personnel in the Government.

We said then and repeat now: no political party has a monopoly on virtue or efficiency. Every party when trusted with the privilege to govern must be ever alert to weed out the loafers, the incompetent, and the criminal.

President Eisenhower has sadly failed the people in that regard.

The executive departments, in almost every instance, are employing more people and more top executives at higher salaries than in any previous administration. The exceptions are in the so-called service departments.

The Post Office Department serving all of the American people is using fewer employees and giving the worst service we have ever experienced.

The Veterans' Administration, serving our veterans and particularly our disabled veterans, has been reduced in force, moved around, kicked around and made a less useful agency to those who need it most.

The Agriculture Department has been reorganized to take out of the hands of the farmers most of the things they can do best for themselves.

Misappropriating funds is the order of the day for this administration. This administration has appointed more corrupt officials than any other in our history.

Starting with Secretary Benson using Department funds to refurbish a government lodge for his personal use, we find corruption rampant in every department.

Warehouses bursting at the seams, because improperly constructed; selling millions of dollars worth of cheese to the processors and buying them back at higher prices, without the cheese ever leaving storage or changing hands; indictment of three members of Secretary Benson's Advisory Board; self-dealing for his private profit of one of his paid subordinates; loading the school lunch program with more than $400,000 worth of phony transportation charges in Illinois for the sole benefit of one of his Republican friends. There are no doubt many more such incidents which have not yet been exposed. We are just beginning to investigate the monopoly enjoyed by three companies in disposing of surplus commodities.

Under 20 years of Democratic administration the Commodity Credit Corporation never exceeded an authorization of $6¾ billion. The total loss in those 20 years from operation of the program was about $1 billion. During 3½ years, the Republicans have increased that authorization to $14 billion. The losses have increased by at least $4 billion. No small part is attributable to the increased interest rates paid to bankers and much of it paid in violation of law.

Dixon-Yates was bad, so bad that even the Republican administration has backed down on its spurious claim of legality.

The cancellation of a Defense Department contract awarded to the Chrysler Corp. and awarding the same business to General Motors is only a small part of the wrongdoing in that Department.

The foot-in-mouth statements of Secretary Wilson are least important of the many things that are bad in this administration.

The Small Business Committees of the Congress have devoted some part of almost every day to urging the Defense Department to follow the law and its own regulations in awarding contracts and making payments earned thereunder.

The Office of the Comptroller of the Currency and that of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation have also been managed in a manner adverse to the public interest.

The big banks and big holding companies have grown bigger with the aid and abetment of the Republican appointees to those agencies.

The responsibility for the Illinois bank scandal, the theft of State funds through bank manipulations, must be borne at least in part by those same Republican Federal appointees.

Internal mismanagement by those officials of their offices, I hope, will soon be the subject of thorough investigation.

Under the leadership of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency attempts are being made to weaken our banking laws for the benefit of the big banks and to the detriment of the small banks and small investors. A part of that scheme was the abortive attempt to destroy the right of minority stockholders to minority representation on the directorates of national banks.

The full story about the giveaways by the Interior Department, the attempt to destroy TVA, REA, and our other public facilities and natural resources requires much more time than I can give here.

SMALL BUSINESS

Since 1953 our Government has been taken over by big business and the big banking interests of the country. The little fellow has had no representative in the Cabinet or at the top of any executive department. On the contrary, he has had as antagonist big business and the big banks, not only in the market place but also in every department of the Government.

What is even worse, the so-called WOC—the big-business man on loan to the Government, drawing no compensation from the Government, but being paid by his big-business employer—has an inside track keeping big business constantly informed as to Government plans and channeling Government business away from the small-business man and to big business.

Credit restrictions are manipulated so as to dry up all sources of credit for the small-business man.

Except in times of war or emergency, WOC's should not be employed by the Government.

I have contended and will continue to urge that the Small Business Administration Act must be strengthened by eliminating the Policy Board now dominated by Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey and Secretary of Commerce Weeks. The agency must be made not only permanent, but permanently independent of the Treasury Department and the Department of Commerce.

The small-business man, displaced by slum clearance and highway construction, should be entitled to low interest rate loans based upon character and ability to perform, rather than bankable collateral.

The Defense Department must be directed by the Small Business Administration to discard, as required by law, the old arbitrary, numerical definition of a small-business firm, and follow a more realistic one. This will give small business a larger and more equitable share of Government contracts.

The Small Business Administration may boast that during 3 years it has approved 3,560 business loans in an aggregate amount of $137,915,000 on account of which it disbursed $52,578,000. Compare that, however, to what this administration has done for big business in the same period through the Export-Import Bank alone, to wit: 805 loans for a total authorized aggregate amount of almost $7,500,000,000 against which it disbursed over $5,171,000,000. The Export-Import Bank made 22 percent as many loans with an average disbursement of over 426 times more per loan. To put it more simply, SBA's loan disbursements averaged less than $15,000 each and the bank's more than $6,400,000 each.

While big business has made more and bigger profits than at any time in the history of our country, small business has been going into bankruptcy in greater numbers than at any time since the depression days of the early 1930's.

For years, I have led the fight to establish offices of the Small Business Administration in Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico so to enable American citizens residing so far from the mainland to avail themselves of the privileges accorded by law to all. I personally urged the Appropriations Committee to give the agency the money for that purpose. The money was voted. I am still waiting to be informed that even one of those offices has been opened.

GIVEAWAYS: THE GOVERNMENT'S PRIVATE CHARITY

The administration in its "partnership" plan gives, and gives, and gives, and the people get nothing in return. First, it was offshore oil lands, then TVA, then natural gas. Now, any river or forest that big business wants, it can have for the asking.

The President wanted and got a Federal water storage project on the upper Colorado River. Since no big business wanted it, the President's partnership plan was forgotten. And Idaho Power Co. wanted to build a private power project at Hells Canyon, so the administration opposed the public-sponsored Hells Canyon project. The administration opposed the idea of municipalities in New York State having priority purchase rights to the electric power which would issue from the Niagara River power development program.

The development of atomic energy for peace is an idea that the Democratic Party sponsors wholeheartedly. But we voted against the administration's atoms-for-peace program since it would have given a few big businesses a monopoly in the development of atomic energy for peacetime use.

Incidentally, Attorney General Brownell now has completely disavowed the Dixon-Yates contract and has accepted the view of the Democratic Party that the whole agreement was illegal.

It took New Deal reclamation programs to give us back our forests. It has taken less than 4 years of an Eisenhower administration to lose them. The administration's policy is to lease them to private industry—which flagrantly abuses them.

We have no right to expect anything else of the Department of the Interior under this administration. Its consistent policy is to put political appointees in the place of ardent careermen. It has been no accident that many of these political appointees have been anticonservationists. There is no necessity for commenting on the scandals that have evolved over the private uses that many of these appointees have made of the assets of the Department.

FEDERAL AND POSTAL EMPLOYEES

Anyone aware of the importance of all Federal and particularly the postal employees can see no reason why they should not have many of the rights that are accorded to workers in private industry.

We have, over the objection of the administration, raised their wages, to enable them to meet the rising costs of living. This, while the President kept clamoring for increased pay for those already in the highest brackets. We have also liberalized the civil-service retirement benefits.

We have not yet devised any method to stop administrative destruction of the merit system.

Nor have we been able to abolish the brazen gag order that Republican Postmaster General Summerfield has imposed on postal workers. He has forbidden them to complain about the post office to anyone but their superiors in the post office. Members of Congress and the press have become off limits to these employees. We must now write into the law permission for these employees to complain to their Congressmen without impairing their merit standing.

The Supreme Court's decision, limiting the scope of the security program to those areas of government which can be defined as sensitive, would seem to have eliminated the problem created by the unwarranted administrative security clearance procedures. The administration is now sponsoring a bill which would classify all Government positions as "sensitive." The recommendations of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York, which fundamentally agree with the decision of the Supreme Court, should be followed in this regard. No American wants subversives in our Government. We can and must provide adequate means for protecting the Government's best interests. But we must do it without needless duplication of effort and without destroying our fundamental principles of fair play and of good government.

VETERANS AND ARMED FORCES

Neither the veterans nor the Armed Forces have been forgotten by the 84th Congress. Aware of our debt, we, the Democratic Party, sponsored and supported measures to better their lot.

The veteran home-loan program has been extended, as have been the disability benefits for the veterans of World Wars I and II. Neither forgetting the youth of our Nation nor those who were their fathers, we are providing educational assistance to children of servicemen who died in World War II and in Korea. We have extended the Missing Persons Act authorizing continued pay for service personnel missing or captured in Korea.

To maintain a strong Armed Forces, we have extended the draft law to 1957. To provide greater incentive for career personnel—a necessary essential in our defense program—we have placed all military personnel under our social-security program, and have increased the benefit payments to survivors of servicemen and veterans. We have also provided for medical care for the dependents of members of our Armed Forces. We have raised the pay of our 6-month trainees under the Reserve program as well as the pay of the Armed Forces in order to attract and keep better men in the service.

SOCIAL LEGISLATION—THE UNBALANCED SCALE

Social legislation is not a partisan matter to the Democratic Party. The welfare of the Nation is more important than party politics. We, of the Democratic Party, were happy to note that much of the welfare legislation of the administration was an extension of New and Fair Deal plans. These acts and others of a similar nature were supported wholeheartedly by the Democrats.

Over the administration's protests we succeeded in amending the Social Security Act by lowering the retirement age for women to 62 and permitting the disabled to become eligible for full benefits at the age of 50. Democratically supported and New Deal initiated, and administration sponsored, the benefits under the Railroad Retirement Act and the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act were increased.

National Disaster Insurance for the victims of flood and hurricane disasters was established.

We have extended the Federal school milk program to include child care centers, nursery schools, settlement houses, summer camps and other similar nonprofit associations.

I sponsored a Federal Scholarship Act. Worthy students who desire a college education or postgraduate work would be enabled to apply for these loans to aid them through school. This is no giveaway, since the students will repay these loans when their education has been completed. Such a program has been found feasible in prior years. It should never have been abandoned.

We have also authorized $378 million in Federal aid for school construction, in areas which have become overcrowded by increased governmental activity.

Little need be said of the failure of the school-aid bill. Due to a shameful coalition of a minority of the members of my own party and of a majority of the Republicans, this much-needed bill was defeated.

In matters of national health and medical research we went beyond what the administration requested. The Oveta Hobby attitude, of health being a strictly private affair, did not reoccur during this session. Ninety million dollars have been set aside for medical research of crippling and killing diseases, for extended hospital construction and for training nurses and health specialists. Four million dollars have been set aside for a Dental Research Institute.

The housing bill authorizes a public housing program of only 35,000 units a year for 2 years. The Democratic majority in the House felt that this was an unrealistic attempt to remedy the housing shortage. Administrative opposition proved too strong and we were compelled to settle for less than is needed. We did succeed in liberalizing the terms of Federal mortgages; for financing home improvements, for financing single-family home purchases, and for financing rental dwellings. We also liberalized, not enough, but somewhat, the Federal mortgage terms for elderly people and for urban renewal projects.

The administration sponsored a civil rights bill which was quite innocuous. It provided for things which the President now has the right to accomplish without any new laws. Once again a self-interested coalition of a few Democrats and a great many Republicans thwarted this measure. That action will no doubt be President Eisenhower's excuse to do nothing about the matter.

We did not enact the health insurance program of the President since it would have done nothing except help some insurance companies. It would have done nothing for the individuals who need medical and hospital assistance or insurance to pay therefor.

Throughout this program, the unbalanced scale continued to dominate the administration's thinking. No matter who sponsored the legislation, the Democratic Party approach was: If it was for the benefit of the people as a whole, we supported the bill. This cannot be said of the Republican Party. Their narrow interests and petty insights have not yet revealed to them the importance of the broadest approach for the benefit of the greatest number.

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS—PERILOUS PATHS

Under our system of government, the President must assume the leadership in the realm of international affairs. He must make the policy in the first instance. His State Department should be his spokesman. Congress may respond by approving appropriations or by senatorial action on proposed treaties.

The path of peace is always difficult. The Democratic Party believes it can only be maintained by an unequivocal but honorable approach to foreign affairs. To find a permanent peace, we must be vigilant and alert, honest with ourselves and with our allies, and firm with our potential enemies.

The ideological conflict between the East and West continues. The Communist countries have changed their outward demands, but they have not changed their aims of world domination. This administration has made no attempt to move forward in this field. It has mumbled and fumbled, it has bluffed and been rebuffed, it has bleated and retreated.

The Democratic Party has supported President Eisenhower in his attempts to find a road to peace. We have supported his foreign-aid program authorizing $3.9 billion to be used for military, economic, and technical assistance to our friends and allies during the next year. Although the President asked for more, his aides have admitted that they cannot spend in the next year the funds now appropriated for those purposes.

The removal of United States troops from Japan is imminent and will permit her, as our ally, to regain her true place in the world of nations. The House passed a resolution asking that Japan be admitted to the United Nations.

I have been continually opposed to the Near East policies of President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles. Their blindness, if not stupidity, has helped raise Egypt's Nasser to a position in which he threatens the peace of the world.

Our demand for arms for Israel have been ignored. Instead of firmly insisting upon a cessation of hostility, Dulles has encouraged Arab fighting. We demanded that Dulles and Eisenhower protest against blocking the Suez Canal to Israeli and Greek ships. My question is still unanswered: "What will the United States do when American ships are barred?"

The anti-Semitic boycott by the Arab States has been approved by a delinquent administration. It has excluded American soldiers and American civilian employees of the Jewish faith from American bases in Saudi Arabia.

PROTECTING THE INTEGRITY OF UNITED STATES CITIZENSHIP

From the very earliest days of the establishment of our Nation, we have insisted that American citizens, wherever they may be and wherever they may go, must be treated as such regardless of race, color, or religion. We have a long history of having come to the aid of American citizens wherever their rights have been threatened, impaired, or impeded.

This administration has sadly failed the American people and has repeatedly and constantly backed away from that fundamental principle of American freedom.

The protection of the integrity of United States citizenship and of the proper rights of United States citizens to lawful trade and travel and other activities abroad is a basic principle of United States sovereignty. It is a primary principle of our Nation that there shall be no distinction among United States citizens based upon individual religious affiliations.

Any attempt by foreign nations to create such distinction among our citizens in the granting of personal or commercial access, or any other rights otherwise available to United States citizens, is inconsistent with and contrary to our principles. Any such distinctions directed against United States citizens are incompatible with the relations that should exist among friendly nations.

We should insist that in all negotiations between the United States and any foreign state, that every reasonable effort should be made to maintain these principles. We should carry on no negotiations and engage in no conventions, agreements, or treaties with any foreign nation that does not recognize these principles or violates them.

These principles have been so firmly imbedded in our tradition that up to 1952, no political party found it necessary to restate them in a political platform.

In 1952, however, the Republicans inserted these words in their platform, to wit:

> We shall see to it that no treaty or agreement with other countries deprives our citizens of the rights guaranteed them by the Federal Constitution.

That should have been a warning signal. We had no such treaties or agreements then and have none now. No prior administration, Republican or Democratic, ever permitted the rights of American citizens to be impaired by any foreign country.

This administration, however, has permitted the Arab States to disregard, ignore, and even trample upon the rights of American citizens in travel and trade. They prohibit Americans from traveling into, through, or over these nations because of religion. On the same basis they refuse to allow Americans to trade with their own citizens.

This administration has ignominiously permitted a foreign nation to violate a treaty obligation and acquiesced in that country, Saudi Arabia, banning American citizens from an American base on the sole ground of religion.

CIVIL DEFENSE

To aid our civilian defense program Congress has increased the appropriation for construction of aircraft control and warning systems.

Testimony adduced before congressional committees established that our so-called civilian defense is utterly worthless and completely valueless in the event of an atomic bomb attack. Every penny presently being spent by the so-called Department of Civilian Defense is wasted.

Nevertheless, this administration would do nothing to improve this horrible and horrifying situation.

CONCLUSION

The record of the 84th Congress speaks well for our country. It could have been better. I am sure it would have been better, if we had had a Democratic President.

The levelheaded approach of a Democratic Congress under a Republican President produced meritorious legislation. We did not enact all the legislation that should have been passed. What was accomplished, in the main, is a record that the Democratic Party can be proud of. Even though we worked under an unsympathetic administration, the national interest was our first thought at all times. I am proud to have had the privilege to serve in the responsible 84th Congress.

During the ensuing recess I will continue to serve my constituency. My office at room 1305, New House Office Building, Washington, D. C., will remain open and fully staffed for that purpose.

Fogarty Reports on 10 Years of Progress in Medical Research

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN E. FOGARTY

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Speaker, during hectic but vitally important weeks which precede the closing of a session of Congress, rarely does a busy legislator find an opportunity to express his appreciation of those who have aided him in the achievement of his objectives, either through support within the legislative Chamber, or by way of encouraging support by the people—which, after all, is the essence of successful relations between a legislator and his constituents.

In the session of Congress which has just concluded, I have been accorded heart-warming support of both kinds. For this I am deeply grateful, not so much for me as an individual, but more because of the programs which I have been privileged to propose and carry through to constructive and affirmative action.

I want the RECORD to affirm my appreciation for that support.

I wish it were possible for each American to observe and come to understand the inner workings of his Government.

He would find, for the most part, industrious, well-educated, and generally enlightened men and women dedicated to their tasks—men and women whose primary motivation is to assess and then endeavor honestly to reflect the will of the people and to act always in their best interests.

For a Congressman, this responsibility and obligation has a special meaning. Each of us, of course, represents his immediate constituents—those who by their majority action at the polls in his district have expressed their confidence in his ability to represent them at the national level. In addition, each of us represents the people of the United States as a whole. The essence of our democratic government rests on the ability of the elected members to discharge their trust with wisdom and integrity.

Moreover, each of us—particularly those of us who have served our country for many years—assumes responsibility for specific segments of the legislative process. This is not only a matter of seniority, it is also a matter of interest and preference. Those who have earned key positions on important committees of Congress are thus able to and are expected to provide leadership in that committee's area of responsibility.

With the support of my constituents, who have returned me to Congress for consecutive terms beginning back in 1940, and because of my own interest, I have devoted special attention to the activities of the Federal Government in the field of health and welfare. For 10 years I have been a member and for 6 years chairman of that committee in the House of Representatives which has responsibility for the programs and activities of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. The primary concern of my committee is appropriations. It is our job to insure that adequate funds are provided for the important work of this Department, and that there is no waste or extravagance or useless expenditure.

Anyone who has planned a budget of any kind—household, business, civic group, or whatever—knows that one quickly gets involved in assessing relative needs and priorities. This is true, too, for a committee of your Government. Thus in order to handle the work of the committee with integrity, I have had to study health programs at the national, State, and local level. It has been a rewarding experience.

One of these programs is medical research. During the 10 years I have been on the committee, and particularly while I have been chairman, there has been sustained growth in our Nation's medical research effort. I am pleased to say that this strengthening process has been the result of private and voluntary action as well as Government action. But the Government has had a large role, as it should, and it has been my privilege to be in a position to work on the congressional side of your Government's activities in this field.

On June 27, when final consideration was being given this year's medical research appropriations on the floor of the House of Representatives several of my colleagues took occasion to speak of the support which the rank and file of the American people had given to this cause and of the leadership I had been able to provide in order to assure that the wishes of the people were reflected in legislative action.

I, of course, appreciated the compliment. But mostly I appreciated the realization that I had fought long and hard and successfully for something urgently desired by every person in the United States: ultimate victory over heart disease, cancer, mental illness, and the rest of the tragic diseases that cause most of the 1½ million deaths in our country each year.

In this same discussion on the floor of the House, many of my colleagues, Democrat and Republican, were kind enough to stress that I had for years given leadership in the House to a course of action which has had a major impact on the national research attack on disease. They pointed out that I had spent a great deal of time over the years learning to understand the intricate problems involved in more and better research, assuring a continuing supply of research manpower, developing new medical research facilities, and doing all of the other things required for the Federal Government to play an appropriate, helpful, nonregimenting role, including making available the necessary funds.

The remarks of my colleagues on this particular occasion were a tribute I shall never forget. They know that strong support of medical research had immediate, practical values. They also know that in taking action on the many bills and measures before us, the best Congressmen always strive for what is best for the Nation and for our individual and collective constituents.

In the 10 years since 1946, more progress has been made against disease in the United States than in any other period in our history.

This is a fact of which we may all be proud. For advances in medical science and public health are not to the exclusive credit of any individual. True, great names are usually associated with great medical discoveries. But, increasingly, medical science has become a part of, instead of standing apart from, our society. And if there is to be a cure for rheumatoid arthritis or a preventive measure for high blood pressure or an effective treatment for leukemia—and, sooner or later, there surely will be—the triumph will be attributed not to an individual scientist, or to a team of scientists, but to all of us who helped create a productive and creative medical research environment from which such progress can surely be expected.

Let me cite some of the health gains that have been made and others certain to come.

It is difficult to believe, but the average child born today is expected to live 5 years longer than his brother born a decade ago. It is difficult to believe, but true, that just yesterday death came twice as often as it does now from such diseases as pneumonia, influenza, tuberculosis, and syphilis. Once commonplace killers, these disorders have been tamed by a wide spectrum of antibiotics, a major development in medical science during the past decade. Appropriations for research which I succeeded in getting Congress to approve have played a vital role in winning these victories.

Not only has death been stayed by modern medical research, but crippling and pain have been reduced as well. Many arthritics have arisen from their beds and wheelchairs because of the benefits of two drugs that were developed just 2 years ago. Those who might have been blind, but can still see, may do so because of the benefits of cortisone and ACTH. These were developed about 9 years ago. While we do not yet know the exact benefits of the recently introduced drugs for the relief of mental illness, it is a fact that very large numbers of the mentally disturbed have been able to leave the confines of barred sanatorium rooms to rejoin their families at home. This is great progress, heart-warming progress.

Today, we have a method for preventing kernicterus, a disorder of infancy which previously resulted in cerebral palsy, mental retardation or death in about 2,000 children yearly. Tax dollars voted by my committee in Congress made the work possible. The recent trials of a diagnostic test for cancer of the cervix, deadly to many women each year, show that such tests if applied on a mass scale can catch this cancer early enough to reduce mortality to almost zero.

There has been encouraging progress against heart disease—a term which includes "heart attacks," hardening of the arteries, high blood pressure, heart and blood vessel defects children are born with, and damage to the heart valve resulting from rheumatic fever. In terms of death, heart disease is the greatest burden of all. Over 50 percent of all deaths in the United States each year are caused by it.

What has happened in the past ten years? We in Congress determined, at the people's request, to start a realistic, large-scale attack on heart disease. As a member of this committee I helped in establishing the National Heart Institute in 1948 and have since done everything possible to induce Congress to support it to the hilt. The work made possible by Federal dollars, and the private support that has grown up parallel to the Federal program, has begun to turn the tide—and in the near future we may well see the number of untimely heart deaths and the amount of suffering from cardiac disabilities dramatically reduced.

In every aspect of the gains over heart disease, the funds provided by Congress have meant the difference between little being done and an intensive attack. Before we in Congress determined, knowing what people wanted, to get resources mobilized, heart disease was almost like an untilled field or an inlet or bay that had never yielded its catch to the fisherman's net.

This, of course, was true in other disease conditions. And I shall be eternally, humbly, glad that I have been privileged to serve in Congress at a time when I could lead the support for these medical research and public health activities on the scale that they should and must have if our children and kin and friends and neighbors are to have the way opened for better health and longer, happier, more productive lives.

I have enumerated only a few of the medical triumphs of the past decade. There have been many more. Words cannot describe what they mean and will mean—to the father, mother, son, daughter, grandparents, to all the members of a family—when one or another of them sees his loved one helped or saved when suffering from such conditions as heart disease, tuberculosis, cancer, mental illness, diabetes or neurological disorders.

This is not to say that the end is in sight. Actually, it is only a good beginning. True, physicians are saving people who a few years ago could not be saved. But—as all of us know—there are still vast gaps in our knowledge, many afflictions which remain unconquered. Everybody agrees that the fight must go on—that this is a thing we cannot afford to stop. And I shall continue, in the future as in the past, with the support of the people of my district of Rhode Island, to provide leadership in the conquest of disease.

I shall be privileged and proud to continue this fight against disease as long as I live.

A Report to Constituents of Accomplishments of the 84th Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. CHARLES C. DIGGS, JR.

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. DIGGS. Mr. Speaker, the 84th Congress has come to an end and I think it an obligation on my part to give to the people of Michigan, whom I represent, a brief account of what Congress has done on legislation and a report on other matters of particular significance to the welfare of the 13th Congressional District of Michigan.

With few exceptions, an enviable demonstration of party responsibility by Democrats has exploded Republican predictions of 1954 that a Republican President could not expect the proper kind of cooperation with the legislative branch of our Government in the hands of those of opposite political faith. As the legislative record shows, while some Republican Members of Congress laid aside partisanship for the welfare of the people, the major credit for the successes of the 84th Congress lies with Democratic Members who cooperated with the White House over opposition by its own party to give it its estimated record of 57 percent of the 37 pieces of major legislation requested. In addition, a Democratic-controlled Congress went on to make substantial achievements in the interest of a people's program.

These accomplishments include a $1 minimum-wage law; a postal pay increase of 7 percent; a Federal pay increase for all workers of 7.5 percent—all pushed through by Democratic leadership with increases larger than the President recommended.

Democrats sponsored a farm measure providing for a return to 90 percent farm price supports, but Presidential veto forced a compromise measure lowering the range to between 75 to 90 percent of parity.

In foreign policy, over Republican opposition, a Democratic-controlled Congress gave the President the 3-year extension of authority to negotiate trade agreements which he had requested. Foreign aid appropriations were less than the President requested in each of his four annual budgets, but it was Democratic leadership in both Houses which fought against and prevented further cuts in the program than were made by Republican opposition. In exemplary cooperation, however, in 1955 the defense of Formosa and the Pescadores Islands was authorized by Congress.

A social security measure establishing a new program of benefits for totally and permanently disabled workers, beginning at age 50, and reducing the age of eligibility for women from 65 to 62 was passed under Democratic House and Senate leadership.

In 1955, Congress passed a public housing bill for 35,000 units and in the closing days of this session, a multi-billion-dollar housing bill extending the Veterans' Administration home-loan program, providing $3 billion of mortgage insurance, insuring 5-year loans to finance repairs instead of the maximum 3-year loans, insuring long-term mortgage loans for disaster relief, authorizing 70,000 units of public housing for 2 years, increasing the slum-clearance program mortgage loans, extending the military housing program, and providing mortgages for housing for elderly persons.

Democrats, principally from the North, were defeated in efforts to overcome the alliance between Republicans and Democrats from gas-producing States to exempt natural-gas producers from Federal regulations. A White House veto, in disfavor of pressures by lobbyists, saved the public—temporarily, if administration programing is successful in the next Congress—from unwarranted increases in gas bills.

Congress in 1955 and 1956 extended corporate and excise tax rates, but Democratic efforts to win a reduction in individual tax rates were defeated in both instances.

On the credit side of the congressional record, health measures were passed providing for $90 million in grants to build medical research facilities; to extend the Hill-Burton Act hospital construction program for 2 years; and to continue the polio vaccine program. A highway program calling for more than $30 billion in Federal-State funds for 13 years was authorized. To conserve national resources, a $760 million irrigation and reclamation project was authorized for the upper Colorado River area. An Armed Forces pay increase and a military Reserve program was established.

On the debit side of congressional action were matters of extreme importance to the welfare of our Nation. With many of my colleagues, I am extremely disappointed that the 84th Congress was not able to achieve action to revise and amend the discriminatory and arbitrary McCarran-Walter Immigration Act of 1950 and to liberalize the Refugee Relief Act of 1953. I regret that the House-passed bill to increase rates and liberalize pensions for veterans died in the Senate and that an antilabor coalition of Republicans and Dixiecrats discouraged consideration of revisions to the Taft-Hartley Act in its restriction of the labor movement.

It is a particular blot on the record of the 84th Congress that the same coalition of Republicans, opposed to a Federal-aid program, and Dixiecrats of the South, with defiance of Supreme Court decisions its aim, combined to defeat the school construction program.

With civil rights the major issue in our national and international life, the passage of a bill by the House to protect the right to vote of Negro citizens was an historic achievement. However, despite the predictions of death of the bill by Senate filibuster, the responsibility for cutting off opportunity of the liberal bloc of Congress to fight for enactment of this legislation rests with the administration which withheld its recommendation until late in the 2d session of Congress and delayed its request to Senate leadership for action on the bill until it was certain that adjournment was imminent. Another alliance between Republicans and Dixiecrats defeated the passage of bills to grant statehood to Hawaii and Alaska to spread the blot on the record of the 84th Congress on matters of human rights.

These are but some of the legislative actions which concerned the people of Michigan and our Nation. There were numerous other important issues to come before Congress, but mention of them could only be handled in a voluminous report. Those I have mentioned are principally the issues which concerned the greatest number of people.

I do not think this summary of congressional action would be complete without inclusion of a résumé of my own record of activity and accomplishment as Representative in Congress of the 13th District of Michigan. The following report is therefore included:

THE RECORD OF CHARLES C. DIGGS, JR., DURING THE 84TH CONGRESS, 1953–56

Voting record: Has won the approval of labor, veterans, and nationality organizations. Has been consistent in support of the Diggs platform of 1954, the interests of the people of Michigan and the Nation and consistently with the vote of the liberal bloc in Congress.

Legislation: Introduced a total of 25 public bills, covering the areas of civil liberties, immigration, Government employees' salaries, minimum wage, veterans' benefits, and civil rights, among others, and a total of 17 private bills pertaining to immigration cases of hardship, separation of families, and loss of scientific talents to the United States.

CONGRESSIONAL OFFICE ACTION

Housing: Supported all legislation to extend the public housing program and increase housing units; established continuing contact with the Housing and Home Finance Agency to keep informed of housing administrative policies and their application to needs and to communicate needs, problems, and interests of various groups, as Corktown Home Owners Association, Oakdale Residents Cooperative Housing, Inc., and the Detroit Real Estate Brokers Association. Petitioned the Detroit Real Estate Board to open its membership to minority group brokers as a means of helping to resolve problems in this area. Through Washington and Detroit offices, have processed hundreds of cases to assist constituents and other persons in obtaining low-cost rental facilities—private or public—and to obtain home financing.

Civil liberties: Supported and initiated action to achieve revision of military security regulations. Investigated and pressed 4 separate security risk cases, 3 involving servicemen and 1 a Government employee—all successfully concluded by retention in service. Investigated individual cases of discrimination involving applicants for Federal employment, employees, armed service personnel, veterans, and cases of discrimination concerning public-service facilities. Investigated and reported to CAA discriminatory practices by airports participating, contrary to law, in building programs involving Federal funds. Made an on-the-spot investigation of civil rights violations in Mississippi and Alabama. Investigated discrimination against Negroes and Jews in rentals of downtown Detroit office buildings; assisted Michigan Credit Union, Ford Rouge and Flint Buick Credit Unions in presenting complaints to Health, Education, and Welfare Department concerning alleged abusive tactics of the Federal Bureau.

Immigration: Introduced legislation to amend and revise McCarran-Walter Act; petitioned Senate Foreign Affairs Committee for revision and liberalization of Refugee Relief Act; interceded with Department of State and Immigration Department in cases not involving private bills, including assistance to servicemen in approval of visas for alien wives.

Aged and youthful: Cosponsor of Townsend pay-as-you-go social-security program; supported and voted for legislation to extend social-security benefits; introduced legislation to permit 18-year-olds the right to vote.

Interior affairs: Served as a member of the House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee; Public Lands, Irrigation and Reclamation, Territories and Insular Affairs, and Indian Affairs Subcommittees. Consistently in support by action and vote of legislation to conserve natural resources and legislation to compensate Indians for lands and for adequate health, education, and social-security programs. Maintained close contact with executive director of the National Congress of American Indians to determine Indian views on legislation pending and desired. Investigated alleged abuses in awarding of school lunch programs for Cherokee Indian children. Supported such public power programs as upper Colorado River and Hells Canyon projects.

Veterans: Served as a member of the House Veterans' Affairs Committee; the Administration and the Compensation and Pension Subcommittees. Voted consistently for improvements in veterans' welfare; protested closing of VA medical service in Grand Rapids; investigated firing of ten veterans at Ordnance Tank Automotive Command; interceded to obtain sanitary and standard facilities for mentally ill at Battle Creek Hospital; requested Post Office and Justice Department intervention concerning the use of mails by debt-collecting agencies to deceive veterans; investigated cases of discrimination against veterans in administration of GI benefit and loan programs; made visits to VA hospitals to determine needs; periodically contacted all Michigan veterans' organizations for recommendations regarding needs and to offer service of congressional office in their interest; was the author of Public Law 92 to extend for 2 years time for disabled veterans to apply for down payment on automobiles—other conveyances.

Action of interest to Detroiters and the Nation: Urged United Nations and Senate and House Foreign Affairs Committee to protest Cyprus action by British and to offer American aid in resolution of problems and American support of the principle of self-government; joined with 86 Democratic colleagues in joint declaration requesting arms for Israel—urged Congress, White House, State Department, Senate and House Foreign Affairs Committees to take action. Protested Department of Agriculture increase of income eligibility scale in Michigan for participation in the surplus-food-distribution plan; joined in requesting aid for Detroit in unemployment situation and made contact with the Department of Labor, Defense Department, General Services Administration, and United States Atomic Energy Commission in this behalf. Associated with Governor Williams in asking for increase in unemployment-compensation and welfare benefits to aid in problem. Joined with colleagues in asking Department of Agriculture for special allotment for Detroit's school milk program; interceded with Civil Aeronautics Board for reconsideration of Wayne University's petition for charter flight service in connection with its travel-study program. Requested commemorative stamps, on behalf of interested citizens, to honor Dr. Albert Einstein, Dr. Mary McLeod Bethune, and Walter White. Of nominations to the three service academies, had four successful candidates—Thomas J. Jozwiak, 1427 Burlingame Street, Detroit, Air Force Academy, class of 1955; Roland M. Navarro, 2019 Clairmount Street, Detroit, Military Academy, class of 1956; Thomas G. Curtis, 1450 Brainard Street, Detroit, Naval Academy, class of 1956; and George D. O'Brien, Jr., son of former Congressman George D. O'Brien, 757 Covington Drive, Detroit, Naval Academy, class of 1956. Sought and obtained 13th District representation at the 1955 White House Conference on Education; made known support of and offered cooperation concerning promotion of the St. Lawrence Seaway project, port of Detroit project, and adequate airport facilities in the Greater Detroit community.

Presenting to Congress for inclusion in CONGRESSIONAL RECORD resolutions, articles, and other materials representing the viewpoint of organizations in Detroit and Michigan on major issues—the Federation of Hellenic Societies, Inc., of Detroit, the Jewish Daily News, the Jewish Community Council of Detroit, the Detroit Common Council, among a few. Aid to district travel agencies in tracing and obtaining action on passports—also to numerous individuals. Assisting constituents in expediting foreign documents through the State Department; in tracing and speeding up Government payments. Furnishing Government publications, maps, and other literature to public libraries, schools, constituents, and students. Presenting American creed certificates to district high-school graduates in effort to emphasize good citizenship; obtaining research information for constituents, schools, and organizations; furnishing information to interested families concerning the adoption of war orphans; obtaining flags flown over the Capitol for interested organizations; placing orders for reprints of CONGRESSIONAL RECORD remarks for interested constituents; periodic contact with Detroit and Highland Park governmental bodies and officials to make the service of the congressional office available in matters within jurisdiction.

Cases: Through congressional offices in Washington and Detroit, assistance has been given to hundreds of citizens in problems of wide variety. Cases have concerned such matters as—welfare aid, social security, old-age pensions, aid to blind and handicapped and dependent children; housing and home financing; referrals of unemployed to Government and private sources of employment; obtaining information for school students on scholastic requirements for designated careers; checking civil-service status, promotion possibilities, investigation of reasons for terminations, requesting reinstatements, verifying career status, intervening in cases of unjustified discharge, requesting reviews of appeals for Government employees; assisting in expediting claims for compensation for injury while Government-employed and action on retirement fund payments; furnishing letters of recommendation for placement with public institutions; assistance in obtaining birth records—foreign and domestic; assistance in investigating scholarship opportunities for students; referrals of families for counseling service and to legal aid and other agencies for court representation; providing legal counsel through staff attorney, Basil W. Brown, on civil matters; assistance to servicemen in applications for morale leave, hardship discharge, compassionate reassignment; in establishing validity of applications for allotment to dependents; investigating service promotion opportunities, requesting foreign service duty; investigation and appeals of courts-martial, general discharge, dishonorable discharge, and revocation of commissions; aid to veterans in cases concerning disability compensation, processing claims for change in disability ratings, appealing adverse decisions; making applications for loans under GI loan program and for pension and benefits. Assistance to widows of veterans in determining eligibility for pension benefits; assistance to prisoners in petitioning for transfer, emergency visits home in family death or illness, investigation of parole possibility, of discrimination and adequacy of medical care; and referral of cases to proper agencies for legal counsel and representation in cases apparently meriting such intervention.

These, and other activities and concerns of your Representative in Congress including the attendance of well over 200 conferences and meetings, community programs and receptions in Detroit and Washington to promote and forward the interests of my district, people of Detroit and Michigan, and interests of the Nation and speaking engagements before a variety of groups in Ohio, Texas, Alabama, Mississippi, Florida, Indiana, Virginia, Maryland, Massachusetts, New York, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Georgia, Tennessee, South Carolina, California, are matters which have made it a welcomed opportunity and the highest privilege to serve in this office in the 84th Congress.

At the spring convention of the Michigan Democratic Convention, over which I presided, I was selected as one of the two people from Michigan to serve on the platform committee of the Democratic National Convention. I was happy for the opportunity to serve as a vehicle to reflect the desires of various segments of the 13th Congressional District in that position and as a delegate to the Democratic National Convention.

I will continue diligently to work for great accomplishments in the interest of promoting the welfare of all people.

Stimulate American Construction: More Home Building, More Home Ownership, Keys to United States Prosperity

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ALEXANDER WILEY
OF WISCONSIN
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, a key foundation of the free enterprise system is America's great construction industry.

There are few other industries which more crucially affect the well-being of the American people as a whole.

It is understandable therefore why the Nation follows so closely current construction reports on residential, industrial, and commercial installations.

Recently, we have noted with disappointment the estimate that only perhaps 1.1 million new homes may be begun this year. That relatively small number is a source of concern to all of us who are deeply interested in assuring a completely prospering economy. We had hoped to reach and surpass last year's 1.3 million figure of new home starts.

I ask unanimous consent that in the final edition of the RECORD, there be published a statement by me on the overall problem.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR WILEY

"A Nation of homeowners," is the American ideal.

Already, fortunately, 55 percent of our people own their own homes. That percentage is constantly climbing.

We want still more Americans to "strike roots," so to speak, in their own homesteads. And we want them to enjoy ever finer, ever more modern, relatively fireproof, and comfortable homes.

WISCONSIN—A HOMEOWNING STATE

Wisconsin, in particular, has always prided itself in its high proportion of homeownership.

Last year, 21,283 new nonfarm homes were started in my State. Thus, we ranked 13th among the 48 States in home-building volume.

We of Wisconsin not only like our homes, we are constantly improving our homes.

Figures cited by A. A. Lenroot, Jr., our State FHA director in Milwaukee, show that Wisconsin homeowners spend a bigger percentage of their income on housing than do homeowners elsewhere in the Nation. Thus, in 1955, Wisconsin FHA homeowners spent 25.7 percent of their incomes on housing which included principal, interest, taxes, insurance, maintenance costs, and regular operating expenses.

Our attractive, well-kept homes are an asset to our communities. They are, moreover, as any realtor will point out, a priceless asset to the individual family as well.

HOME BUILDING—AN INDUSTRY OF SMALL-BUSINESS MEN

All in all, our home-building industry is of course a mainstay of our Wisconsin prosperity. I have been glad to be in constant touch with it. Earlier this year, Mr. Lowell E. Garretson, executive secretary of the Wisconsin Builders Association, pointed out to me that "the average home builders in Wisconsin—in fact, a majority, build less than seven homes a year. The number of home builders that build more than 50 homes a year is very small."

In other words, our home builders are small-business men and are certainly entitled to every bit of encouragement we can give them.

Lately, the lot of small business has not been an easy one.

To be of help to them, I am delighted that, at the very minimum, we of the Congress have wisely extended the GI home-loan law for another year until July 25, 1958. Under the extension, an ex-GI can apply right up to July 25, 1958. He is allowed even an additional year in which to complete loan arrangements and sign the final papers.

I had personally introduced legislation for extension of this GI home-loan law, just as I have been pleased down through the years to offer many other prohousing bills, as recommended by builders, realtors, contractors, and other experts in this field.

MONEY FOR FINANCING STILL TIGHT

Unfortunately, today, the mortgage money situation in Wisconsin remains tight. For example, mortgage lending by the Nation's savings and loan associations during the first half of 1956 showed a 7 percent drop below the like period in 1955, the United States Savings and Loan League reports.

Our savings and loan associations remain nonetheless a bulwark of our prosperity, along with other lending institutions.

This year, our savings and loan associations have celebrated their 125th year of business in our country, and their 80th year in my own State. The assets of 154 savings and loan associations in Wisconsin at the end of 1955 totaled more than $980 million. Members totaled approximately 500,000. This is a tremendous jump over the figures of previous years.

Throughout the postwar period, savings and loan associations financed throughout the Nation the building of 2.3 million new homes. They helped 9.7 million families buy homes through the issuance of about 40 percent of all home loans made. They recorded an increase in the number of savings accounts from 7.4 million in 1946 to 18.7 million last year.

These savings and loan associations are, therefore, a tremendously valuable contribution to home financing, along with other sources of sound credit.

LETTER FROM MR. JOE M. BAKER

As important to the financing of homes is, of course, the solid construction of homes.

From time to time, I am pleased to receive from various expert sources within the construction industry comments as regards improved and safer methods of construction.

I was pleased recently to hear from Mr. Joe M. Baker, executive secretary of the National Bureau of Lathing and Plastering. I believe that his comments will be of interest, and I should like to reprint excerpts from his letter at this point.

NATIONAL BUREAU FOR LATHING AND PLASTERING, INC.,
311 Tower Building, 1401 K Street NW.,
Washington, D. C., July 25, 1956.

(Edmond F. Venzie, president; John E. Rooney, vice president; Lloyd A. Mashburn, vice president; Robert L. Maidt, secretary-treasurer; Loyd G. Peterson, executive board; Joseph D. McNulty, executive board; Joe M. Baker, executive director.)

Hon. ALEX WILEY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Much has been said about elimination of slums and also fire prevention to save the lives of our women and children which are lost in home fires. To begin with, it is our opinion that "slums for tomorrow" are being constructed faster today than we can demolish the slums of yesterday and this is brought about by the minimum specifications recommended by our Government agencies.

First, let us look into the loss of life by fires. It is estimated that 6,180 men, women, and children lose their lives in home fires during the year. Many of these lives could be saved if our Government agencies would lead the way in promoting construction of firesafe materials instead of looking at the initial cost and calling it economy to build homes with imitation materials which later on result in the loss of lives.

This happened recently in a large development project in which three small children lost their lives. We are advised that this home was constructed of material which will not retain a fire in 1 room more than 30 minutes. Furthermore, homes of this type of construction are being built in many areas today and they are what we refer to as "slums for tomorrow."

If an impartial survey were made today, anyone would soon realize that such homes will not stand up for 20 to 30 years—the period of time on which the Government guarantees the mortgage thereon. Is this economy?

Isn't it about time that our Senators and Congressmen looked into these minimum specifications and insisted on better grades of materials being used on homes guaranteed by the Government, especially when it means protecting our middle-income-bracket buyers who are purchasing these homes on long-term mortgages?

The minimum specification of the Government permits interior finishes to be one-fourth inch, three-eighths inch, and one-half inch thick, which is not firesafe, nor does it furnish any privacy to a family. If genuine lath and plaster is used, it would carry from 45 minutes to an hour and a half fire rating, according to the type of material used. Lath and plaster construction would result in a wall thickness of seven-eighths inch, which in addition to being firesafe, would also create privacy due to the sound absorption.

Very little is saved when imitation materials are used in place of the genuine product. In fact, the average home can be completely plastered for as little as $100 to $150 additional, and many a life may be saved. Why not prevent fires by building homes, schools, and commercial buildings as nearly fireproof as possible?

Let's prevent fires by planting the seed that will insure homes being built of firesafe materials and at the same time save the precious lives of our loved ones.

We have a number of files in our office to substantiate our statements and would certainly appreciate your lending your influence in having our Government agencies set a standard for the minimum requirements that would not only protect our loved ones from being destroyed by needless fires in homes but also to protect them economically.

Sincerely yours,

JOE M. BAKER,
Executive Director.

HOME OUTLOOK IS BRIGHT

Fortunately the overall future is quite bright for United States housing.

The omnibus housing law of 1956 should prove a fine "shot in the arm." It continues and liberalizes FHA title I home repairs, extends to existing homes under FHA section 203 the same loan-to-value ratios as for new dwellings, and provides for FHA assistance for housing for elderly people (an important subject which I have previously discussed in the Senate).

ROAD PROGRAMS WILL SPUR HOUSING

I am glad to state, too, in addition, that the Nation's new Federal-State superhighway program should open up vast areas for new developments. Thirty-three billion dollars will be spent on the 40,000-mile Interstate System and on related programs during the next 13 years. This will mean that we can expect bulldozers to be clearing the land for new homes in areas which were once off the beaten track, but which will now be easily linked by fast new superhighways.

CONCLUSION

I pledge in the period up ahead continued constructive contacts with the Housing and Home Finance Agency, the Department of Commerce, and with national, State, and local trade associations in the housing field, so as to increase to a peak the prosperity of the great construction and related industries.

Report to the Constituents of the First District of Florida

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF

HON. WILLIAM C. CRAMER

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 27, 1956

Mr. CRAMER. Mr. Speaker, as the 84th Congress adjourns, I believe it is appropriate and purposeful to make this report to my constituents, the people, estimated at 600,000, of the First District of Florida, summarizing some of the activities of this Congress and my actions thereon.

PURPOSE OF THIS REPORT

I have always believed that an informed and alert citizenry is the cornerstone of our republican form of government. I further feel that my constituents are entitled to know what is being done in their interest by their Representative in Washington. Thus, I have attempted, during my first term in Congress, to advise the folks at home and, as far as possible, to be advised by them. To implement this, I have made biweekly television and radio broadcasts; sent out newsletters; instituted district-wide telephone polls on important issues arising suddenly and on which, otherwise, there is no means of determining the wishes of the people at home; and have taken annual tours, with my "office on wheels" and staff in accompaniment, of every city, village, and settlement in Pinellas, Hillsborough, Pasco, and Hernando Counties that comprise the First District of Florida. Incidentally, these activities in the main were not at Government expense although they could probably be classified as proper governmental activities. This report is made consistent with my belief that the people have the right to know.

My actions this session have been based on what I believe to be the best interests of all the people of my district, and services have been rendered on a fair and impartial basis, regardless of political affiliation, personal motivation, or any other consideration. All views, majority and minority, as well as individual, have been given careful consideration and careful and thorough attention has been paid to the issues involved, while maintaining an awareness of the effect of my actions on the district, State, and Nation. This is representative government in action.

SERVICE TO CONSTITUENTS

One of the more important and personal functions of the congressional office is to be of service to the many constituents your Congressman represents. This includes action for individuals with many small problems, as well as the representation of larger groups and organizations. For example, in your Washington office, we have handled during the last 2 sessions of Congress over 375 veterans' cases, dozens and dozens of applications for passports, have forwarded hundreds of Government documents, and have met several thousand visitors in the Nation's Capitol.

ATTENDANCE

As your Representative in Congress, I have deemed it a privilege to be on the job and attend to the many problems of legislation which is presented. In the 2 sessions of the 84th Congress in which 133 quorum calls were made I was absent on only 3 occasions, and in the 148 roll-calls I was absent on only 4 occasions, a total attendance record of 97.5 percent of which I am very proud. Incidentally, all occasions on which I was absent from the floor were necessitated by duties attended in the First District.

DISTRICT

At all times since being elected to this Congress, I have for your convenience maintained a district office. This office has been staffed and is completely prepared to meet constituents and to gain a first-hand knowledge of their problems. Many times, through the operation of the district office, I have been better prepared to represent my constituents in the Nation's Capital. There has been at hand at all times a staff that is prepared and understanding of the problems facing various individuals and, further, a staff that is able at first hand to completely report all activities of your congressional office through the press, radio, and television to all people of the district so that they might be informed. In addition, I have made dozens of reports to groups following the first session and plan to do so again following this second session of Congress, attempting to bring the Government closer to the people.

WASHINGTON VISITS

One of the greatest pleasures that I have had in the Nation's Capital has been to greet the many visitors, families, school patrols, class groups, high school organizations, and others who have come to see and learn about their Government. It has been a pleasure in many instances to renew old friendships and in others to make the acquaintance and assist in visits and tours of new friends. The opportunity to visit the Nation's Capital and at first hand see the many agencies and departments of Government in action is one which should be afforded every American. Consistent with this, I shall urge that this be done, particularly by young people who will grow up to be the great men and women of tomorrow.

COMMITTEE WORK

One of the most important functions of your Representative is to consider legislation referred to committees on which he serves. I was fortunate in being appointed to the Public Works Committee and the Rivers and Harbors, Flood Control and Roads Subcommittees thereof early in the session. This committee is vital to Florida because of our many harbor, erosion, river, flood control, drainage, beach erosion, and public building problems. Upon the death of the former chairman, Chauncey Reed, of the powerful Judiciary Committee, I was unanimously appointed to the vacancy created and served also on the Claims Subcommittee. My district was highly honored by this appointment not only because this is one of the major and most sought after committees but because I was the first Floridian ever appointed to it. This committee considers immigration, claims, court, States rights, and other matters, including over 50 percent of all the legislation introduced.

HONORS RECEIVED

As the first Republican Representative elected from Florida I, and in turn my district, received many honors. I was chosen to represent all freshmen members of my party in the 84th Congress as speaker at the Board of Trade dinner in Washington upon the convening of Congress and shared the platform with Senator Strom Thurmond, of South Carolina. Thus the South gained unprecedented recognition in both parties on this occasion. By House resolution, I was unanimously chosen to read Washington's Farewell Address before the House on Washington's Birthday. Being appointed to the campaign committee and the committee on committees representing Florida and the district, I was privileged to have an effective voice in committee appointments and party policies.

The Chowder and Marching Organization chose me a member as one of two freshmen Congressmen selected and the insight into legislative procedure and issues gained from this association with experienced Members of the House, Senate, and executive branch proved invaluable. Many sections of the country, including New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, North Carolina, Virginia, Nebraska, and West Virginia are now better acquainted with Florida and the First District as the result of the many invitations to visit and speak which I received. The Georgetown Forum of the Air invited myself and Senator BIBLE of Utah to appear on its nationwide weekly program and many other local programs invited me as their guest. Thus the people of the district were represented in many areas before many groups and many mediums.

LEGISLATION INTRODUCED

Perhaps one of the best keys to the aggressiveness and effectiveness of a Member of Congress is the bills and amendments to bills he introduces and the action taken on the subject matter contained in them. Of course, as a minority Member of the House, it is usually necessary to join with others on the majority side in order to accomplish the objective sought, and an analysis of the bills which I introduced and the action taken on the subject matter contained in them is important.

MATTERS OF PARTICULAR LOCAL INTEREST

First. I introduced two immigration bills and one was passed permitting a young Spanish girl who had been living in Tampa for years to be adopted by those who had grown to love her.

Second. A bill to convey 16 acres of surplus Government property adjoining Bay Pines to the Pinellas County School Board. This served the purpose of keeping the land from being sold to private interests until it could be conveyed under existing law. This was 16 acres in addition to the adjoining 10 acres conveyed on my request, the Pinellas school system having thus received some 26 acres valued at $62,000 at no cost.

Third. Bills to serve veterans' interests were pushed, including one to establish a national veterans' cemetery in the First District, which is under study and survey resulting from introducing the bill, and one introduced after Veterans' Administration surveys made at my request were completed showing that a need exists to add 1,000 general medical and surgical beds to the overcrowded Bay Pines Veterans' Hospital on which hearings before the Veterans' Affairs Committee are being planned during adjournment—this is in addition to the proposal to build a 1,000-bed neuropsychiatric hospital at Gainesville—and one to continue the GI home loan program which was continued as the result of interest shown by many of us who introduced bills and constantly sought the support of committee members.

Fourth. A bill to determine the feasibility of making a National Spanish-American War Memorial and Shrine out of Fort De Soto on Mullet Key in Tampa Bay and Pinellas County is presently under study by the United States Park Service and a report on the bill will be available for early action next session.

Fifth. A bill to provide for the location of a National Institute for the Physically Handicapped in Hernando County to serve the State and Nation, as well as the First District, is receiving attention of General Services Administration and Health, Education, and Welfare Department after numerous conferences in Washington and in Brooksville, and there seems to be an excellent chance for accomplishing this objective on a negotiated basis.

Sixth. A bill to make greater Federal protection to eroding beaches and shores available to local governing units in the protection of public beaches and other public property was considered by my Public Works Committee and a bill similar to mine which contained the principle of protecting all public property that might be subject to eroding action even though it does not actually abut on the water was enacted by the Congress. This should mean that the Pinellas County beach-erosion project will, for example, have a better chance of getting under way.

Seventh. A bill to expedite the immigration of skilled sponge divers to help the rehabilitation of the Tarpon Springs sponge industry, which had as its purpose the permitting of skilled divers, when need is shown and income is guaranteed, to be brought in under existing law, but without having to wait for 18 months to 2 years for entry, has received favorable Immigration Subcommittee action and was scheduled for passage, but other Members of the delegation in the House and on the Senate side were unwilling to act on the bill without further study. Thus, action awaits next session, after full investigation of the merits of the bill.

Eighth. A bill for preliminary survey of Gulfport Harbor and Sunshine Skyway Channel was passed as a part of the omnibus rivers and harbors bill. This bill was vetoed by the President because so many pork-barrel projects were included that were not justified. A new bill will be acted on next session.

MATTERS OF NATIONAL SIGNIFICANCE

First. The greatest public works program in the history of the world was first acted upon by my Roads Subcommittee and the full Public Works Committee and then the entire Congress this session. I sat in on and was a part of these hearings and debates, both in 1955 and 1956. Many weeks of hard work and diligent effort went into this $47 billion program, $33 billion Federal and $14 billion State funds, that will see the completion of the 41,000-mile interstate program and acceleration of all other systems in order to accommodate the anticipated 86 million cars to be on the roads in the next 10 years. It was an inspiration to me to be a part of this monumental work, probably the most important new legislative action of the 84th Congress, and to have contributed something to making it a good program. I introduced a bill early in the second session to make Federal-road funds available for the purchase of rights-of-way up to 5 years in advance of construction which, when applied to the entire program, it is estimated could save as much as $1.5 billion. This is a new concept in roadbuilding with Federal funds and means substantial savings to Florida, too, because more roads can be built with less money if right-of-way can be purchased substantially before actual construction is programed. It also makes possible long-range planning. This new concept was unanimously accepted by the subcommittee and the full committee on my motion as a part of the new 1956 road bill and is now the law. Many other amendments which I proposed, in an effort to enact the best possible bill, were accepted.

ON PENSION, SOCIAL SECURITY, AND RETIREMENT

Second. A civil-service retirement bill was introduced which increased pensions to those who retire in the future as well as those on retirement and improved the retirement system. A similar bill was passed which will mean greater job security to all postal and Federal employees but, despite the efforts of many, the provisions were not made applicable to those already retired. There was, of course, a pension increase, as an interim approach, passed in 1955 for which I worked assiduously. This session Spanish War widows' pensions were increased, along with a 10-percent increase for retired railroad employees, and about an 8-percent increase in postal employees' salaries. Thus, those on retirement and those to retire in the future received my active efforts and attention.

I pressed for the social-security amendments providing retirement of women at 62, disability retirement at 50, greater coverage and children's benefits.

Third. Again as a member of the Public Works Committee when the water pollution bill was up for consideration, I was able to get the committee to unanimously accept my amendment to make Federal grant funds, which had already been approved by the committee, available for use for advanced planning and engineering for sewage disposal plants to be done by the local governing authorities. Although the House unanimously accepted this amendment on the floor the actual designation of 10 percent of the funds to be used for this purpose was deleted in conference although the advance planning and engineering was retained in the definition of "construction" so such funds as the Surgeon General might decide are merited can still be used for this purpose as the result of my amendment. This is important in the many communities that are planning new or expanded sewage disposal plants.

Fourth. I introduced a bill to eliminate the 5-percent absorption clause in the Federally Impacted Area School Act which provided previously for Federal contribution in areas affected by Government installations of Federal funds—such as to the school system of Hillsborough County serving MacDill Air Force Base—only when up to 5 percent of total county enrollment was attributable to the Air Force installation. Hillsborough was 4.9 percent impacted under this formula and it was necessary to have the unreasonable formula waived to entitle the county to some $100,000 in Federal funds. This was done in 1955 and again in 1956 when the efforts of many of us resulted in the elimination of the 5-percent absorption feature altogether, and at the same time the base figure for determining the contributions was changed to benefit Hillsborough another $46,000. This is an example of little-known or publicized services which a member of Congress is expected to render.

Fifth. A bill to modernize and make more effective the commercial and conservation fish and wildlife services of the Federal Government was introduced by me and a number of other Congressmen and a compromise bill was enacted. With the commercial industry worth over $10 million per year to Florida, and the sports fishing industry being of more than 10 times that value, this creation of an Assistant Secretary for Fish and Wildlife in the Department of Interior and a deputy for commercial and one for conservation interests will mean much to Florida.

Sixth. A bill to provide an additional Federal district judge for the southern district of Florida was cleared informally by the Judiciary Committee of the House and was to be offered as a committee amendment to the omnibus judgeship bill. This bill was not reported out by the Rules Committee for obvious political reasons until after the presidential election.

Seventh. I introduced and pushed before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee a bill to provide Federal funds for airport terminal construction. A similar bill was enacted and both Pinellas and Hillsborough International Airports have received nearly a total of $500,000 for terminal construction under this legislation.

OTHER LEGISLATIVE ACTION

Of course, I appeared before many congressional committees presenting petitions submitted by constituents and groups in the district and in an effort to secure favorable committee action on matters of importance to the district and the Nation. There were too many such appearances to enumerate here but statements made are contained in the records of the committee hearings.

In addition, numerous conferences were held with the executive branch of the Government on such problems as the rehabilitation of the sponge industry—a research program resulted of which $26,000 has been allocated and $20,000 still programed—the cigar industry and the reduction of tariffs on tobacco leaf importation needed to offset reduction in Cuban cigars, the establishment of the National Institute for the Rehabilitation of the Handicapped in Hernando County—add to these other conferences. Numerous arguments on the floor of the House were made in the interest of good legislation.

ON THE LOCAL SCENE

As your Representative, most particular interest was paid the demands and needs of the First District. Florida being threatened with the invasion of the Mediterranean fruitfly called for immediate Federal assistance in combating this dread peril to our citrus growers. I am proud of the cooperation given me and the rest of the Florida delegation by the Department of Agriculture and the appropriation of some $5 million in emergency matching funds. The Department also has proved outstanding in research against the spreading decline, which is also a threat to Florida citrus production. The Post Office Department has seen the need for expanded facilities in a great and growing State, and new post offices are either under way or are being planned for St. Petersburg, Tampa, Dade City, Mango, Safety Harbor, Palma Ceia, West Tampa, New Port Richey, and Ybor City. I was proud to be of assistance in obtaining Federal aid for mosquito-control measures—assisting a low-cost housing project for Plant City—working with the Ybor City Redevelopment Committee in establishing a Latin center—to receive authorization for reserve armories in Tampa and St. Petersburg—achieve establishment of an Air Reserve Squadron at Pinellas International Airport of over $2,500,000—and, perhaps, what is the greatest single development feature of the west coast in many years to have gotten under way and actually see development of the $11 million Tampa harbor improvement project.

This has been a year of great progress for the First District of Florida, and I feel that many benefits were received through the cooperation of local representatives, citizens' groups, and the hard work of many individuals. I am proud to offer this record as a proof of progress.
